Mr. TRAMMELL. I dislike very much to disagree with my colleague; but, as I understood my colleague's amendment, he sought to lift out of the class of officers at whom this amendment was directed only a favored class, and leave the others in the same situation in which they were theretofore.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the amendment I offered was to equalize the situation so as to take care of the lower-paid officers, relieving them from that limitation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I rather agree with my colleague in one respect. Most of the officers who were wounded were second lieutenants or captains. I do not think very many officers of higher rank were wounded in active duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. Anyhow, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested, if we disagree to the committee amendment we will accomplish the desired result.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is exactly what we voted on. If Senators want to take a long time in discussing this matter now, I merely wish to say that that is exactly what we voted on.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; we have not voted on that.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is exactly what it means. It will mean precisely what the amendment meant which was offered by the Senator from Florida and which has already been voted down, except that it would be a little broader. Not only would it take in officers who suffered from actual battle wounds, but it would take in officers who suffered from any other disability which arose in line of duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the committee amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am perfectly certain that | the Senate does not understand the issue here.

The amendment on which we are now voting will benefit those junior officers who were retired for real disability. The Senate somehow got the impression that it will benefit only some of them. It must benefit them all. A second lieutenant can not be retired for age. There are not any 64-year-old second lieutenants. All of the arguments about giving this to these men who retire for something other than disability incurred in line of duty can not apply to these junior officers. They have to be disabled in order to be retired. So to reject the committee amendment, as urged by the Senator from Florida, will directly benefit only those junior officers who are retired for real disability.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, what amendment are we about to vote on now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the committee amendment on page 58, beginning with line 5, to strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

Mr. DILL. If we agree to that amendment, then this provision does not apply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES. I desire to make a statement, Mr. President. We can not finish this bill to-night.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not?

Mr. JONES. For reasons which I do not care to state publicly, I think we ought to adjourn now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Adjourn or recess?

Mr. JONES. I have an engagement with the President to-morrow at 11 o'clock which I made two or three days ago. I think we want a morning hour and I think the Senate will be glad to adjourn until 11 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are within just an amendment or two of finishing the bill.

Mr. JONES. No; we can not finish the bill now when we want to get away. I can tell the Senator something about it privately.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a minor amendment?

Mr. JONES. I would rather let the minor amendment go until to-morrow. We can not finish the bill to-day.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. For what purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to offer an amendment and have it printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie upon the table.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

"INVESTIGATIONS PAY"

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Since I have been commended for withholding from the RECORD a matter that would have cost the Government some $900 for printing it, I ask to have read by the clerk a short editorial from the Washington Daily News entitled "Investigations Pay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Tuesday, June 7, 1932] INVESTIGATIONS PAY

Senate investigations pay. Hostile propagandists for several years have been trying to persuade the public that these investigations are not only unnecessary interference with business and with more-sinned-against-than-sinning citizens, but that they are also a great waste of Government money in a time calling for economy

A check on Treasury Department collections resulting directly from the Senate Nye committee disclosures—a by-product of the original oil scandals inquiry—shows that these investigations have been profitable financially as well as morally.

First, there was an estimated Government saving of three-fourths of a billion dollars in recapture of oil resources in the fourths of a billion dollars in recapture of oil resources in the Teapot Dome inquiry.

Now the Treasury has collected $3,669,784 from Henry M. Blackmer, self-exiled oil magnate, for evaded income taxes; $60,000 from Blackmer for contempt of court; $606,097 from Blackmer and the three other principals of the illusive Continental Trading Co. for corporation income taxes, and $1,398,910 from an unnamed individual not connected with Continental whose income was discovered in the course of the investigation. In addition the Government is about to collect approximately $1,250,000 of personal income taxes from Harry Sinclair, Robert W. Stewart, and the James O'Neil estate. O'Neil estate.

The cost to the taxpayers for this Continental investigation by the Nye committee was only $25,000.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the statement of the Senator from Washington, I think it is desirable to have a morning hour to-morrow; and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 8, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we beseech Thee to hear us as we approach the altar of prayer. Increase our faith in the illumination of Thy Holy Spirit and in the life of the soul given by the power of God. In this way we shall become superior to the circumstances and the influences which deteriorate life. Crown us with that persuading directing might that shall lead us in the ways of wisdom and justice. Enable us to stand in all things patriotically and do the things which all patriotic citizens should do. Go before us, our Father, and guide us with liberty of conscience. In the heated ways of public life, in the conflict of affairs, O let Thy brooding Spirit hang over us. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed concurrent resolutions and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 29. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the letter of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of May 12, 1932, in response to Senate Resolution 412, Seventy-first Congress, as a Senate document;

S. Con. Res. 30. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 41,000 additional copies of the revenue act of 1932;

S. 4667. An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1927, entitled "An act to permit the granting of Federal aid in respect of certain roads and bridges"; and

S. 4759. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Nebr.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 432. An act granting permission to Harold I. June to transfer to the Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy.

MEMORIAL PRESENTED TO THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement to the House. This morning, from 10.30 until 12 o'clock, there was a conference in the Speaker's office at which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the gentleman from New York [Mr. Snell], and myself received the representatives of the mayors of the leading cities of the United States. They presented a memorial to the Congress and the Chair asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the memorial at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read, as follows:

I. PREAMBLE

The world and the Nation are at war. The enemy is hunger. We have it on reliable authority that the extent of unemployment in the United States now equals that of all Europe combined—which means all the rest of the industrial world. This has precipitated an emergency unprecedented in modern times. has precipitated an emergency unprecedented in modern times. Such a situation calls for the prompt, vigorous, and intelligent measures which war always makes imperative.

We do not in any sense retreat from the position, fundamental in our democratic system, that in normal times municipal governments in our democratic system, that in normal times municipal governments must maintain themselves, perform their proper functions, and solve the social and economic problems incident to such normal activity. But these are not normal times. It is a crisis, imminent and terrifying. The long period during which unemployment has continued and increased has created conditions of suffering and need nothing less than appalling.

The cities of the Nation, large and small, have met these conditions with resourcefulness and courage. But all their resources of money and credit are nearing exhaustion. Relief must be found or nation-wide insolvency will result. Tax delinquencies have increased to an alarming extent. Our industrial cities are staggering under the burden of debts incurred as a result of the wast expansion of prosperous years. The interest and sinking charges on these obligations represent a wholly disproportionate burden at the present time, due to the greatly increased purchasing power of the dollar. Even those municipalities which have instituted the most rigid economies in operation are now in a precarious situation. Not only welfare relief, but essentially governmental services are now threatened, and the very foundations of our social order are imperiled.

In the face of this threat against human welfare and human life itself, measures must be employed as drastic as those of military authority in times of actual physical warfare.

The problem is now a national one. The Federal Government is the only agency that represents all the people and is able to deal adequately with the emergency. It has the unlimited credit of the Nation, and by intelligent planning it can provide for the human welfare and security of its citizens. The measures we are advocating are entirely consistent with a sound fiscal policy and need not in any way disturb our national credit or stability. Hence the Federal Government is the one remaining source to which we can turn in this emergency, and we do so with confidence that wise and adequate assistance will not be denied.

II. RECOMMENDATIONS

II. RECOMMENDATIONS

We, therefore, mayors, city managers, and representatives of 31 leading cities of the United States, called into conference at Detroit, Mich., June 1, 1932, after careful consideration of the facts set forth in this preamble, submit the following as a remedy, in whole or in part, for the critical conditions described:

1. We recommend that a $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan be made

1. We recommend that a $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan be made available immediately for national projects to effectuate the employment of millions of men, and in this manner to provide work for our jobless, redistribute purchasing power and thereby stimulate industry. We recommend that this be done by Congress declaring war, not figuratively but literally, against unemployment and depression; and that to this end a work-army be mobilized, as armies were mobilized in 1917–18, for work on national projects throughout the United States

2. We recommend the immediate enactment of such relief legislation as may be necessary to conserve the welfare of the American people during the present industrial depression.

3. We recommend an amendment to the congressional act incorporating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or such other corporating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or such other legislation as may be finally determined advisable, to permit such corporation to invest its assets in notes, debentures, bonds or other faith and credit obligations of cities for public welfare, to provide money for delinquent tax obligations and the refunding of bonds and obligations to release funds necessary to maintain the adequate and proper operation of municipal government.

4. We recommend that copies of these resolutions be presented to the President and the Congress of the United States and be made available to the press of the Nation.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. No. 30) providing for the printing of 41,000 copies of the revenue bill, and concur in the Senate concurrent resolution. There is an enormous demand for these copies. The type is all set, and we want to get the printing done at once.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 30

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 41,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 154, known as the revenue act of 1932, of which 13,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, 25,000 copies for the use of the House document room, 1,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the form of the resolution, it provides for the printing of this bill in bill form.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is for printing the tax act as approved by the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it not be advisable to have the bill printed in document form rather than bill form, in order to save expense?

Mr. BLANTON. That is what is going to be done.

Mr. STEVENSON. We are providing for printing the bill in the cheapest form, and the cost will be $1,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the resolution provides for printing it in document form, although the resolution does not so state, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

POST OFFICE INVESTIGATION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report, accompanying the resolution (H. Res. 226), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

The Committee on Rules having had under consideration House Resolution 226 reports the same to the House with an amendment striking out all of the preamble and following the period on line 15, page 3, insert "For such purposes the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned; to hold such hearings, to employ such experts, and such cierical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary, not exceeding $10,000," with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as so amended be adopted. The Committee on Rules having had under consideration House amended be adopted.

[H. Res. 226. In the House of Representatives, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

Mr. Sabath submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed.

Resolution

Whereas the deficit in the Post Office Department of late years has increased beyond all reason; and

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on the Post Office and Resolved, Time for the part of the Resolved, Time for the Post Office and Post Roads, as a whole or by committee, is authorized to investigate (1) if the contracts entered into for carrying mail, whether by air service, railroad, or steamship, are excessive and to what extent they should be reduced; (2) if the prices paid for land or sites acquired for post-office buildings in the last 10 years are reasonable or exorbitant and to ascertain the actual amounts paid for each site in excess of $10,000, and the names of those who reasonable or exorbitant and to ascertain the actual amounts paid for each site in excess of $10,000, and the names of those who have negotiated the purchases as well as the leases; (3) all contracts entered into for the construction of all post-office buildings wherever the cost of such buildings was in excess of $100,000 and to secure the names of all contractors; (4) to what extent collusive agreements have been sanctioned by the Treasury and Post Office Departments; (5) to what extent collusive agreements have been sanctioned by the Treasury and Post Office Departments; (5) to what extent collusive agreements, if existing, have affected Government work from financial, architectural, and engineering standpoints; (6) prices paid and contracts entered into for power, light, and heat and, in addition thereto, estimated cost for generating power, light, and heat in buildings now under construction and contemplated where plans have been drawn and where the cost of building is above $500,000; and (7) the first costs and the operating costs for generating power, light, and heat for all Government buildings.

The committee shall report the results of its investigations to the House with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

CLAIMS OF THE SEMINOLE INDIANS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5846) authorizing the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma to hear and determine certain claims of the Seminole Nation or Tribe of Indians, now on the Consent Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs for further consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Is this a bill that comes from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, it is on the House or Union Calendar first and then on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It would have to be on one of those calendars.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Christopherson] at Manassas on national prohibition.

Mr. DYER. I think it is useless to waste the Record on such things now, Mr. Speaker, and I object.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bank guaranty bill. I have been waiting for some statistics from the department which only arrived this morning.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, objection has just been made to the extension of remarks in the RECORD by one Member of Congress, something that never has been done before to my knowledge. If there is going to be objection to the extension of remarks of one Member, I am going to take the initiative and object to all requests for extension of remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. That was a wet objection to a dry extension.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] to extend his remarks in the RECORD, as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted I wish to extend my remarks by inserting a speech relating to national prohibition delivered by my colleague, Hon. C. A. CHRISTOPHERSON, on Monday evening, June 6, 1932, before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at Manassas, Va.

As Mr. Christopherson has membership on the Judiciary Committee, which has jurisdiction of the prohibition question, I feel that his analysis of the problem and his conclusions will be of interest.

The speech is as follows:

I am pleased to have the opportunity to be with you on this occasion and to discuss the all-important question now agitating the minds of the people—prohibition and the eighteenth amendment.

Frequent references to this question carry the inference that prohibition dates from the eighteenth amendment and that 12 years is ample time for trial by which to gage final results. Attempts to regulate the liquor traffic date back far beyond the days of our Nation's history. Four thousand years ago a Babylonian king sought to regulate and curtail the use of intoxicating liquors by his subjects, and ever since the earliest days of our Government intoxicating liquor has been a subject of legislation and regulation.

Why? Because it was early recognized as an element that

Why? Because it was early recognized as an element that deprived man of his normal senses, destroyed his efficiency and responsibility and generally brought about the decline of the people who indulged in liquor to excess, and invariably, even its moderate

So it is not strange that for ages efforts have been made to control this traffic and finally the attempt to completely outlaw the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in our land through the adoption of the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution. This amendment became a necessary step in the effort to control the liquor traffic and largely because of our dual form of government.

For many years the contest was carried forward by organizations such as yours. This included the dissemination of information as to the destructive elements of intoxicating beverages, the enactment of license laws, local option, and State prohibitory laws. The temperance and prohibition forces were making fine progress and no thought was given to a national prohibitory law until the courts so interpreted the interstate commerce clause of our Constitution as to override and set at naught State and local laws.

as to override and set at naught State and local laws.

The question of the respective rights and constitutional powers of State and Nation in the regulation of the liquor traffic came before the United States Supreme Court in 1847. This arose in what is known as the License Cases, and the question was whether the State license law would govern as to shipments of liquor in interstate commerce. The contention of the State was upheld, to the effect that a State could prohibit the importation and subsequent sale of intoxicating liquor where Congress had not expressly authorized such importation. The court laid down the doctrine in this case that Congress having falled to exercise the power it possessed in relation to transportation of this commodity in interstate commerce, the States in the exercise of their police power could prohibit the importation and sale of intoxicating

Had this decision been adhered to there would have been no eighteenth amendment, but courts have a habit of overruling prior decisions, and so on this momentous question. For in 1888, in Bowman v. Chicago, etc., the Supreme Court overruled the doctrine laid down in the License Cases and held void a statute of Iowa which prohibited the importation of liquor into the State. Two years later, in 1890, in Leisy v. Hardin, the same court went one step farther and held void a statute which prohibited the sale of liquor imported from another State.

These two decisions set at naught the State prohibitory laws and thenceforth prohibition became a national question which was frequently and violently agitated in Congress. And as one reflects on past events it is apparent that these two decisions thrust this vital problem of prohibition into the vortex of national affairs, vital problem of prohibition into the vortex of national affairs, and State control and regulation became of secondary importance. Had the License Case of 1847 been upheld each State under its police power would have had full authority to regulate this traffic in accordance with public sentiment within the State. It should be said that certain justices strongly dissented from the doctrine of the Bowman case in 1888. Justice Harlan in dissenting said, "It is inconceivable that the well-being of any State is at the mercy of the liquor manufacturers of other States."

for legislation to overcome the effect thereof. As a result, in August, 1890, there was enacted what is known as the Wilson law, which sought to subject all intoxicating liquor brought into a State to the laws of that State. This law was first upheld, but by a later decision its force was practically nullified. This further accentuated the difficulty of proper control of this traffic under our complex system of government, which led to further efforts for Federal control.

This finally resulted in the passage of the Webb-Kenyon law in 1913. This law prohibited the transportation of intoxicating liquor into a State in violation of the laws of that State. The bill was vetoed by the President because, in his opinion, it violated the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. It was repassed over the President's veto and finally upheld, but by a divided

Prior to this decision and because of the persistent resort by the liquor interests to the courts with constitutional objections to State regulatory laws, the prohibition organizations had come to the definite belief that the only solution of this vexatious question of the rights of State and Nation in reference to the control of this commodity was through an amendment to the Federal Constitution. To put into effect this conclusion an amendment was offered in Congress in December, 1913, only a few months after the passage of the Webb-Kenyon law. The amendment which finally became the now famous eighteenth was submitted by Congress in December, 1917, and ratified by the required number of States by January, 1919. Subsequently, the Volstead law for its enforcement was enacted by Congress.

We have now been under Federal prohibition for more than 12 years, and of late insistent agitation for the resubmission of this amendment has been current throughout the land. It is, therefore, fitting and proper—yes, prudent—for those who favor prohibition to take account of the present trend of public opinion, and I shall endeavor this evening to discuss the situation as I view it, both in and out of Congress.

with the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement act, many assumed the fight for prohibition was over; that it was a settled fact and in the future would take care of itself. Not so. In fact I believe we have a long course of real work before us in the way of an educational program for prohibition and law enforcement to bring the people to a realization of the necessity for every citizen to respect, obey, and observe the law of our land. That is essential, and this program must be carried forward by your and allied organizations which have borne the brunt of the battle in the days gone by.

In carrying forward this program, let us ever be alert to the present and look into the future with a discerning eye that we may anticipate and be ready to meet the new problems as they arise in connection with this question of intoxicating liquor. First let me say that prohibition is not a party question. It cuts squarely across both political parties, and therefore should be considered a national problem rather than political. Over many years of effort by you and others, we have the eighteenth amendment; it is part of the Constitution.

We also realize there is a very pronounced clamor for its repeal. Personally, I do not believe the amendment will be repealed—at least not until some one offers a better method of dealing with the problem. But are we, who are dry and who favor this constitutional provision, to take the position that this amendment is sacred, and shall not be subjected to either a repeal or amendment? No; to my mind that attitude on the part of the dry forces will simply stimulate a hostile sentiment toward our cause and hasten the day for its overthrow.

Let me analyze the status of this as I see it now and the out-With the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and the enday for its overthrow.

Let me analyze the status of this as I see it now and the outlook for the future. The vote in Congress in this session shows a majority for retention of the amendment, but also discloses an increase in the number of those who favor a repeal or modification. Therefore, the question which now directly presents itself to the prohibition leaders is, in view of present-day sentiment, what is the sane, sensible, and logical course to pursue?

to the prohibition leaders is, in view of present-day sentiment, what is the sane, sensible, and logical course to pursue?

The Constitution has definite provision for amending the same, hence it was assumed by those who prepared the document that, from time to time, changes therein would become necessary. These changes may be, by the addition of new subjects in amendments thereto, submitted and ratified as this eighteenth was, or may be by way of repeal or amendment of any part thereof, if submitted as the Constitution provides. In other words, we can not logically take the position that because the eighteenth has been ratified, it has a charmed status and can not be repealed or modified. Such a contention will only tend to alienate even friends of the prohibition cause. Nor should we assail the sincerity of purpose of those who seek to repeal or amend so long as they pursue the method laid down in the Constitution itself.

On first thought some will say, "Oppose to the last any submission for repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment," and for the time being this can be done successfully, but for how long? The two major political parties meet in convention in Chicago this month. In the party platforms they will make their declarations upon public questions and problems. They will speak upon the question of national prohibition. What will these declarations be? I can not say definitely, for I am not so close to those who will outline these party principles as to assume to say, but my belief is, based upon thoughts expressed by party leaders from time to time, that both platforms will contain planks to the effect that the people have the right to have the amendment in question resubmitted in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

This will be embellished with phrases having reference to law Constitution.

This will be embellished with phrases having reference to law enforcement, etc., but in it all will be a tacit promise that in response to popular demand, a resubmission is favored. True, I response to popular demand, a resubmission is favored. True, I may be in error in my prophecy, but I am basing my subsequent suggestions on that assumption of platform declarations.

What then will be our position in the Seventy-third Congress? Members of both House and Senate, elected on such platform pledges, will not be in the best position to resist a repeal resolution, for by so doing they will be subject to the criticism of voting against the party's declarations, as well as the one already leveled at those who vote against resubmission, viz, refusing to let the people pass upon this question again.

leveled at those who vote against resubmission, viz, refusing to let the people pass upon this question again.

In the light of this analysis it is clear that our position will not be as strong in the Seventy-third Congress as the present; and should the Members of the Seventy-third Congress hold out against resubmission, it is not a far stretch of the imagination to believe that the gain in the Seventy-fourth Congress would perhaps be enough to enable the resubmission forces to write a repeal amendment in the form they may wish. We should also remember that in the recent redistricting the larger cities were given an increase in membership, commencing with the Seventy-third Congress. This will add to the strength of the resubmission forces in the House.

There are two methods by which Congress can submit amend-forces in the House.

There are two methods by which Congress can submit amendments to the Constitution. One is by submission to the State legislative bodies and the other to State conventions, for ratification. The eighteenth amendment came via the legislative-body route and had a 7-year limitation. It is my belief that when the eighteenth amendment is resubmitted it should be in the same manner as originally submitted, viz, to the legislatures of the States and with the 7-year limitation for ratification.

It is also my firm conviction that when this is done it should be by the friends of the eighteenth amendment rather than by those who seek to destroy it. Therefore would it not be the part of wisdom for us to recognize the sentiment as it prevails, take charge and submit an amendment to the eighteenth amendment, referring it to the legislative bodies of the States for ratification, with the 7-year limitation, in the same manner in which it came to the Constitution?

As a suggestion, I would say that the amendment to the

As a suggestion, I would say that the amendment to As a suggestion, I would say that the amendment to the eighteenth should provide that any State may, by a two-thirds vote of each house of its legislature, refer to the voters of the State the question of whether intoxicating liquor shall be manufactured and sold within the borders of such State, after enactment of a State law regulating the manufacture and sale, which law shall include a provision making illegal the maintenance of the open sales.

If such an amendment to the eighteenth should be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, then and thereafter any State could by a two-thirds vote of its legislature submit the question to a referendum of the people of that State. Personally, I doubt if such an amendment would be ratified by 36 States if submitted to the legislatures of the States; but, if ratified, and the provisions of the Webb-Kenyon law are reenacted, dry territory will be protected from the States that permit the manufacture and sale of liquor within their borders. borders borders.

I realize there are many who sincerely believe that no approval should ever be given to the sale of intoxicants in any place; and if it could be forever banished, that would be the ideal situation. But we must not ignore facts which tell us that in States which have repealed their own enforcement statutes the Federal Government is utterly unable, with its limited force, to properly police those areas where no local cooperation is given.

Therefore, is it not possible that if the traffic were legalized in such States, under regulatory laws enacted by the people of those States, it would lead to a greater respect and regard for the law not only in such States but others as well?

The concurrent jurisdiction clause of the eighteenth amendment has not proven ideal. Some States have repealed all State enforcement statutes, thereby leaving the entire burden of enforcement upon the Federal Government. Other States are inclined to shift to the Federal Government the burden of enforcement, thereby saving the State the cost of prosecution.

It is easy to understand that the Federal Government can not undertake to build up a force sufficient to police the entire Nation. No; not even the large cities of our land. We must have State and local cooperation. The Federal Government should be Nation. No; not even the large cities of our land. We must have State and local cooperation. The Federal Government should be concerned chiefly with the importation, exportation, and transportation in interstate commerce of liquor; and State and local officers should do the policing; not the Federal Government.

I believe the plan suggested would help to bring local sentiment favorable to the Government. That is, if the proposed amendment were adopted; and if not ratified by 36 States in the 7-year period, then certainly the clamor for resubmission should cease and all agree that the eighteenth amendment is to remain a part of the Constitution, should be upheld, and observed by all citizens. In my humble opinion, the eighteenth amendment will be a bone of contention until it has been resubmisted; and let me repeat that the resubmission thereof should be by the friends of the cause rather than those who oppose prohibition in any form. Further, it should go to the State legislatures, being the route by which it found its way into the Constitution.

Now, my friends, in this expression of my views on the present status of national prohibition and the course of procedure which I believe would be sound and sensible under all the circum-status of national prohibition and the course of procedure which I believe would be sound and sensible under all the circumstances, I do not wish to be understood as having changed my position on the question of temperance and prohibition.

Intoxicating liquor has ever been a problem, a home-destroying blight, and because of its use mothers and children, unnumbered, have faced want and starvation. Let me quote from the com-mander of the Salvation Army, Evangeline Booth, whose knowl-edge of the liquor traffic was gained by personal contact with the wrecks upon life's highway caused by intoxication. She said: "War is not responsible for one-half the broken homes and shattered spirits that have been caused by alcoholism. With whatever false reasoning, the fact remains that with the inception of prohibition, nine-tenths of the drunkenness in this country (the United States) disappeared. You ask why I say it. I say it because I know it."

because I know it."

There is no sound argument against the move to outlaw intoxicating liquor as a beverage; but as to national prohibition, we have arrived at a crossroad, and it is necessary that the friends of the cause consider the facts as they are and do some serious and straight thinking as to the proper course to pursue.

The thoughts I have expressed to you to-night are my personal views upon this controversial question. It is my hope that such action may be taken as will bring about a more united support for prohibition, encourage temperance, and thereby promote in-dustry, frugality, and the happiness that comes to a sober and law-abiding people.

BANK GUARANTY BILL

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] to extend his remarks in the RECORD, as indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for the bank guaranty bill as already amended here in the House. I should have voted for it without amendment. But, even in my short experience here, I have learned that not only as a theory but as a hard-headed fact most bills involving new applications of ideas, even of old ideas, are greatly improved by the free, open discussion which they receive here on the floor of this House. And they are further benefited by the consideration and still freer discussion to which they are subjected in the Senate.

The two branches of Congress serve a splendid purpose. It is not at all likely that this bill will get through the Senate in its present form. It is practically certain that it will come back to this House in an amended form. But it is most vitally important that the idea contained in this bill shall be given full consideration, shall be threshed out and applied. It is for this reason that I take great pleasure in sending it on its way by my vote.

But in doing this, I should not be doing my full duty if I did not present my own ideas in justification of my vote.

Our whole monetary system rests entirely upon the power and authority granted to Congress by the Constitution. Congress has the full power, right, and duty to form, direct, and control our whole monetary system in the interest of all the people. We have no right to work for or to permit any special group to use or profit by that system except as that use and profit may be incidental to the service of the people.

The national system of banking only exists properly by authority of law which Congress enacts. This banking system is the most convenient and satisfactory way we have so far discovered of justifying the extension of credit to individuals, to business, to industry, even to government itself, though I sincerely question the necessity or wisdom of this latter function.

No association of individuals can properly exercise the many privileges granted to banks under the law without complying in spirit and letter with the law. These banking laws are all written around the idea that the whole banking system is the servant of the people as a whole. Profit in banking must be and remain incidental to this service.

Wherefore it is necessary often to check over the accomplishments and the services of banking to protect and strengthen these in the interest of the people as well as in the interest of the banks. At the same time it is equally necessary that we search as diligently to find the mistakes and abuses of banking and bankers, that these may be corrected and the people protected in future against these shortcomings. Let us understand fully that our banking system as a whole is the key to our entire industrial system. It is not a part of it, as other business is. It must be the servant of all other business, not the controller nor director of it. The control of our monetary system must be and remain in the hands of the Government. The banking system is only the agency which Government sets up for administering the monetary system. It must, therefore, be also and remain no less under control and direction of the General Government. Profit is necessary, but is necessarily incidental to the profit that shall come to the whole people through our banks.

It is for these reasons that the individual bank is primarily a trustee licensed by the Government for handling the money belonging to individuals who make up the Government. All banks making up the banking system therefore become the general trustees of all the people's money, whose money taken together is and must be considered a national matter. Money and the credit based upon it are the life blood of all industry, the servant of all labor, the keystone of our capitalistic system. The establishment and maintenance of the stream of credits flowing evenly through our banks is the absolute vital necessity to the carrying on of the whole system of producing wealth. Without that unmolested credit stream there can neither be successful business nor successful banking.

What I mean by the credit system is this: On May 1 all our banks together contained $884,000,000 in cash. The deposits subject to check in those same banks on the same day were $18,500,000,000. As is perfectly clear, if checks were issued all on the same day demanding payment of all deposits in cash, our banks would pay less than 5 per cent of the amount of the deposits. Nevertheless, where checks are issued and redeposited continuously, together with the cash flowing along in regular business channels in an unbroken stream, every check in due course would be paid in full in cash. The system is entirely safe and sound if the credit stream is not seriously disturbed.

But as is perfectly evident, the credit stream was broken in the stock panic of 1929 and has not only not been reestablished but has been constantly disintegrating, and its great power for service being continually dissipated. The first practical general step for restoration of industry is the reestablishment of the national credit stream.

Success in banking does not depend on the capital invested in the bank by its stockholders at all. No bank could pay its overhead expense out of the returns on its capital investment, much less a profit to the shareholders. The entire profits of all commercial banks depend on the interest derived from reloaning the money belonging to the depositors. It therefore follows that without depositors no profit could be made by any bank. That is exactly what is the matter with our banks and with our credit stream.

From October 24, 1929, to May 1, 1932, there have been 4,341 bank failures in the United States. With 1 bank out of every 4 failing all over the United States, is there any wonder that people should take their money out of banks or that they are afraid to put their money into banks? Some millions of our people have lost or had their money tied up in these failures. The result has been that the banks still left have lost many billions in deposits. If through the losses of these millions of depositors, the rest of the people have suffered to a sufficient extent to justify guaranteeing against such loss in the future then there should be no hesitancy in giving that guaranty.

A review of events will indicate very clearly that withdrawal of deposits is a progressive paralysis. The stock debacle was a cyclone that tore securities into shreds. Its result, disastrous in the extreme to security prices, was primarily much less destructive to bank deposits in themselves. But as the loss to the banks on the stocks and bonds which the small banks had been induced or compelled to buy became known it was clear that many would be endangered unless some new means could be provided to tide them over. The big banks, whose affiliates had unloaded these stocks and bonds on the smaller banks, made no move to protect their victims. If the bank deposits could have been maintained, most of the banks would have successfully weathered the storm. But since nothing stood between the depositor and the loss of his money except the largely depreciated bonds he very naturally began withdrawing his deposits. A run on a bank, whether occurring in a day or running over a year, is ultimately fatal. When one bank fails all banks are suspected. When many banks fail the security of all the rest is at once brought into question. If when the first bank had failed following the stock panic, the depositors had been promptly paid in full, withdrawal of deposits would have ceased.

There could only have been one ill effect: The few really weak, incompetently and dishonestly managed banks would have collapsed. If the depositors in these banks had been promptly paid in full, there would have been no further withdrawals. By retaining their deposits the banks of the country would have found it easy to go on furnishing the credit necessary to carry on the legitimate business of the country. If at the same time the Federal reserve system had announced that it stood ready to supply the banks of the country with the currency necessary to restore any credit losses which the business of the country had sustained, the prices of the bonds of legitimate concerns would have reacted and the robberies perpetrated by the big banks and their affiliates would gradually have been absorbed by the country and the severity of this depression would have been largely alleviated.

This is a case in which the old saying that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure is especially applicable. Because there was no guaranty provided beforehand we have the following condition: Total bank failures from October 31, 1929, to May 1, 1932, were 4,341, divided as follows: National banks, 691; State banks members of Federal reserve, 162; State banks not members of Federal reserve, 3,488.

The total deposits in the failed banks was $2,929,000,000. This was divided up as follows: National banks, $708,000,000; State member banks, $535,000,000; State nonmember banks, $1.685,000,000.

The losses to the banks themselves that failed was:

 Paid capital, surplus, and undivided profits

 National banks
 $82,592,000

 State member banks
 70,324,000

 State nonmember banks

Total _____ 367, 592, 000

The actual loss when final settlement is made is figured at about 50 cents on the dollar, or a total net loss to depositors of a billion and a half dollars.

Large as this loss is, it is only a drop in the bucket as compared with the losses to which these bank failures con-

The losses through property values, through unemployment, through deterioration from nonuse in mines, factories, mercantile establishments, banks, and farms is not less than $200,000,000,000. Guaranty of bank deposits and the proper use of the powers of the Federal reserve system would have saved all but the shameful stock robberies which the Government permitted.

The sins of the New York stock market were permitted to be passed on to the American Nation. The American Nation must take the proper steps to prevent a recurrence of this terrible national destruction before property values can be made permanent. Two of the laws necessary to restore prosperity have already passed this House—the emergency currency law known as the Glass-Steagall bill and the Goldsborough bill. This bank guaranty bill is a third one, part and parcel of the other two. The Glass-Steagall bill, being only for one year's duration, will have to be made permanent. In that process the automatic feature as I originally wrote in the original bill from which the Glass-Steagall bill was taken should be made the law, instead of hamstringing the idea by turning it over to the tender mercies of the present reactionary Federal reserve system.

The objections against this bill as so far presented on this floor are principally objections to any change. Just why present conditions should be continued nobody seems to know. Still less does anyone attempt to say why these conditions should be permitted to repeat themselves. Yet it is perfectly clear that unless something is done to prevent it, these conditions will come back to curse us hereafter. We ought to get and hold this clearly in mind. The same arguments against change were presented against the Federal reserve law.

One objection oft repeated is that a bank guaranty law would give an advantage to the incompetent or dishonorable banker over the competent and strictly honorable banker. If this were true, it would have little to do with the case, because the bankers are not the ones principally interested. The security of the money of all the people is paramount and is a national responsibility. But this bill raises the requirements in relation to all these things and will help to eliminate the incompetent and dishonest bankers.

It is universally admitted that something ought to be done to protect depositors. Some of my colleagues seem to think that the depositors themselves ought to insure their bank deposits "as they do their homes." The difficulties in the way of such a process with the constantly varying amounts and conditions of deposits, quite outside the time and expense, makes this entirely impractical if that were the only or principal question involved. But it is not. The difference is fundamental. If a house burns down the community as a whole is not greatly affected and adjoining communities not at all. But if a bank fails, the banks in all the surrounding territory and every business and every individual depositor in those banks is endangered. It affects the credit stream; and if we are to understand the import of our monetary system, we must understand the necessity of establishing and maintaining the credit stream at a constant, even flow. Our national prosperity, our ability to carry on our business on a national scale, depends on that very credit stream, and we must prevent in every way any disturbance of it. But let us make a direct illustration of the insurance idea: Bill Jones steps into an honest banker's bank with a thousand dollars to place on deposit. The enterprising cashier says, "Do you want to insure your deposit, Bill?" Bill asks, "Against what?" "Oh, ah, well, a—against incompetency and a—a—dishonesty." Now, Bill knows that the bank is insured against robbers; that the cashier and all who handle money are bonded in favor of the bank itself against loss. Bill also knows that the bank has large deposits of United States Government, State, county, and school money, and he knows the bank has given security to the United States Government, because the law requires security of deposits for the State, the county, and the schools. Whether they require security or not, their claims are preferred claims. All these deposits take preference over Bill's deposit, and if the bank should break all would have to be paid in full before Bill would get a penny. And Bill Jones knows that is not fair, but the bank whose cashier should offer to write an insurance policy for Bill Jones would not get far. But the banks can not do otherwise than they are now doing until we understand the banks are trustees of the Nation's credit,

The cheapest insurance in the world would have been the guaranty of bank deposits, even if $2,000,000,000 had been required, when this panic came on. Very little of it would ever have been used, deposits would have remained, and business would have survived the shock and revived in the natural course of business. And we must certainly do this very thing-insure, guarantee, make secure every depositor against loss in bank deposits. The United States Government is the only agency that can do this, and it is the duty of the Government to do it.

The objections to this bill as presented on this floor are, in my opinion, not tenable. These objections consist principally of the following:

The good conservative banker—the successful banker—should not be compelled to carry the burdens of the incompetent or dishonest banker.

The palpable answer to that is that banks are the agents for carrying out the law in relation to our monetary system in the interest of all the people; that it is not a competitive business into which all may enter without reputation, ability, or honor: that certain requirements are already demanded; that both incompetency and dishonesty must in so far as possible be eliminated, and that the much more stringent requirements set out in this bill will greatly reduce if not eliminate the incompetent and dishonest banker.

The second answer to this objection is the unanswerable fact that when a national debacle takes place there is no such man as a successful banker. The 4,400 bank failures since the stock crash in October, 1929, do not by any means indicate that number were all or any considerable part incompetent, dishonest, or unsuccessful bankers. Nine out of ten of the officers who ran these banks that failed were as competent, honest, and successful bankers as those whose banks were saved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It was and is a disgrace that the very great majority of these 4.341 banks were not also saved.

Through that corporation the failure of a still larger number of banks was prevented. In short, the Government guaranteed the banks still remaining. No banker objected to that. This Steagall bill offers to guarantee the depositors, and who should object to that? The guaranteeing of banks was a national duty, and the guaranty of bank depositors is equally a national duty, because security to the whole monetary system is the primary duty of government. The credit stream can not be reestablished nor maintained unless the National Government guarantees the stability of the banks and the safety of the deposits in those banks. It is a community interest in which the whole American people constitutes the community, and the members of that great community are simply not going to deposit their money in banks to the extent necessary to reestablish and maintain the national credit stream unless and until they are guaranteed against loss.

There is another objection that deserves a frank answer and that is that several States have tried the bank guaranty law and that all have signally failed. It is true that eight or nine States have tried the guaranteeing of bank deposits and all have discontinued it. That all, or any of them, signally failed does not seem to be borne out by the evidence. It rather appears to be shown that for considerable periods all these States were clearly benefited by the bank guaranty law. All the States trying the plan were agricultural States. Some failed because of general crop failure in the State; some failed because the "deflation of the farmer" by the Federal reserve system broke the farmers, and the farmers' banks broke. All failed to provide sufficient funds to stand the strain which these cataclysms wrought. None provided a close system of examination and supervision.

Insurance companies do not do all their insuring in one locality or one State. They all spread their risks so as to arrive at a general average condition. While banks were failing rapidly in South Dakota, North Dakota, and Nebraska, most of the rest of the country was quite prosperous and bank failures very infrequent. If the whole United and protect all of them for the benefit of all the people. | States is taken into the plan there can be no question of its success because the risks will be spread abundantly. The fund can be as large as required and the unlimited credit of the Nation will be behind it. The examination of the banks will necessarily be much more frequent, thorough, and stringent. The large banks being party to the guaranty, will be less ready to unload rotten "securities" on small banks. The experience gathered from all these State guaranty laws has been gathered and used in formulating this national bank guaranty law and that experience is sufficient to permit the writing of this entirely practical bill guaranteeing bank depositors. There is, however, one feature of this bill over which there is much confusion. The position taken by the author of the bill in trying to harmonize the functions of government and the duty of the banks themselves to make depositors safe has in my judgment resulted in an unfortunate and entirely mistaken position, in relation to the ownership of the surplus earned by the Federal reserve system already paid over to the Treasury and the present surplus on hand.

The claim is made that this surplus does not actually belong to the people but to the banks which are members of the Federal reserve system.

By this fiction it would be made to appear that in taking part of this surplus for a guaranty fund the banks of the country would be providing their own guaranty of bank deposits. By this same fiction it is argued that the Government will not be engaged in guaranteeing bank deposits. This is a pious and futile concession to the silly plea that we "keep Government out of business." It is also a plea to the cupidity of the member banks to indorse the guaranty of bank deposits, so they can participate in the constantly accumulating surplus.

Now, the fact is the Government owns in law and in equity the entire surplus of the Federal reserve system already paid over to the Treasury; it owns the large surplus-$257,000,000-now in hand; it will own every penny accruing hereafter to that system. There is no possible reason to pretend to the contrary. There is no reason why the United States Government should not guarantee bank deposits if it is to the interest of the people to do so.

Nevertheless, on these accounts the bill provides that 45 per cent of the profits arising from the operation of the Federal reserve system shall be added to the bank guaranty fund, 40 per cent to be distributed to the member banks, and 10 per cent to go to the reserve.

This is wrong in principle, wrong in inception, unnecessary and fatal to the idea involved in the guaranty of bank deposits. This provision arose from the insistence of certain member banks that they are the actual owners of the surplus arising over and above the 6 per cent profit on the capital of the Federal Reserve System which the Federal reserve act provides for in the original law. This contention of some of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System arises from the fact that member banks are compelled to keep in deposit with the Federal reserve banks a certain reserve fund on which no interest is paid, and these member bankers want interest on every penny.

This attitude overlooks completely and entirely the object and necessity in the operation of a central bank which, taken as a whole, the Federal reserve system constitutes.

The first requirement of any central bank or Government agency for the issuance of currency and control of credits is that there shall be no profit beyond a fixed normal on the actual investment or capital furnished by the individuals or banks making up the system. Any profits in excess of this fixed maximum must of necessity revert to the people, because it is their system and their profits.

And, second, because the justification of individual participation in this national power relating to our currency and credits must depend solely on the idea that participation be a limited participation. Because the profits that might and surely would be made to arise if the power to issue currency and thereby control credits was in the hands of individuals and for their benefit alone. All industry, all labor, all profits in business as a whole would be within their hands to exploit as they please. While, if the possible profit is limited and the excess paid to the people, the temptation and the power to exploit are both removed. This was wisely provided for in the Federal reserve act and must under no circumstances be abrogated.

The wise provision would and doubtless will be to devote the entire surplus now in the Federal reserve system to the bank guaranty fund—$257,000,000 and the full amount of the surplus as it arises—until a billion dollar fund is accumulated. That would actually permit the American people, out of their own money arising from the operation of their own Federal reserve system, to guarantee all their people against the loss of money deposited in the member banks of their Federal reserve system. We must awake fully to the all-important fact that the whole American monetary system belongs to the American people for their sole use.

ECONOMY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, our country is passing through a financial crisis never before equaled in our history. The people are burdened with taxes that can not be paid. The cost of government has become so great that it is striking at the heart of our most cherished institutions of organized government.

I am one of those who believe that we have entirely too much government. I think more of my country as a whole than I do of any particular department or branch of it. If it is to the interest of the people as a whole to abolish one-half of the Government activities that we now carry on, why not abolish them?

I am in favor of eliminating not only a large number of the independent bureaus we have but also of abolishing one or more of our governmental departments. Why not abolish the Department of Commerce and transfer such necessary activities as it now functions over to the Department of the Interior?

It is thought by many that the Department of Labor might be abolished and its necessary activities transferred to the other departments. Only a few years ago we had neither a Department of Commerce nor of Labor. We got along then just as well as we do now. The cost of these two departments is now about $75,000,000 per annum. A very large proportion of this cost could be eliminated by abolishing the departments and transferring their necessary activities to some other existing department.

In addition to the cost of running these Departments of Commerce and Labor we are now just finishing a gigantic building for the Commerce Department, covering 8 acres of ground, and said to cost $17,500,000. This building has 56 acres of floor space and should be sufficient to house all the independent bureaus and commissions that are necessary to be retained.

By abolishing the Department of Commerce and consolidating the Army and Navy Departments under one head, and then to eliminate a dozen or more of the independent bureaus with which we are now afflicted, at least $100,000,000 could be saved to the taxpayers of the United States.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of salary reductions far more drastic than any that have yet been proposed. I believe that every Member of Congress should be willing to serve his country for the next two years for an amount sufficient to pay his actual living expenses. Many thousands of people are not making enough to pay their expenses.

I have voted for every proposed cut in salaries that has been permitted to come to a vote in Congress. I have introduced bills for more drastic cuts. I have voted to abolish every bureau and Government activity that has come to a vote. I have introduced bills for more drastic consolidations than any that have been voted on.

I voted to consolidate the Army and Navy under one head. I would be glad of an opportunity to vote to abolish the Department of Commerce, or any other department that might possibly be eliminated. It is far better to drop a few branches of our Government than to destroy all of them.

So far as I am aware, this is the first time in half a century that Congress has been compelled to levy excise and nuisance taxes except in time of war. It is true that these taxes are to last for only two years. But the very fact that such a condition became necessary at all is the best evidence that something is radically wrong, and, if possible, should be righted.

It is not my purpose to criticize the President, nor anyone in authority. It is not my purpose to criticize any political party. I am willing to join with all persons in an effort to leave nothing undone in the program for cutting Government costs.

I must, however, compliment the Congress, and especially the Committee on Appropriations, for the accomplishments already achieved in reducing appropriations for the coming year. Our 10 regular appropriation bills have passed the House, and result in total reductions from last year's appropriations of $571,106,955.95. These facts do not seem to be generally known to the country.

The reductions in the several bills are as follows:

Department of Agriculture appropriation was reduced	$60, 255, 880.00
Department of Interior appropriation was re-
	18, 896, 174. 00
Department of State appropriation was reduced. Department of Justice appropriation was re-	3, 314, 158. 01

I want to commend my good friend, Congressman John D. Clarke, of New York, for having these figures published in the New York Times for the information of the people of his State. I hope the figures will be made public throughout the country.

RULE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H. R. 12280, FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I submit the following privileged report.

House Resolution 253

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12280, a bill to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The resolution was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

H. R. 12445

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the rule before the House provides for the consideration of the two billion dollar building bill. It is the most drastic rule that could be written. It deprives Members of all rights and requires them to sign on the dotted line a bill to spend more than $2,000,000,000 we have not got. I regret that I can not vote for the rule or for the bill. I am pledged to the people of my State to oppose all Federal expenditures not absolutely essential to the economical administration of the Government. I have committed myself in thousands of letters written since the opening of Congress to insist on rigid economy, and I can not support this bill without violating every promise I have made.

National revenues are at the lowest point in years, while national expenditures are higher than they have ever been before in this or any other country. Retrenchment is imperative. We must cut expenses to the bone to balance the Budget. And yet here is a bill authorizing the expenditure of millions of dollars for luxuries—for monumental marble buildings and expensive river revetments.

The business which such buildings would house has decreased 25 per cent in the last year, and the waterways to be improved are serving absolutely no business at all. There is less need for them to-day than there was 10 years ago. If 10 years ago we could let them wait when the Nation was prosperous and there was a large and growing surplus in the Treasury, surely we can let them wait a little longer when there is a deficit of $3,000,000,000 and half the Nation is bankrupt.

But it is urged that this is an emergency measure; that it will relieve unemployment. Unfortunately, that contention is not borne out by the facts. Official statistics show that if this entire program could be put into effect at once it would employ only one out of every thousand unemployed men. Furthermore, the bill can not be put into effect in time to be of practical service. It appropriates no money. It only authorizes appropriations. Congress is ready to adjourn; and even if the bill is passed, the money would not be made available until after the elections. And after the money is ready, a year or more will be required for selection of site, drawing of blue prints, and other preparations for construction. So in any event the work could not be provided in time to be of material service in the present emergency. And the same situation applies to appropriations for river improvement.

Nor could Missouri take advantage of the section authorizing loans to States for direct aid, as our State constitution expressly prohibits the State from borrowing money.

In short, the bill fails to provide for immediate or practical aid of any kind. It would merely authorize a raid on an already depleted Treasury. It would destroy national credit and increase the tax burden. It would force down the value of Government securities and deplete the reserves and the loaning power of every bank in the country. It would defer indefinitely all hope of early economic improvement.

After a desperate struggle we have just managed to balance the Budget. The President signed the bill yesterday. And to-day we propose to unbalance it again by bringing in a bill to spend millions of dollars for ornamental buildings and elaborate river improvements we can do without. The new revenue bill taxes every man, woman, and child. It increases the cost of necessities and reduces the standard of living of every family in the United States. And yet we are bringing in a bill here to spend a greater amount than all the money raised by the new tax bill.

It is the familiar spectacle of a family managing by close scrimping to pay the rent and then ordering a new automobile and a diamond necklace. After such a struggle to balance the Budget, elementary common sense demands that we keep it balanced.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to support this bill. I would like to see these buildings erected and these aids to navigation provided for our rivers and harbors. But the condition of the Treasury and the welfare of the country will not permit them at this time. I have just returned from a brief trip home. Economic conditions are deplorable. Farm products are selling at shameful prices—far below the cost of production—and stores and factories are idle because the farmer is unable to buy. Armies of unemployed are seeking employment which can not be provided by this bill. Interest and taxes have gone unpaid so long that fore-closures and dispossessments are the order of the day. Business men in every community are making a last stand to fight off insolvency. I can not bring myself to fire upon them from the rear by voting for a bill authorizing billions of dollars of unnecessary expenditures and increasing their burdens in a crisis like this.

The whole theory of the bill is wrong. There is nothing in it either for the farmer or for the thousands of small towns dependent on farm patronage. If you really want to relieve unemployment and alleviate distress, give the farmer a fair price for his products, a fair wage for his labor, and a fair return on his investments. If you will pay him what he earns, every dollar of it will immediately flow back through the channels of trade and your factories will open. labor will be in demand, and the wheels of industry will start moving. He needs every commodity you produce. Pay him even a part of what he is entitled to receive, and the smoke of your factories, the clamor of your exchanges, and the flashing shuttles of your railways will be his answer. Prosperity must start with the farm. There is no alternative. Stop the robbery of your basic industry, and busy cities will draw once more from the boundless resources of a smiling land of plenty.

But this bill provides no such program. It can not afford real relief and the country realizes it. Stop the next man you meet on the street and ask him what Congress should do first. He will tell you the first thing Congress should do is to economize and quit spending money for nonessentials. Whether you ask the question in Maine or California, in New Orleans or Chicago, the answer is the same, "Congress must stop passing pork bills."

You can not put out a fire by drenching it with gasoline. You can not cure a deficit by spending more money. And in this acute crisis—the most tragic in the history of the Nation—I can not deliberately vote money when there is none to vote. I can not mortgage to-morrow for to-day's extravagance. I can not chain future generations to a treadmill of debt in order to enjoy present luxuries at their expense. I can not vote for a bill which, under a promise of relief, bankrupts the National Treasury and national integrity as well.

GENERAL RELIEF BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 251 and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 251

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12445, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, and any points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman from Indiana desires the usual time on the rule.

Mr. PURNELL. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield the gentleman from Indiana 30 minutes, and I ask to be recognized for 6 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think if ever there was a time in the history of legislation when we should employ the language of candor that this is certainly the time. In the beginning I desire to say that it will be unnecessary for gentlemen who are opposed to this rule to charge or undertake to establish that it is a very strong-arm and drastic rule [laughter], because I frankly admit it. I have never found it necessary, as one who believes in party organization and party government, to make any apology for exercising the instrumentalities of the House and of the party, in an effort to effectuate legislation that has been put upon the party's program. I frankly state that this is a rule, rather extraordinary, in that it only allows the offering of amendments by the Committee on Ways and Means, and prohibits the offering of any amendments to such amendments as may be offered. The provisions of the resolution have been read in the hearing of the House, and it is unnecessary for me to repeat the provisions of the rule.

Gentlemen, I think that certainly within the history of modern times there has not been a tenser moment in legislation affecting the welfare and real interest of the American people than this very moment.

You have just listened to a memorial read from the Clerk's desk addressed to the nonpartisan patriotism and loyalty of the American people in the House of Representatives. It was unnecessary in fact for the statements in the memorial to have been recited, because there is not a man in this Chamber who is not thoroughly familiar with the very desperate economic and social situation which to-day confronts the American people.

This Congress is apparently drawing to a close of its session. The number of unemployed men and women in America, on account of the depression, is constantly increasing, and although it is felt that before many days at least this Congress will adjourn sine die, there has not been placed on the statute books, or received the approval of the President any real bold, courageous legislation on the part of the American Congress to meet this desperate unemployment situation. [Applause.]

My party, the Democratic Party, as represented in this House, although I must confess that maybe it is somewhat belated in the performance of its duty, has undertaken to bring before you for your approval a bill that will meet the desperate emergency of unemployment with which so many millions of our people are confronted. It is not a bill, admittedly, that meets with the approval of all of the members of my own party. It is a bill that will probably meet with the opposition of a great majority of the Republican Party in this House, but let it not be misunderstood as to what is the real purpose lying behind the legislation. It is emergency legislation; it is legislation that would not have been presented to this House in ordinary or normal times. The purpose of it, the great humanitarian purpose lying behind it, is to undertake to give temporary stimulation to the unemployment situation by the use of Federal funds and Federal credits.

We are proposing to give to the Chief Executive of this Nation $100,000,000 to be used by him as he sees fit, if the emergency becomes sufficiently desperate, to be expended by agencies that he may select or set up, if necessary, to meet the emergency arising from actual starvation on the part of the American people. We have done that thing before in time of war and in time of emergency. Republicans joined with Democrats in giving President Wilson the sum of $100,-000,000 to be used at his discretion in time of war. I say to you to-day that the conditions by which we are surrounded in this country are more desperate in their possibilities than were the conditions that surrounded us when we drafted 5,000,000 of our young men to preserve the Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KELLER). The gentleman has consumed six minutes.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Take six minutes more. Mr. BANKHEAD. Under my promise to other Members of the House, I can not consume any more time, although I would like to do so and argue this question further. It is a question of whether or not you are going to use the instrumentality of this rule to get quick action, we trust effective action, on this measure of emergency relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the admission of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that this is a gag rule. Otherwise we might not have suspected it. We learn too often from the press of the Nation that the present Congress is in disrepute. This is something that has not been said of the House of Representatives for many, many years. If that be true, it is because of performances such as you are about to witness in this Chamber this very day. For weeks and months the Nation, as well as the Congress itself, has been demanding a balanced Budget; and only last night at 5 o'clock the President of the United States signed a bill which assures the financial integrity and solvency of this Nation. It is worthy of note, therefore, that the first official act of the House of Representatives following the signing of that tax bill should be the dragging into the House, under an unprecedented gag rule, of a bill which, if enacted into law, will certainly insure for an indefinite period of time the unbalancing of that Budget. We Republicans can stand this procedure if the gentlemen on the Democratic side who have heard their master's voice can stand it. I suppose we should not complain. After all, it is perfectly consistent that you who are in the majority should, first of all, "hog tie" your Members before you bring in a "pork barrel" bill. That is exactly what you have done. Many of you will to-day stultify your own consciences and your own good judgment in supporting this measure.

No fish in brook or sea ever had dangled before it in all the world's history more tempting bait than that which is hanging in front of the eyes of the Members of this House to-day, and I undertake to say that no one but a sucker will bite it. The benefits that will be derived, and there will be benefits derived from the expending of millions of dollars upon unnecessary public improvements, will soon evaporate and be forgotten, but the damage that will be done by wasteful expenditure of public funds will remain as a permanent blot on the country and further haunt us in our effort to restore economic stability. The Nation can not stand the further increase of taxes that will be required to again balance our Budget if this bill should ultimately be enacted into law. Therefore, in the name of economy and in the interest of our common country, I sincerely hope that the previous question will be voted down. If that fails, then I urge that the resolution be not adopted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in view of the unprecedented condition in which we find ourselves in this country, and in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], this country of ours has just got "to stand it" whether it means more taxes or not. We can no longer permit the pitiable conditions in this Nation to continue as they are. So I have no reluctance in standing here to advocate the adoption of this rule, call it a "gag" rule or what you will. Incidentally it is no worse than many rules that the Republicans brought in here when they were in power for the consideration of the Hawley-Smoot and other tariff bills, for instance. Under those rules you made all the "suckers' bite; you dangled before their eyes all of the protective "benefits" to their local communities. This rule may be on a par with yours of the past, but whether it is or not, I have no hesitancy and no apology to them when I look at the Republican side of this House and advocate the adoption of this rule.

Why, Mr. Speaker, because our country was never in the stressful condition in which we are now, the Democratic Party offers this bill as the first real relief measure the benefits of which will filter down to the people of the Nation.

Under its terms we place in the hands of a Republican President $100,000,000 to dispense as he sees fit, without any accounting for it. Our failure to be partisan surely surprises you. I am happy to intrust this huge sum to the Chief Executive, confident he will administer it without partisan favor. The bill adds a billion dollars to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fund so that more help may be given to business and to pry loose the frozen credits. The bill further authorizes $375,000,000 for public buildings, $378,000,000 for river and harbor work, $101,000,000 for roads, $180,000,000 for flood control, and $22,500,000 for military construction. Surely this vast undertaking of public improvements should greatly relieve the army of unemployed.

Now, we read in the papers every day that the Chief Executive says no money should be expended on any public improvement that is not income producing or "self-liquidating." I would like to know just what sort of public improvements such are. I would like to know what public buildings or what public improvements are "self-liquidating," except possibly a few toll bridges. "Self-liquidating" is just a phrase that has grown up in the mind of the Chief Executive somewhat similar to that old bromide about "balancing the Budget."

Furthermore, in the bill we hope to increase employment by providing for a 5-day week on all these public improvements. The bill also will expedite the building operations by speedy condemnations and the use of standard plans.

Why, Mr. Speaker, we have taken no more than a leaf out of the President's own proposals of the past. Up to 1928 and in the campaign of 1928 the President was the most outspoken advocate of public improvements to relieve unemployment. He never then mentioned "income-producing" or "self-liquidating" improvements. That distinction did not concern him then. He stressed as the chief measure of relieving unemployment in this Nation the building of public buildings and other public enterprises. Now, why this about face? I am sincere in it when I say that I believe certain opposition to this bill, not only here but in other high places, is politics, politics, and nothing but politics. [Applause.]

It has been and will be shouted that this measure will unbalance a now balanced Budget. Why, you can not crush the truth by such an absolute misstatement. This bill provides for a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent a gallon on gasoline, which will meet all interest charges and amortize the entire expenditure. The country should know the truth, and we propose to bring it home to them.

I regret that many votes cast here to-day will be cast because this bill is a Democratic measure, advocating the very things that Republicans have advocated for years, and I will just close my appeal to you by quoting a phrase used tome time ago by your President and my President, "do not "play politics with human misery." [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I asked unanimous consent that the rule as presented by the gentleman from Alabama might be read to the House for the information of the House, and the Speaker himself objected, I certainly was a little surprised, although I knew it was within his prerogative to object if he wanted to, but since I have read the rule I am not at all surprised, and I think the Speaker did the proper thing, because I know that no man at the head of the party which had brought out a rule like this would want it to come to the light any quicker than was absolutely necessary. [Applause.]

Since I have found out the way in which the Democratic majority party operates in the way of special rules, notwithstanding some experience on the Rules Committee, I feel that I owe an apology to my Republican brethren for not using the power as it should have been used. Our friends, the Democrats, have spent much time talking about the liberality of the rules, and what they would do when they had an opportunity. Some of our brethren on our own side who never had been here when they were in power, put some confidence in what they said; but, of course, some of the older Members who had been here for some time paid no attention to it.

The situation is that this is one of the most drastic rules that has ever been brought onto this floor, as the gentleman from Alabama said, but neither of the gentlemen on the majority side has said one word about what the rule provides. It goes farther in limiting the hog tying this House than any rule that has ever been presented during my membership in this House. [Applause.]

It contravenes the rules of the House in five specific particulars. First, that the points of order against said bill are hereby waived. The bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. They are not even going to allow the bill to be read. It was never read in the committee and it will never be read in the House. I do not blame them for that.

No amendment shall be in order except amendments offered by the direction of the Ways and Means Committee, and such amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

In addition to that, no one is to be allowed to offer any amendment to the amendments offered by the Ways and Means Committee.

Gentlemen, you have gone farther in this rule than I ever dared to go at any time. When I consider what your own Speaker has said on the floor of this House during this very session, and your other leader, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, has said about the liberality of the Rules Committee and the Democratic Party in connection with important legislation before the House, some one ought to apologize for the Democrats here to-day.

When we had before this House the important tax measure, the important economy measure, something that you gentlemen should have caucused on for the protection of the people of the Nation, you did not dare do it, but when it came to the real, genuine "pork" measure, you caucused and brought all your men in to protect your bill. That is typical of the Democratic Party.

One more thing: Unless we vote down the previous question and are able to amend this rule, the average Member of this House will not be able to present a single amendment, and the bill itself will never be read. A proposal will be made to vote against the previous question and give the House an opportunity to express itself, as the distinguished leaders of the Democratic Party have always said, "We Democrats will give you that opportunity."

Now, if you believe in that, I ask you to join with us in voting down the previous question, so that we may have an opportunity to present amendments and also have an opportunity to read and consider the entire bill on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Greenwood].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I feel that under the circumstances there is no apology needed for this rule, as a great emergency exists in the unemployment condition of our country. This rule may look as though it had been prepared by Snell, Purnell, and others, but in this emergency, in the closing days of this Congress, something must be done to relieve unemployment. The Democratic Party has cooperated on most of the measures put forward by the President, but we have waited in vain for the President and his administration to bring forward a constructive measure that will meet the requirements of unemployment.

This bill proposes to satisfy that situation.

Title I puts $100,000,000 in the hands of the President to be used at his discretion in order to prevent hunger, in order to prevent what will happen this coming winter, because there is more unemployment now than there was when Congress convened. Municipalities and civic organizations have exhausted their resources. The citizens who are unemployed and hungry are citizens of the United States the same as they are of the States and of the municipalities. It is the duty of Congress to make—and we dare not adjourn without making—some provision to take care of hunger and destitution throughout the coming year.

Title II enlarges the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and meets the requirements of the provisions recommended by the President. We want credit provided to the private individual, the smaller man, who wants to borrow money for construction which will put people to work.

Title III is the one to which the greatest objection has been raised. This section provides for public improvements. The President has many times advocated that this is the way to solve unemployment, to build permanent public buildings and to improve our rivers and harbors. Many times he has offered his observations in approval of these provisions. I voted for the Elliott construction building program. It was said at that time that it would remove these projects from the "pork-barrel" operation of the previous bills and place them in the hands of the administration of the departments, to be determined on the basis of postage returns and the necessities for buildings that were known to be needed in certain places to take care of public service. That is what this bill does in that particular title.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREENWOOD. I can not yield; my time is limited. The first provision under Title III is $174,000,000 to build the very projects that have been approved by the Treasury and Post Office Departments under the present administration, not based upon the theory that they are in my district or in your district, but on the theory that they are needed to meet the necessities of public business.

The second section provides $90,000,000 for projects that have been approved by the departments of this administration. These projects are now approved and on the waiting list. In voting for this bill you are not voting for any "porkbarrel" proposition. We are presenting the same projects that have been approved by the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department and putting them in places where they say they are needed. I voted for the Elliott bill on the theory that it would remove these projects from politics. This bill proposes to continue that policy.

In the new tax bill we have levied additional postage on first-class mail to the extent of $160,000,000. That amount is four times as much as is needed to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness of these projects and provide a sinking fund. When the people are paying additional postage they have the right to have service; and if ever there was a time in the history of our Nation when we should indulge in a program of public-building construction and river and harbor improvements, it is this hour, when more than 8,000,000 people are walking the avenues of this Nation looking for work. If the Nation does not furnish the work, it will not be furnished.

This is a constructive measure. This meets the requirements of the Government's need for improvements; and if you believe in cooperation, as you say you do, support the only constructive measure that has been advocated and been presented to either House of Congress up to this hour and that will meet the emergency and furnish employment for the unemployed. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I concede that the rule before the House is a drastic rule, but conditions are desperate and relief must be forthcoming without delay. For months I have called your attention to the serious and critical conditions that confront us. A few moments ago the Speaker submitted and read a memorial presented this morning by the mayors of the leading cities of America who appeared lately in person before the Speaker and the majority and minority leaders, expressing grave concern in regard to the existing conditions. All of you who have heard the resolution must concede, if you have any sensibilities at all, that immediate action on our part is necessary to relieve the nation-wide distress. The gentleman from Indiana stated that Congress is in disrepute. I grant that people who hear and read statements made by some of you Republicans and by the Republican press, and who are not informed, are being made to believe that this Congress is indifferent to the needs and wants of the Nation. But what are the facts?

Although we have been in session only five months, the Democratic membership of this House—though having only a slight majority—has adopted and passed not only all of the appropriation bills but many other important measures and has acted favorably upon every one of the President's recommendations. That we have not adopted before this real relief legislation—legislation which we are proposing in this bill—is attributable to the President's and your own dilatory tactics. In fact, it is to overcome these tactics that we were compelled to bring in what you designate as a "gag" rule and what I concede as a drastic rule.

The reason for our action is plain; we have waited for the President to present a constructive program, but he has failed to do this, and now we can no longer ignore the country-wide demand to provide employment and food for the millions of hungry men, women, and children. The seriousness of the conditions, that have again been called to your attention to-day, have been known to the President and the Republican administration for the last 18 months. But the President, like Nero of antiquity, who fiddled while Rome burned, "fiddled" around while this present conflagration has increased. He continued to ignore the appeals of the 8,000,000 unemployed people and the business men of the Nation.

As it has been stated by the gentleman from New York and by myself several times on this floor, there are many who charge, and I believe justly, that the President and the Republican Party are playing politics with human misery—with the fate of 40,000,000 American people—by delaying and refusing to take steps that would restore commerce, create employment, and reestablish confidence—so as to reap benefit of any relief measure passed shortly before the election. I repeat, your dilatory tactics are predicated upon the assumption that political benefit and advantage will come to the Republican Party if it can be made to appear that the relief legislation was brought about by the administration.

But, instead of deriving any benefit, I believe that you will be held to account and receive the condemnation of all thinking and well-informed citizens, notwithstanding that you are utilizing the press of the Nation to discredit the Democratic membership of Congress, and therefore the Democratic Party, by condemning every measure which we present and vaingloriously praising your own measures, no matter how vicious they are. However, it will not avail you; it will not help you and the greedy interests that you represent to reelect Hoover.

Though you have been in power for 12 years, through the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations, during which time the revenues of the Government and great surplus in the Treasury, turned over to you by the Democratic administration, have been squandered by criminal extravagance and willful disregard of economic conditions, notwithstanding the introduction and use of the Budget system, you have brought about a deficit for this fiscal year of approximately three thousand millions of dollars; and you are endeavoring to maneuver to such a position that the responsibility for this criminal negligence will appear to rest upon the shoulders of the Democrats. You are using a countrywide publicity to create this impression in the minds of the people, and are forcing us to make up the deficiency which you brought about in order to balance the Budget. But notwithstanding the many misleading articles and statements that have been made, I still have confidence that the majority of the people will place the blame where it properly belongs—that is, on President Hoover and the Republican administration. And to-day, after you have been in complete control of all the branches of Government, executive and legislative, and notwithstanding that we have an overabundance of food and raw materials, we find that there are over 10,000,000 unemployed; 40,000,000 destitute and in want; plants, factories, and stores closed; and 95 per cent of the American people in despair because their life savings and, in many instances, fortunes have been swept away, and many of our outstanding men driven to commit suicide.

I hold in my hand a Chicago newspaper of May 30, 1932, and what do I read? On the first page alone there are eight announcements of suicides, representing not unemployed men in despair, as you might be led to suspect, but men of high standing, leaders in financial life, who were unable to stand the strain any longer and who made an end to it all. Here are the names of Edward F. Swift, the packer; G. W. Page, an industrialist; F. P. Shickler, merchant leader; and E. D. Shaw, retired broker. Yes, gentlemen; statistics disclose that there have been in the last two and a half years of Hoover's administration over 60,000 suicides in this country, and nearly all of them have been caused by reverses brought about by the financial and economic debacle-a debacle that you in a great measure are responsible for and that could have been avoided if the President had listened to the appeals of those who had the interests of the country at heart. This terrific cataclysm, which has caused these thousands of suicides, destroyed $150,000,000 worth of property values, brought about the long and tremendous unemployment, and completely wrecked the commerce of the Nation, could have been avoided.

As I have stated on the floor of this House in November, 1929, I had appealed to the President to stop the criminal debauchery that was taking place in Wall Street and pleaded for the prohibition of bear raiding, stock manipulation, and for the time being, short selling. But he refused to act. Within the last few weeks these crooked manipulations, to which I called your attention on many occasions, have been exposed and all of the fears and apprehensions which I entertained in 1929 have been justified. But, gentlemen, these vicious manipulations that have been disclosed are only an infinitesimal part of what has been going on in the New York Stock Exchange, and if the committee acted in good faith, instead of playing contemptible politics by trying to give undue publicity to two or three Democrats, notwithstanding that all of these vicious activities have been carried on and practiced by the most outstanding industrial and financial leaders of the country, all of whom are Republicans, it could have rendered a valuable service to the country by exposing the countless manipulations and the leading manipulators.

In my telegram to President Hoover on November 12, 1929, I appealed to him as follows:

His Excellency HERBERT HOOVER,

President of the United States, Washington, D. C.: To-day's New York press dispatch states that the professionals are still selling short. I am satisfied that 99 per cent of the American people feel that this outrageous destruction of the small investors has gone far enough and that immediate steps are needed to save the Nation from the disastrous conditions that bound to follow. It is the consensus of opinion of wellare bound to follow. It is the consensus of opinion of well-informed men that you, Mr. President, should call upon the financiers of this Nation to stop profiteering and formulate and carry out a plan to save the Nation from dire calamity.

A. J. Saeath.

On December 26, 1929, I again appealed to the President, as well as to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, and the Attorney General, Mr. Mitchell, and pleaded that these destructive and dishonest activities be stopped. I also introduced a bill which I believe would have restricted short selling and bear raiding, but I could receive no consideration in a Republican House or from the Republican administration.

I continued these appeals and supplications throughout 1930. On September 23 and October 16 of that year I addressed letters to the President suggesting that if he personally was unable to deal with the situation, to request Congress to pass legislation against this greedy manipulation. Not being able to secure any action and sensing the approaching danger, I made strenuous efforts to secure the President's aid, knowing that he has the absolute control over the Federal Reserve Board, to request the Federal Reserve Board to accept for rediscount finance-corporation paper, which the board was legally able to do, and which would have released $2,000,000,000 worth of commercial paper for legitimate purposes. But again the President refused to act.

I then turned and appealed to Eugene Meyer on December 12, 1930, and in my letter set forth the necessity for rediscounting finance-corporation paper, as well as short-term municipal bonds and securities and mortgages on homes. The letter reads as follows:

DECEMBER 12, 1930.

Hon. EUGENE MEYER,

Governor Federal Reserve Board,

Governor Federal Reserve Board.

Treasury Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Meyer: Without going into the other causes responsible for the present alarming situation, I feel that the terrific stock inflation and the unloading during the past two years of millions and millions of shares of such inflated, and in many instances worthless, stocks upon the masses by means of high-power methods, has contributed more than any other cause and is responsible to a greater degree for the ingressingly descripte condition of ble to a greater degree for the increasingly desperate condition of our country to-day. Such inflation has drained the working cap-ital required for legitimate business and has resulted in a tre-mendous stagnation of the commerce of the Nation, which in turn has led to nation-wide unemployment, thereby creating not only want and misery but alarming discontent.

I believe that it is within the power of the Federal Reserve Board to accept for rediscount purposes—in addition to notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and Government bonds—the paper of finance corporations secured by automobiles, radios, refrigerators, and other like commodities. But, in addition thereto, because of existing conditions, I feel that the Federal Reserve Board should be authorized to accept for rediscount municipal, public utility, and rail-road bonds, as well as real-estate securities—but only under safe and sane regulations—and propose to offer a bill that will grant and sane regulations—and propose to their a six such additional power.

I feel that you will agree with me when I say that, with the exception of the few extremely large banking institutions, the major portion of our banks are to-day greatly handicapped, and for no other reason than the fact that they have on hand a very large amount of good but unliquid assets. Already this has caused the closing of a dangerously large number of banks and threatens to close an even still greater number. threatens to close an even still greater number.

Since the Federal reserve system was created for the purpose of aiding our business, industry, and agriculture, its powers should be expanded so that it may successfully cope with the situation confronting us to-day.

Although I know you to be familiar with the basic causes of the conditions existent to-day, nevertheless, I now take the liberty of submitting to you certain important facts in this matter, derived from careful investigation and survey.

a fact, that billions upon billions of dollars of worthless stock, in 1928 and 1929, were unloaded upon people in every walk of life, who, as I said on the floor of the House in 1929 and again just the other day, were inveigled by the alluring pictures painted by some of our most prominent financiers and industrial leaders. Then came the inevitable crash, and in order to comply with the demands of the banks for additional securities or for a reduction and payment of their loans, these small investors were obliged to heavily withdraw from their business the very capital necessary for the successful conduct of said business. In addition, many were unable to meet the demands of the banks, and a large num-were unable to meet the demands of the banks, and a large number of these, in order to ald the small business man, have been and still are carrying on these very loans, secured by collateral which, though good, can not be disposed of without great loss.

Therefore it is my firm belief that if at least some of such collateral held by these banks could be utilized for rediscount they would be tremendously relieved. This in turn would enable them to extend to our businesses and industries much-needed aid, and business would thus be permitted to resume its uncurtailed activities, which would bring about a resumption of employment.

I well recognize that a few powerful financiers will object to my plan on the ground that it will result in inflation. Yet it must be conceded that expansion will not now be detrimental but, on the contrary, will be very helpful. For example, you know that brokers' loans have been reduced from above $6,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, and these loans were on collateral securities not as safe as contemplated in my plan.

That money is plentiful can not be denied. Thus, for example, money can to-day be obtained in New York for gambling purposes at rates as low as $1\frac{1}{2}$ and 2 per cent. Why not make at least some of it available to the smaller borrowers in need of money for legitimate purposes? I am aware that the few powerful financial institutions have in their vaults approximately \$7,000,000 worth of securities available for rediscount purposes. Our aim, however, should be to give aid to the banks which, through no fault of

Such extension can do no possible harm but may, and in all likelihood will, revive business activities, which will result in employment for at least some of the 7,000,000 of men and women now

Knowing your splendid record and your ability as a financier and man of vast experience, I have here humbly set forth my plan, and do hope to hear from you to obtain your views.

Very sincerely yours,

A. J. SAEATH.

But my appeal again fell on deaf ears, for I received the following reply:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD, Washington, December 29, 1930.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR Mr. Sabath: This is the first opportunity I have had to acknowledge your letter of December 12 in which you suggest that paper secured by municipal and railroad bonds, etc., be made eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve banks. I notice that you interpret the existing law as giving the Federal reserve banks discount paper of finance corporations secured by various commodities. This is not in accordance with the law and the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, which do not permit the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, which do not permit the rediscount of finance paper, with certain minor exceptions specifically provided for in the act, such as the paper of cotton factors. I believe that it may be of service to you to see an article on paper eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve banks in the bulletin for July, 1930, of which I inclose a copy.

You will notice from this article that of the 8,522 member banks there were 99 that had no eligible paper; 1,749 that had between 0.1 and 10 per cent of their paper eligible for rediscount; 4,813, including 4,427 country banks that had between 10 and 40 per cent; and 1,861, including 1,806 country banks, that had 40 per cent or over. This indicates that there are very few banks that do not have enough eligible paper to use at the reserve banks when the need arises. I am not inclined to believe, therefore, that enlarging the class of paper eligible for rediscount at the reserve banks would help the credit or the business situation. Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

EUGENE MEYER, Governor,

Perverseness, if you will, and the knowledge that conditions were growing worse compelled me to respond on January 19, 1931, to his reply. But he could not be moved, and as far as I know can not be moved, even in face of the appalling conditions.

During all of these crucial times I have been encouraged by many outstanding legitimate business men and bankers in the Nation to continue with my activities for relief, and I, in turn, have asked them to bring to the attention of the President the immediate need for relief legislation. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, I do not exaggerate when I say that I have received at least 5,000 communications informing me that the writers have recommended to the President the need for the legislation which I was advocating.

Realizing that the Federal Reserve Board was under the influence of Wall Street, I began to advocate the creation of a Government finance institution, which I designated the "National Relief Finance Corporation," an institution capitalized for $1,000,000,000, and possessing the power to issue bonds to the extent of five times its capital structure.

This institution was to be uninfluenced by the avaricious interests of Wall Street and utilized, in a manner similar to the War Finance Corporation, to safeguard the small banks from bankruptcy and in other ways to help reestablish business. I conferred with many bankers, business men, and financiers, and, with the exception of a few, they all approved my plan; whereupon I called the President's attention, early in June, to the need for such an institution. And at the same time I not only requested, but demanded that a special session of Congress be called, to enact legislation that would save the Nation from complete ruin, suggesting that, in addition to the creation of a finance corporation, the power of the Federal Reserve Board be broadened so that Federal reserve banks would be able to accept for rediscount good commercial paper, short-term municipal bonds and anticipation warrants, and small mortgages on

On June 13 I received the following letter from the chairman of the Federal reserve district of Chicago, Mr. Eugene Stevens:

JUNE 13, 1931.

Hon. A. J. SABATH.

Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. SABATH: I understand that you have recently sent a vire to the President at Washington relative to the banking situation in Chicago, which has been referred to me through the Federal Reserve Board.

should like very much to have an opportunity to discuss this matter with you, and wonder if you could find it convenient to come into my office the early part of the week. There are some things about this situation which we might be able to discuss to our mutual advantage.

Very truly yours,

EUGENE M. STEVENS, Chairman.

After conferring with Mr. Stevens, and being asked by the press for a report, I issued this statement on June 16, 1931:

After prolonged conference with Mr. Stevens, the chairman of the Federal reserve bank in Chicago, Congressman Sabath is working on a plan to save, as he states, approximately one-half million homes for their owners and their families from foreclosure. He is preparing a bill creating the Federal home-loan bank similar to the Federal land bank, but with additional safeguards against any possible losses. He maintains that the unfortunate existing conditions require that relief be worked out that will save these homes for approximately one-half million families, and that without any cost to the Government.

He argues that the subscription of the last $800,000,000 Govern He argues that the subscription of the last $300,000,000 Government loan, oversubscribed by nearly $5,000,000, demonstrates that money is plentiful, and by the further fact that call money is only 1½ per cent, and that the large banks in the United States are suffering from too much cash; but due to the fact that all small banks are working to the end to make their assets the liquid kind and will not extend these mortgages on the homes or make any new loans, he reasons that the moment the institution he is advocating is established and takes over only a small percentage of the overdue mortgages confidence will be restored in this line of securities and demand created for them, as, after all, he claims it is the best possible security that anyone of small means can obtain.

Congressman Sabath made several efforts in Congress to induce the Federal reserve bank to recommend or approve of broadening their scope of rediscount to make possible rediscounting the mortgages on homes as well as municipal bonds and finance cormortgages on homes as well as municipal bonds and finance corporation paper but could not secure favorable action at that time from Congress or from the Federal Reserve Board. Consequently, after a conference with Mr. Stevens, the Congressman claims he realizes the threatened danger to the small-home owners and taking advantage of Mr. Stevens's views, feels that there can be no justifiable objection to his plan as his plan will find an outlet for the idle millions of dollars in the strong boxes of the banks as well as in assets as people are still fearful of investing the money in professionally fluctuating stocks and bonds and at the same time will save over one-half million of the most reliable and deserving citizens from losing their homes and all and deserving citizens from losing their homes and

He argues that the city home owners are entitled to the same consideration and aid and relief that has been provided for the farmers, and with the experience with the land banks he feels that the Government as well as all others who join in the subscription of capital stock for such home bank can and will be safeguarded and other investments made secure and unfortunate owners

On July 11 I again sent the President an urgent request to call a special session of Congress and pointed out the need for this legislation; at the same time I urged him to use his high office to put an end to the incessant bear raiding on stock exchanges, which was forcing down the value of stocks and bonds, and which was impairing stability, liquidity, and even solvency of a great portion of our banks and insurance companies. But, as usual, all I received was an empty acknowledgment from the President thanking me for the suggestions.

THE WHITE HOUSE Washington, July 13, 1931.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,

Chicago, Ill.
My Dear Mr. Sabath: I have your letter of July 11 and am very much obliged for the information it contains.

Yours faithfully.

Finding my efforts of no avail and receiving no encouragement from the President, I began a personal campaign for the enactment of the relief measures that I had been advocating. I mailed out over 5,000 letters to bankers, business men, and leaders in industry, not only in Chicago but throughout the country, submitting my plan to them, asking, if they approved of it, to use their influence with the President to have him call a special session of Congress to consider the various relief measures. But so far as it concerned the President it had little or no effect, for he was too preoccupied at his Rapidan camp with foreign representatives and international bankers and ignored the general demand for a special session.

Therefore, I was very much delighted when, on October 6, 1931. I noticed in the press reports that a conference was to be held at the White House and that the President had invited Speaker Garner and several other Democrats. Having no confidence in any plan that would be agreed upon by President Hoover and the international bankers and fearing that by connivance the Speaker, Mr. GARNER, might be inveigled into agreeing with the plan, I immediately telegraphed to him as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., October 6, 1931.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER

Washington, D. C.

I read in to-day's papers that after a secret conference with the Wall Street bankers the President is calling a conference of some Democrats for the purpose of binding them to the Wall Streetformulated program. As you know, the Federal Reserve Board, under the domineering influence of Wall Street, has miserably failed and was in a great measure responsible for the complete demoralization of our industries and banking institutions. I therefore suggest that you do not bind the liberal and progressive Democrats to any Wall Street-formulated program.

Demand that a special session of Congress be immediately called for the purpose of relieving conditions and to reestablish confidence. People have lost faith in President Hoover and his administration and are clamoring for action to save millions of people out of employment and out of food. Will demand the establishment of a $5,000,000,000 prosperity finance corporation to be managed by financiers uncontrolled by Wall Street destructive forces. Will also demand increase in large income and inheritance taxes and immediate liberalization of the Volstead Act.

ADOLPH J. SABATH.

ADOLPH J. SABATH.

And was gratified to receive on the following morning, October 7, 1931, the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 7, 1931.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,

Chicago, Ill .:

Telegram received. Greatly appreciate your clear-cut analysis of situation. Have no intention of binding myself nor of attempting to bind Democratic Members of House. Concur fully in your view that situation justifies calling special session.

JNO. N. GARNER.

Please remember, during all this time it was conceded that the Republicans had control of the House, and it was not until a few days before Congress convened that fate made it possible for the Democratic Party to organize the House. But no sooner had we secured control than the President began to bombard the House with messages asking for action, and this notwithstanding the fact that for over nine months, when there was ample time to consider relief legislation, he remained deaf to the appeals coming from every section of the Nation. And ever since this House has convened, he has, by special messages and well-prepared interviews and statements, endeavored to transfer the responsibility for his own lethargy to the Democratic small majority. It is true that in his opening message to Congress he did recommend the creation of the Finance Corporation, the extension of the power of the Federal Reserve Board, and the creation of a system of home-loan banks.

Yet, notwithstanding that I have advocated this legislation for over two years, I gladly laid aside whatever credit I was entitled to in order to speed up the enactment of this legislation. And though I have been a Member for 25 years, I have never seen more efficient or speedier action in passing any legislation than I have seen in regard to the bills that were passed creating a Reconstruction Finance Corporation and broadening the power of the Federal Reserve Board. The home loan bank bill also has been favorably recommended, and, I believe, will be passed very shortly. Unfortunately the President has made no other recommendations to relieve the present conditions, except to demand that we balance the Budget, make up the $3,000,000,-000 deficit, or find $1,250,000,000 in new revenue, and reduce the expenditures by about $500,000,000 so as to balance the Budget.

In conclusion, I am going to ask you Republicans who are trying to score us for bringing in this drastic rule, what you have suggested or what has the President suggested, in addition to the measures which we adopted and which I have advocated, to relieve the terrific unemployment and the desperate condition of the country. Though the President in 1929 recommended the construction program, which, however, he abandoned upon the demand of the Wall Street financiers and the big tax evaders, and though I myself have suggested other measures which would reestablish confidence and credit, the majority of the real economists believe that vast reconstruction on the part of the Government is absolutely essential to bring about reemployment, and therefore, I have yielded and the Democratic leaders have yielded and have followed the judgment of the students of economics and men who have the interest of the Nation at heart; and I feel confident that this program will receive almost unanimous support of the Democratic Members and that of a few independent Republicans who can not be controlled by the vicious Republican machine

I am satisfied, moreover, that the accusations and the charges that this is pork-barrel legislation will not be se-

I | riously taken by the American people. My own district is not receiving a single cent, and the city of Chicago hardly nothing; still, I am in favor of the bill, because I feel it is the only thing that has a chance of being passed. Oh, I realize that if you Republicans did not know that the President was controlled by the Anti-Saloon League and that he would veto any legislation, if passed, to repeal or amend the Volstead Act by permitting the manufacture and sale of beer, we could have had sufficient votes to amend the act, which would have given employment to 200,000 directly and 500,000 indirectly and would have netted from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000 revenue annually, and which, to my mind, would have been instrumental in aiding employment, reestablishing confidence, and allaying discontent.

It is clear to everyone that you have retarded every move to relieve conditions; and realizing this, we have brought in this resolution, for which I would never have voted if conditions did not make it obligatory upon us to relieve the critical conditions without delay and which gives the President $100,000,000 to use for the relief of the needy and provides for an increase in the bond issue of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and which also extends aid to the States and municipalities who no longer are able to feed their hungry people. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOPKINS]. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, by the use of the most partisan gag rule used in modern times the Democratic leaders are attempting to force the Members of this House to swallow this indefensible "pork barrel" bill. If this bill should become a law, it would provide for the most scandalous squandering of the public money ever known. Of course, it can not become a law. Even the Democratic leaders know this. No President with any sense of public trust could possibly sign such a bill for the plunder of the Treasury. Knowing this, why do they insist on making this a party measure and binding their membership by the ancient caucus pledge? The answer can only be, "to play politics and put the President and the Republican Congressmen in a hole."

One hundred and seventy-five post-office buildings in the State of Texas; 210 in the State of New York; 166 in the State of California; 63 in the State of Missouri. I am told, "You dare not vote against this bill; it gives you 9 or 10 post-office buildings in your section of the State." This same type of "pork" is held out to every Congressman here.

I believe I can give you the best illustration of the iniquitous methods used to get votes for this bill by giving you the facts from my own section of the State. The first Garner bill that was printed placed 10 post offices in my district, with a total cost of $720,000. I announced my opposition to this bill because such a program would make an added expense of $42,000 annually for upkeep and interest over present rental costs. The present average rental is less than $1,200 in each town or city, but under this public plunder bill the annual upkeep would be increased from 300 to 500 per cent in each case.

After I had announced my opposition to this squandering of public money in this needless fashion, let me tell you of the change that was made in this bill.

St. Joseph is the largest city in my district. Our post office in this city has had receipts of $602,000 in 1929, but this year they will be less than $500,000. In 1929 there were 133 employees, but there are now 130. The post office certainly is not overcrowded. If run by any private business, or by the city or State government, no consideration would be given to its enlargement. Yet this bill suddenly appears here with a $220,000 authorization for an addition to this building. Neither the Post Office Department nor the Treasury has recommended such an addition, and, therefore, the only possible reason for including it in this bill is to try to force me to accept this bill with its "pork" for Texas and elsewhere.

Of course this bill is only an authorization bill, and the authors of it no doubt know that no appropriation would ever be made for St. Joseph post-office building. It is included, as doubtless many hundreds of other buildings are, simply to "garner" votes.

Let me give another illustration of the type of indefensible methods used to try to get votes for this measure. South St. Joseph at present has a post office, although South St. Joseph is not really a city, and as a matter of fact has no population whatever. In South St. Joseph are found the livestock exchange, the packing plants, and other similar industries. The post office for this industrial community is of value largely because it is in the Live Stock Exchange Building, where the patrons of the office in almost their entirety have their headquarters. A post office in any other building would be almost useless. Yet this "public plunder" bill recommends a $70,000 post-office building. Of course no one expects it to ever be built, even if this bill is passed, but it is put in, as doubtless hundreds of other buildings were, to get votes so that we could build buildings in Texas. New York, and so forth.

The people are not going to be fooled. They realize that in the long run any building built in their community must be paid for by that community. They know that in the end it all comes out of the pocketbooks.

Think of it, with scarcely an exception, the authorization for post-office buildings in these thousands of small towns are larger than the cost of the high school in such towns. You can not fool the people in any such manner.

This is no time to be increasing the cost of running the Post Office Department by many millions of dollars annually. The demands coming from all over this country are to reduce Government expenses. This bill provides for great increases instead. During the past two decades, during the war, and since then there has been a gradual extension of regulatory and controlling arm of the Federal Government. It is time that this is stopped, and that all Government, Federal, State, and local expenditures be deflated back to pre-war basis. We have just passed the huge tax bill. The rates in this bill are in many instances discriminatory and unfair. They are going to bear heavily on the people of this country. Certainly, at a time when we are passing such tax rates it is no time to launch upon a public-building program. particularly when a great majority of the projects are not only not needed but will add millions of dollars to the cost of the annual burdens of the taxpayers of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce]. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, six months ago to-morrow the President of the United States sent to this Congress the usual message at the opening of a session—six months ago to-morrow. I would I had the time to analyze his recommendations for measures of relief, and point out the treatment they have received from this House.

Lest some gentlemen may not have heard what I said I want to repeat that six months ago to-morrow the President of the United States laid before this Congress his program to meet the distressing needs of the hour. Although I have not the time to describe in detail the treatment that program has received, I would call your attention to one thing the President said bearing upon the first title of the bill before us:

I am opposed to any direct or indirect Government dole. The breakdown and increased unemployment in Europe is due in part to such practices. Our people are providing against distress from unemployment in true American fashion by a magnificent response to public appeal and by action of the local governments.

On the following day, with the very first opportunity the party that had gained control of the House had to engage in general debate, the very first speaker they put on advocated the dole. This advocacy was so obnoxious to so many of the gentlemen on his own side of the House that they disclaimed the suggestion and gave us the impression that the dole would never get united Democratic support. Yet here it is in this bill—the dole, charity given by the Federal Government. Every argument against the dole that Democratic gentlemen had in their minds that day six months ago still exists.

Let me hasten on to the third title in the bill. The second title is not objectionable, but the third title can be best characterized if you will let me recall a picture I saw years ago I find it described to this effect, beginning—

Why does a donkey pull a cart?

The donkey being the symbol of the party presenting this bill, perchance its members here may find the question pertinent. The answer is:

Because there's a pole running over his head; and hung from the end of that pole, a foot in front of his nose, is a bundle of hay. Because that's just ahead of him, he pulls his cart all day long and doesn't care what they give him to eat while he's doing it. Why should he care? He has hopes. But, of course, he's only an ass.

Do not think the metaphor stretched if I suggest that as out there in Statuary Hall you may see the statue of a cleric carrying around a church in his arms, so some of you may hope to have your statues in Statuary Hall representing you as carrying around post offices in your arms.

I apply "donkey" to only one side of the House. I accept the term "ass" for both sides of the House. From personal experience I may inform you to that effect, for I have had a bundle of post-office fodder in front of my nose ever since I have been a Member here. A bill authorizing an appropriation for a post office in my city was passed in 1910—22 years ago. It has dangled in front of the noses of five Congressmen since that time. I pray you forswear the temptation of the post-office fodder dangling under your noses. [Laughter and applause.]

A site for that post office was presently bought. No action had followed before we entered the World War. Then public building was suspended for a period of years. Meantime the cost of building so rose that the appropriation would not suffice. Changes in local conditions made a different site desirable. The citizens would not agree as to what location should be taken. At last, 20 years after the original appropriation, agreement was reached. Then condemnation proceedings proved necessary, and they have not yet been finished. Plans have been drawn. The money is available. And now I find this very post office listed in the bill before us. On every hand I am told of like situations. The bill teems with absurdities that can have been put into it only through carelessness or to delude the uninformed.

Specific appropriation for post offices brings little but trouble to all of us. The quarrels over sites and the delays for which we are in fact not responsible worry and vex. Politically these buildings are as a rule far more a debit than an asset.

If, however, such of the appropriations here proposed as in fact have not already been made would really give quick employment in appreciable degree to any considerable number of men out of work, we might well sink our individual interests. That is not the case. Though my own experience in my own city may be exceptional, it is the fact that structural work on few of these buildings could begin before next spring and few would be finished within two years. Actual relief quickly would be negligible.

In greater or less degree the same argument applies to all proposals that involve appropriation. Anyhow that should be confined to projects which will not increase the tax burden-those that will return the investment, and so can be looked on as loans. Such has been our policy in all the programs we have taken six months in advancing. This should be better understood. It ought to be made common knowledge that the President has stood consistently and firmly for lending rather than spending. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is working with borrowed money, part lent by the Government, part by investors. The additional capital advanced to the Farm Loan Board is all to be repaid. That to be lent to the home-loan banks about. I am sure, to be created, is all to be repaid. If we are to lend to States and their subdivisions-counties and municipalities-that is to be repaid. There lies the path of prudence, the best path by which to help. Let lending, not spending, be the national duty in this crisis.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Michener].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, so far as the rule is concerned, I think it is pretty generally understood. The rule is a rule, the like of which—and I say this without fear of successful contradiction—so far as limitations are concerned, has never before been presented to Congress. The only right left in the individual Member is his constitutional prerogative to vote yes or no. If this rule passes the House it will be because of the party lash effectively wielded by our affable Speaker.

Under this procedure the House is asked to pass this bill carrying over $1,000,000,000, building hundreds of new post-office buildings, developing numerous river and harbor projects, and imposing additional taxes on the people without the bill ever being read to the Congress. Indeed, the rule provides that the bill shall not be read and that all amendments offered by the proponents of the bill from the Ways and Means Committee shall be in order, while not a single amendment may be offered by the general membership of the House.

We are assured that this is strictly a Democratic relief bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] tells us, "My party has attempted to bring in a relief bill and my party assumes responsibility." Conceived in the mind of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner], incubated in the committee room of the Democratic policy committee, exposed to view for the first time in a Democratic caucus, and finally christened and adopted by a bare majority of that caucus.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has told us that, if we on this side of the aisle oppose this bill, we are doing it for political reasons. The gentleman surely has forgotten the history of the bill, otherwise he is too careful a debater to mention politics. I say the Member who serves his country first in this tribunal at this time is serving his party best. There should be no politics in legislation of this kind, and I am sure that, so far as this side of the aisle is concerned, there will be no politics.

The bill has some good features, yet the awfulness of the pork-barrel provision will not permit many to vote for the bill without amendment.

It is refreshing to note that many of the unworthy projects have been eliminated in the final draft. The people of the country do not want more taxes now or in the future. They want economy in Government and expenses reduced. They want the Budget balanced. On yesterday the President signed the tax bill which went to the country, and we announced that Congress had balanced the Budget; and here we are before another sun sets adding additional expenses which will undo all that has been done. Every Member of Congress is "taken care of" in this bill. Postoffice buildings are authorized in towns where there are few people. Roads are to be built where they are not needed. Creeks and streams are to be dredged where they can be of no use at this time.

The initial cost is only the beginning. If this building program is carried out, there is placed upon the backs of our people additional annual expenses that they will be required to meet through taxation as long as the Republic endures. This bill will not only add additional expenses to people of our own day and generation but is mortgaging the taxes of generations yet unborn. The author of this bill in his generosity has seen fit to reward my district with a number of projects, some of which can be justified, and some of which can not under any conditions be justified in a day when prosperity is not with us and when we must limit ourselves to the necessities to the exclusion of luxury.

I plead with you, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hopkins] has pleaded with you, to permit amendments to this bill, so that it will not be necessary to needlessly spend $220,000 of the people's money in St. Joseph, Mo., where that money is not needed. The gentleman from Missouri says that this city does not need and does not want a post office at this time which will cost more than their local high-school building, yet by this drastic measure the author of this bill is forcing upon this community this building, and the local Representative of the community is prevented from an opportunity to explain and from the opportunity to offer an amendment in behalf of his own district. On yesterday the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson] told us of a building which was to be erected in his district which no one in the community wanted, which was not needed, and, as I remember it, he suggested that the cost of the post-office building contemplated would be greater than the value of the two townships adjoining. If this is Democratic relief and Democratic economy, as claimed by my friend from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], then we are perfectly willing that you should have the credit.

Those on this side of the aisle are not opposing the consideration of a relief bill, but we are opposing this method of consideration. No one will claim that this bill represents a mature judgment of anything like a majority of the House. The printed hearings were not available until an hour ago. The report of the committee was printed last night. All we are asking is that we be given an opportunity to propose amendments to strike out some of these provisions, and add other provisions if, in the opinion of the majority of the House, they are deemed advisable.

The distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER], who is at present occupying the chair of the Speaker, has given to the press a statement that he would not vote for this iniquitous bill, and that he was going to oppose this rule. Oh, yes; I can see the fine Italian hand of that splendid politician, the Speaker, in his strategy in putting the gentleman from Missouri in the chair to preside during the consideration of the rule. [Laughter and applause.]

I am not reflecting upon the very able gentleman from Missouri. He is a man of courage, an outstanding Member of this House. He refuses to subscribe to this kind of tactics, and he has the courage of his convictions, and there is no doubt but that statesmanship rather than political expediency is his dictator in this instance. His conscience is his guide, and if he had not been honored by being placed in the chair this afternoon I feel sure that he would be joining with me in protest.

Now I want to say just a word to my good friends who designate themselves as the "progressive group" on this side of the aisle. Many times you have expressed your views on gag rules. In personal conversation you have indicated to me that you would not vote for such rules; that you did not believe in being bound by caucus, much less bound by a rule which takes away from you your right to function as a representative of your people. The vote which you are about to cast will attest to your sincerity in this behalf, for you never have and you never will have an opportunity to vote for a more objectionable rule from your standpoint. Let me make it clear that those who feel that there should be an opportunity to strike out some of the pork-barrel provisions of this bill and amend the bill in accordance with the views of the majority of the House should vote against the previous question. This will not be a vote against the rule and will not prevent consideration of the bill, but it will make it possible for the House to decree that the bill must be read and will be subject to amendment. I say to those who conscientiously believe that there should be relief legislation of some kind that by voting for this rule, which means the adoption of this bill without any change whatever, that you are not helping relief legislation but hindering it. The President has stated through the press and to the country that he does not favor and will not support this pork-barrel bill as presented, and even though the bill should pass the House and the Senate it could not become a law. If this is true, then, at the most, this is only a gesture toward relief. It may serve a political purpose, but it will not in the end feed the hungry or bring about employment. Let us broaden the rule and write a sound, logical, effective relief bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in deciding between the relief for human suffering and my preference to a parliamentary procedure, I must decide in favor of alleviating human suffering. [Applause.] The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] states that the like of this rule has never been offered to the House of Representatives in the history of the country. That is true. But, gentlemen, the like of the misery and distress that exists to-day has never been before the American Congress in the history of the country. [Applause.] It is apparent that every gentleman who has opposed this rule has opposed it on base political grounds. Has there been any constructive suggestion made as to what the opponents to the rule would offer in place of this bill? Clearly the opposition seems to be not so much against the rule as against the plan for immediate relief. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] said, and I took down his words, "Forget party." Yes, Mr. MICHENER, this indeed is the time to "forget party"; this is the time to put country ahead of party, and I for one am willing to "forget party" and cross over the line and join with the Democrats in passing this much-needed relief measure. That is the concrete way to "forget party." There is no other bill for immediate relief of the unemployment situation before us. This bill provides the legislative vehicle to obtain a real, constructive, effective relief measure satisfactory to both Houses and the Executive. We must start somewhere.

Let us analyze the bill. What is the opposition to the bill? Why, the $100,000,000 for immediate direct relief. If the rule were not as it is, the first amendment would be to strike out the $100,000,000 of direct relief. Gentlemen, direct relief is imperative, people are hungry, and the number of the needy is growing so rapidly that local government and private charity can not take care of them. You can not accuse Speaker GARNER or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] or the Democratic Party with playing politics with this item when they take $100,000,000 for direct relief and place it in the hands of a Republican President of the United States. My only objection is that $100,000,000 is not sufficient. I am sure the Senate will increase the amount. This is no time to indulge in academic discussions on constitutional limitations when American men, women, and children are in want, in dire distress.

Let me pause for a moment to say, in reply to many statements, that the contents of the bill are unknown, that if any Member admits that he does not know what is in the bill and is waiting for the Clerk to read it in order to find out, that such Member is not doing his legislative duty properly.

Every opportunity was offered to the membership of the House to appear before the Ways and Means Committee. Many of us appeared before that committee. I appeared before the committee. I had time to study the original draft of the bill and so had every other Member of the House. I suggested to the Ways and Means Committee a proposition to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to provide loans for housing to limited dividend corporations, so that we might in this period of depression provide sanitary, cheerful dwellings at reasonable ratesthereby permitting the tearing down of the slums in many cities that are a disgrace to American civilization. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will offer an amendment providing for housing in this bill. I am grateful to the committee. [Applause.] The home loan bill has already been reported out favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency and to-day a rule for its consideration has been reported by the Rules Committee. That is part of the general relief program.

We come now to all this protest about Title III of the bill and the hypocrisy of the opposition to Title III. No one contends that the public-works program may be placed under the scrutiny of necessity and urgency. That is not the purpose of this program. The purpose of Title III of the bill is to stimulate industry, purchase material, provide employment. It is an artificial stimulus to industry. Only the extreme necessity of a most critical national condition prompts this vast program of public works, public buildings that otherwise would not be necessary. If we were living in normal times, if we had no unemployment, if we had no tottering banks, if our industries were not on the brink of bankruptcy, we would not be considering this public-buildings program. This public-works plan is in keeping with the suggestions of the President of the United States, not once stated, but repeatedly urged upon the country. must do something. We must attempt to place part of the unfortunate unemployed to work. We must be daring in our efforts to artificially stimulate industry and provide employment. If there is any gentleman here who has any objection to any post office in this bill, I suggest he give the page and line to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and he will strike it from the bill. The slightest intimation of opposition will prevent the building of any post office provided in the bill. The condition of industrial and financial depression, unemployment, and poverty, is such that it makes no difference where any new building or public work is located.

No one can put up a building out of nothing. It takes steel and iron and stone and cement and wood and paint and glass and hardware. All that goes into building. That is all the product of human labor. Men take the floor and in one breath say they are against a dole and also oppose indirect relief by creating employment. If one is against the dole, here is the indirect way of affording relief. How can anyone say that he is against the dole and at the same time oppose a program of public works as a relief measureunless there is absolute indifference to the condition of the country and existing distress? At this very time while some are playing politics here there is misery all over the country. Misery in every city, in every State of the Union. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] referred to the statement of the President of the United States made six months ago as to the obligation of each community to care for its own needy. Six months ago the municipalities and the local authorities and private charity were taking care of and feeding the unemployed. True. For more than six months millions of unemployed have been partially cared for by local authorities and private charities. But nearly all funds are now depleted. They can not be replenished and therefore it is necessary that Congress take heroic measures to-day in order to meet the situation. Talk about balancing the Budget. What good is a theoretical balancing the Budget to-day if industry continues to go down and if unemployment continues to go up? A balanced Budget under such conditions will be of no avail.

I appeal to my fellow progressives in this extreme moment to stand together courageously in order to compel legislative action for immediate relief. This is no time for quibbling. The progressive vote in this House will decide this important vote. I am confident my progressive colleagues will measure up to the occasion. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 205, nays 189, not voting 36, answered "present," 1, as follows:

Mr. COLLINS. No, Mr. Speaker. It was impossible for me to get here in time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445), to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12445), with Mr. Cooper of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this morning in the Speaker's room a committee of mayors and representatives of the great cities of the United States assembled and presented a resolution which has been read from the Clerk's desk, and discussed with the Speaker and the committee selected by the Speaker, the question of relief for the cities of the United States.

The mayor of the city of Detroit made the astonishing statement that in the United States at the present time there is more unemployment than there is in all of Europe. This condition has been brought about under an administration which prides itself and which loudly proclaims that it brings with it always prosperity. At the present time, under the policies of this administration and on account of its failure to accept the method of disposing of surplus crops suggested by the nonpartisan farm bureaus, there is accumulated one year's supply of wheat, and another crop coming on; two year's supply of mohair and another crop coming on; one year's supply of cotton, and another crop coming on; one year's supply of tobacco, and another crop coming on. This is the situation under the party which to-day opposes this bill.

Under the policies of that party, and as a direct result of a bill which was put through the House two years ago, levying the highest tariffs in history, retaliatory tariffs have been built up, and international trade is paralyzed, and our ships are rusting in our harbors. This is the kind of statesmanship provided by the last three administrations, and this is where it has landed us. It is time now to substitute a different brand of statesmanship [applause], and we are doing it in this bill.

This is the kind of bill proposed by the President in his campaign addresses more than once. This is the kind of bill that was suggested in the Republican Party platform. This is the kind of bill which was proposed by the President since his election, and he started to carry it out. There was another election in the middle of his term, and subsequent elections in Congressional districts, and the complexion of this House changed, until the responsibility of initiating remedial measures in this time of depression depends upon the Democratic side of the Chamber. So the Speaker of the House of Representatives inaugurated this method of relief, and as soon as he did, the President and his Cabinet and all of his satellites and nearly all of the Representatives, most of them, on the Republican side of the Chamber. denounced it as a "pork-barrel measure." This is the method of relief proposed by all economists who have ever written upon this subject for a depression like this. I challenge the gentlemen on the Republican side to call attention to any economist in this world who has ever written upon this subject who does not advocate retarding public works and public buildings in times of prosperity and accelerating them in a time of depression. [Applause.]

This is the greatest depression this country ever had. No other country in the world was ever subjected to the depression under which we are now struggling along. At the present time no other country in the world has a deficit so large as ours. In the last three years we have expended over $3,500,000,000 more than we collected at our ports, and that money is wasted, all of it; we might as well have taken it to the top of this Capitol and thrown it to the winds.

If, following the theories of all economists and of all real statesmen who have ever lived in this world—I am sorry you do not have more of them in your party—this program of public works had commenced when this depression commenced, there would have been no depression [applause] and this measure would not now have been necessary. Of course we are putting it through under a rule. We are putting it through under a rule because we have got just a meager majority on this side, and we do not propose to let you gentlemen who are enemies of the bill ruin it on the floor. [Applause.] The rule against which you complain so much we borrowed from you when you refused to permit amendments except committee amendments to the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. [Applause.] That is your precedent, and we have adopted it now in piloting this bill through the House.

This bill simply carries authorizations; that is all. Congress makes appropriations hereafter. None are authorized in the bill. The interdepartmental committee selects the buildings from this list which are to be built in the near future; they have that discretion. The Appropriations Committee of the House appropriates and it can accept the suggestions of the interdepartmental committee or not; and if any of you heroic patriots on the Republican side of the House do not want any of these public buildings built in your districts, all you have to do is to go to the interdepartmental committee and say you do not want them. Take that responsibility and I will guarantee you that as long as the Appropriations Committee is a Democratic committee you will not get them. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, on Monday, June 6, the President signed the revenue bill intended to balance the Budget during the next fiscal year and to restore and maintain the credit of the United States.

To-day the Senate proposes to vote on the economy bill for the reduction of Federal expenditures, which is part of the plan for balancing the Budget.

To-day the House is to vote on a bill under a special rule that not only will have an adverse effect on credit, public and private, but will negate the effects of the tax bill by adding tremendous burdens on the Government. Previous legislation during this session has made a promise of better things to the ears of the American people, but this bill will break it to the hope so induced in one grand assault on the Treasury. It is a shrewdly constructed machine, intended to run into every State and district, delivering a diverse and sundry assortment of projects, including a large quantity of half-grown and underdeveloped Federal buildings. I can imagine Mr. Congressman returning to his district, proudly carrying a sack over his shoulder and saying to the friends assembled to greet his return, "Well, I have brought home the bacon." Seeing in the throng an elderly citizen affectionately called Uncle Matt by his fellow townsmen, he opens the sack and takes out an undersized public building and says, "Uncle Matt, I brought this one to this town in your honor." Uncle Matt turns it over with the toe of his boot and says, with a sigh, "Well, I didn't know I was respected so little."

The fuel to be used to make this machine go is a vast amount of the people's dollars, however it may be attempted to disguise that fact.

The proclaimed purpose is that of relief for the unemployed, a laudable purpose. But the tragedy is that so little relief will be afforded, only a comparatively small proportion of the unemployed, even if those indirectly as well as those directly employed are included, and there is also added some circulation of the moneys expended. The employment will be temporary. Thus we have the picture: Some employment for a time, and then inactivity and an increased burden of debt. And that is not the solution of the problem.

During the hearings it was repeatedly asked how many persons would be employed under Title III of this bill. The answers afforded no definite information, and if taken at the maximum that might be inferred, indicated but a very minor fraction of the total unemployment. Large classes will not be aided at all. There are tens of thousands of localities that will not be included in this expensive scheme, and no opportunity is provided whereby they can obtain relief.

Mr. Speaker Garner, in his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means, said that he estimated the amount that could be expended the first year would be $400,000,000. When asked how many persons he thought could be employed by the expenditure of that amount of money, he was not prepared to estimate, and we do not know to this good day whether 500,000 or 600,000 people can be employed or not.

A motion to recommit will be offered to strike out and substitute proposals that will enlist all available agencies-State. county, municipal, or other agencies constituted by State or Federal laws-in a nation-wide movement for relief, on a self-sustaining basis. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be given added powers; its authority to sell its debentures will be increased by $1,800,000,000. It will be authorized to loan to States the sum of $300,000,000, to be dispensed by the State, and $1,500,000,000 to States, municipalities, or other agencies created by State or Federal law to engage in self-liquidating operations, in useful works affording employment of labor, that will be of permanent benefit. The public debt will not be increased; the credit of the United States will not be attacked; and the Budget, which after great labor we have balanced at an enormous cost to the taxpayers, will not be again unbalanced.

What will we have accomplished if after requiring on the one hand in the tax bill great sacrifices by the people on the other hand we nullify it by this pending bill, which is the longest rake ever thrust into the Treasury of the United States. a $2.500.000.000 rake.

I now give an analysis of the proposed substitute.

Sections 1, 2, and 3 of the foregoing proposed substitute for H. R. 12445, for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make emergency loans or advances to the various States up to an aggregate sum of $300,000,000. States which can show, first, the necessity for funds to relieve unemployment, and, second, that all reasonable means of obtaining funds otherwise have been exhausted, may borrow from the corporation upon such terms, including interest, as the corporation may require, for periods not exceeding five years. A loan under this authorization must be made upon the unconditional obligation of the State, and the application therefor must be accompanied by proper authorization of the State legislature.

Should any State find itself unable to repay any such emergency loan in accordance with the conditions under which it was made, provision is made in the substitute to withhold sums, not exceeding annually one-fifth of the unpaid indebtedness, out of moneys due from the United States for the use of the State. These deductions would be made ordinarily from Federal appropriations in the nature of grants to the States for other purposes.

In the case of a State which is unable to provide needed funds because of constitutional inhibitions against borrowing for the purpose, emergency advances may be made by the corporation under such terms and conditions as the corporation may determine, and upon the assurance of the governor of the State that he will recommend the necessary legislative action to fund such advances into loans. Under this plan for emergency advances, the State is given 18 months in which to remedy its inability to borrow. At the end of the 18 months' period, moneys may be withheld from funds payable to the State for other purposes, in the same manner as in the case of emergency loans.

Sections 4, 5, and 6 of the substitute would amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act for the principal purpose of providing for additional employment through the construction of economically sound projects. For this purpose the corporation would be authorized to make loans to States or municipalities, or public agencies such as port authorities, or to private corporations such as bridge companies, for the financing of the construction or replacement of economically sound and useful projects which will provide employment at an early date for a substantial number of persons. These loans would be subject to the same limitations as other loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in respect to the period within which they may be made and the amounts which may be granted to any one corporation, and they could be made for periods not in excess of five years upon such terms and conditions as the corporation may require as to the repayment of principal and interest. The substitute would require that each loan be fully and adequately secured, and that there be a showing that the borrower is unable to obtain sufficient funds for the purpose upon reasonable terms through other channels. In addition, the project for which funds would be required must be one which when completed would yield sufficient income to be self-sustaining, including repayment of principal and interest on the loan.

The corporation would also be authorized to make loans to aid in the carrying and orderly marketing of staple commodities produced in the United States.

In addition to these powers, the corporation would be directed to allocate $50,000,000 to the Federal Farm Board to make additional loans under its existing authority to cooperative associations and stabilization corporations. Sums up to $50,000,000 are also allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to finance the exportation of agricultural commodities produced in the United States, under limitations as to periods within which loans may be made and the maturities thereof similar to those applying to loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. A corresponding reduction of not exceeding $50,000,000 is made in the amounts otherwise to be allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

The limitation in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act which prevents the corporation from financing new enterprises is removed by this proposed substitute, and the power of the corporation to borrow is increased from three times to six times its subscribed capital stock. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Ragon].

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I shall try to take up certain features of this bill that have been more or less under fire this morning in the general debate on the rule. I think, perhaps, I could approach the subject in a better way if I would get rid of the rubbish first, and I think, perhaps, that which apparently disturbs the Republicans more than anything else is what they have been pleased to term the "porkbarrel" provisions of the bill wherein a program of public buildings in this country is provided.

I might say that under the four provisions which provide for public buildings in this country that every project in the first three sections has been authorized by the Interdepartmental Committee.

The first provision carries an authorization of $174,000,000. The second authorization in section 302 carries $5,000,000. Section 303 provides $90,000,000 for projects authorized by the Interdepartmental Committee.

In section 304 is carried those offices that have postal receipts from $10,000 to $20,000, and the original bill carries an appropriation for the construction of these buildings of $70,000,000.

Then section 305 provides for the construction of buildings that have postal receipts of between $3,000 and $10,000, and the original bill calls for an appropriation of $22,500,000 to carry out that provision. The total of these two sections amounts to $105,000,000.

Now, it is well for you to remember that in section 304, which originally carried an appropriation of $70,000,000, the Interdepartmental Committee has already made a survey of each and every one of these projects. The only projects that have not been surveyed have been those with postal receipts between $8,000 and $10,000.

The Ways and Means Committee has reduced the amount carried in these two sections—and I hope the gentleman will get this-from $105,000,000 to $73,000,000. In other words, the maximum amount that may be spent for a post office authorized under section 304 has been reduced from $70,000 to $50,000, and the maximum amount under section 305 has been reduced from $55,000 to $35,000. So the amounts in the so-called pork barrel feature of the bill, about which so much Republican clamor has been heard, amount now to the sum of $73,000,000 in place of $105,000,000. How many people will be given employment under this public-building program? It is difficult to estimate just how many will be employed. You can best estimate this by taking the amount in each dollar of the appropriation which goes directly and indirectly to labor. The best authorities on labor statistics estimate that between 75 and 80 cents of every dollar spent for public buildings goes for labor. You can figure fairly accurately the number to be directly employed, but it is difficult to estimate the number employed in manufacturing the brick, timber, steel, and so forth, going into these buildings as indirect labor.

These buildings at some time will be built, so why not stimulate business all over the country in this time of depression by constructing them now?

Mr. SANDLIN. Would it interfere with the gentleman if I asked him a question?

Mr. RAGON. Not at all.

Mr. SANDLIN. Under the provisions of this bill, could any money be furnished for the purpose of extending loans to those people who have mortgages on their farm, having borrowed from the Federal land banks?

Mr. RAGON. I will say to my friend it is my construction that money could be furnished for that purpose. The only question there is the question of adequate security, and remember, gentlemen, there can not be one dollar of this money borrowed save and except upon adequate security. I will get to that a little bit later.

Mr. SANDLIN. However, a farmer who has his farm entirely mortgaged does not have adequate security.

Mr. RAGON. That is true. But the Federal land bank can borrow money on that mortgage as adequate security, and that will enable the bank to extend the loan to the farmer and prevent foreclosing on his farm. So, gentlemen, the question of pork barrel finally resolves itself to the small item of $75,000,000 in this bill, unless you are disposed to call rivers and harbors projects pork barrel, and whenever you do that you are condemning a bunch of projects that have been passed upon, after careful consideration, by the Army engineers in the War Department, and also projects that have been passed upon by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. What better authority you could have for that I do not know.

If there is anything in this bill that does not come within that yardstick, then the gentlemen upon whom we have relied have improperly checked it. In every dollar spent for rivers and harbors and flood control, 76 cents thereof goes to labor directly and indirectly. We have provided $150,000,000 for road construction, and 80 cents out of every dollar goes for labor. We have provided $22,500,000 for Army housing, and 75 cents out of every dollar goes for labor. While all this will not give employment to all the idle, it will stimulate a purchasing power which will be felt by every one.

Now, gentlemen, it is a question as to whether or not you want to go into the matter of giving some relief to the unemployed of this country. Cabinet officers and officers of the American Federation of Labor and other organizations came before our committee and the statement was made there that to-day there are out of employment in this country over 8,000,000 of men. Is this Congress going to adjourn and make no provision whatever for the employment of that great multitude of men in this country? The President said in his acceptance speech, as I recall it now, that the public-buildings program and rivers and harbors program would furnish employment to a great army of men. He has reiterated that time and again on up to the present day. He said in 1923 we should let up on building programs in prosperous times in order to do this work to help unemployment in times of depression.

Now, gentlemen, I want you to remember this: That everything in this bill is a capital investment and most everything. I believe, will be what you might bring under the technical definition of a profit-bearing institution.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Title II, on page 3, refers to loans to States. What will be done in the case of a State like mine, which, under its constitution, is prohibited from borrowing money or taking a loan of that kind?

Mr. RAGON. I would say to the gentleman from Missouri that I intended to take that up later, but I will get to it right now. Let us take our good common horse sense and look at this proposition of extending the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been a good thing, but its chief purpose has been to merely serve as a stop-gap. There is no doubt in my mind but what it has saved from utter ruin multiplied thousands of farmers and hundreds and hundreds of business concerns. I might use my own State as an illustration. We were having bank failures of big and little banks almost daily, but there have been no failures, with the exception of one small bank, in my State since this corporation began its work. [Applause.] Thus it has been a great protection to the directors, the stockholders, the depositors, the employees of the institutions, credit-business men, and the laborers, who suffered most from a contraction of credit as a result of bank failures. It has saved from bankruptcy other institutions which employ many thousands of men, supporting many different communities in this country. In my own State it has loaned to different institutions approximately $9,000,000. In the same act which created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation there was made available for crop-production purposes to the farmers a sum of $200,000,000. In my State 47,443 farmers have taken advantage of this provision and have borrowed $4,102,428. Throughout the country the Government has loaned under this act to farmers for cropproduction purposes over sixty-five millions of dollars. This money has gone to that tenant farmer who could no longer get credit from his friend in the mercantile business, or his friend the landlord, or his friend the banker. In this dire extremity his Government has beneficently come and supplied his most urgent needs.

If you will notice, there is a great gap of American citizens who can not avail themselves of the provision of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and in this gap is represented the man who stands between the small farmer and the banks and other industries helped by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. There is the landowner, the small business man, and the small industry that can not participate in these Government loans. Then there is the State. the municipality, and even the school district which have perfectly good bonds on their hands which, if salable at all. must be sold at a great sacrifice. Under the provisions of the bill we are now considering the purpose of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been extended so as to advance loans to individuals, industries, and States and subdivisions thereof when and if adequate security can be given for these loans. We must not lose sight of the needs of the average man in America.

Secretary Mills the other day in the Ways and Means Committee attempted to belittle this provision by saying that the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be deluged with resquests for loans from every little fellow in this country who had a "flivver." Well, I asked the Secretary to take the case of the average man who might want to borrow several thousand dollars and could put a number of men to work in a profit-producing industry. He thought that might be a fine thing. I am afraid the Secretary is looking too much to the aid of the big fellow and is losing sight of the needs of the average man. We find owners of large and small business concerns, owners of large and small farms, and owners of large and small industries who could start beating it back to prosperity if they could but find a little finance. Their home banks can not provide it.

If the Government can loan to the great railroads and the large banking and insurance institutions of the country, by what argument can you deny the average farmer and business man the same opportunity? We are trying to stimulate business conditions, to bring back prosperity, and rehabilitate the broken economic conditions of this country, and in this we must not forget the average man. Certainly we can trust the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to see that this provision is not abused.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyerl I will say that we had up the very same question he raises yesterday afternoon in committee, and it was the unanimous opinion of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee that this bill as it is will take care of the gentleman's situation, due to the fact that it provides for a loan to municipalities, States, and subdivisions, public and quasi-public corporations, and regardless of what the constitutional requirements of the State of Missouri may be, we feel that St. Louis and Kansas City unquestionably come within the terms of the bill.

So I think some of the wisest provisions that have been covered in the way of relief is the relief provided for under the extension of power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I want to discuss Title I, providing that the President, through such agencies as he may select, distribute in loans or gifts $100,000,000 to organizations, States, and municipalities to provide for the necessaries of life of those who suffer for food or clothing. He may furnish money or supplies if it becomes necessary. He is enabled to furnish under this act wheat for food and cotton for clothing.

I was disappointed in my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce], in condemning this as a dole.

You had up there this morning in the gallery seven mayors from great cities in this country. They represented the organization of the mayors of all the great cities of the country sent here to appeal to the leaders of the Congress to do something in the way of direct relief, in view of the fact they had stripped themselves bare in making provision for the poor and suffering upon their streets. They said they wanted direct relief. Well, how are you going to give it to them? The man who gets ready to vote against this bill, let him answer to the American people, the starving and the hungry, how he is going to give them relief.

Sitting in that gallery was Mayor Murphy, of Detroit, Mich.

Mr. AMLIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. I shall be pleased to yield in just a moment. That gentleman is the mayor of a city that has fed thousands of people through the last 365 days. I do not know how many he is now feeding, but the last report I had from the city of Detroit showed they were feeding 80,000 men.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Not now. I will yield to the gentleman in just a moment.

And yet my friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] got up here, knowing conditions in that great metropolis of Michigan, when this bill carries $100,000,000 for the purpose of aiding and assisting those starving people, and admitted that he had not even read the bill. Go to Chicago! It was stated before our committee that the city of Chicago is feeding one-half million people and the school-teachers of that city are going without their pay. The city is bankrupt. How are you going to feed these people this winter? You had better think twice before you vote against this bill.

Then, St. Louis. We were told in our committee that 125,000 people in the city of St. Louis are being fed, and if I am not mistaken and recall correctly, they have floated some kind of bond issue to feed these people.

Mr. DYER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman— Mr. RAGON. If I am not correct, I would like for the gentleman to correct me.

Mr. DYER. There has been no bond issue floated. We have been able to take care of the situation, and so far as I know the mayor of my city of St. Louis is not a party to this memorial.

Mr. RAGON. I do not care what the gentleman's mayor says, I am taking this from the testimony of at least two individuals who said that the city is feeding 125,000 people and that they are not able to do it any longer.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Notwithstanding what may be said, does not the gentleman know that the reason Chicago is not paying its school teachers is because of improper connivance of officials and taxpayers not to collect the taxes?

Mr. RAGON. Did my friend ever stop to think how little difference that makes to a man who is hungry and has a hungry wife and children?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for one brief question farther?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Does that excuse the officials in not collecting that which is properly due the city for the purpose of making these payments?

Mr. RAGON. I do not know anything about the gentleman's politicians out in Chicago. I am talking about the people on the bread lines in Chicago. How are you going to feed them?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. They are not my politicians and I repudiate them just as the gentleman does.

Mr. RAGON. I certainly do not care for them and I will repudiate the politicians with the gentleman, but I do not want him to repudiate the pleas of hungry men and women.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to obtain some information. If the large cities, which pay the biggest burden of taxation to the Federal Government, can not feed their hungry to-day, how can they expect to feed them by paying additional taxes and only getting a small percentage of such taxes back with which to feed them? Are you going to get your money from the League of Nations, or some place of that sort?

Mr. RAGON. I will let the gentleman answer to the hungry and the starving in the city of Milwaukee. The gentleman can answer them in November; and let me tell the gentleman something: They will not appreciate all this kidding and heckling about their condition that the gentleman is doing on this floor to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RAGON. No; I can not yield further.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. We ought to be able to carry on the affairs of this House without the assistance of the galleries, and I object to the applause that comes from the galleries in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and admonishes the galleries that the rules of the House prohibit any expression of approval or disapproval from the galleries, and any repetition of such conduct will result in the galleries being cleared.

Mr. RAGON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Horkins] complains against this bill because it has a post-office building in his home town which is not needed. He overlooks the provision for feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, and the provision for helping the average fellow all because some building is provided in the bill of which he disapproves. The gentleman could have talked on the telephone to any member of the Ways and Means Committee and this objection would have been removed. In that event he could have supported the finer purposes of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, you not only have these needy in the cities, but you have them as well in the countryside—men, women, and little children underfed and underclothed, existing on a mere pittance of food and raiment. The greatness of their citizenship is attested by the patience and restraint with which they have held themselves in these conditions.

Oh, but some of my friends say this provision is a dole. There is the great city of New York, whose hungry people it can not feed—Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, and many other cities the same way. If the Government of the United States advances to them on adequate security half a million dollars to assist in feeding those hungry people, how can it become a dole? When did we ever get so distasteful to a dole of this character?

I remember about the first session of Congress when I came here Mr. Newton, of Missouri, got down here in the aisle, stained his cheeks with tears, and told about the starving women and children in Germany.

Mr. RAINEY. I yield the gentleman three minutes more. Mr. RAGON. And when he was through his speech this House, Democrats and Republicans alike, opened the purse of the United States and voted $20,000,000 worth of wheat to Germany. Who hollered "dole" then?

We have opened the granaries of the Federal Farm Board and contributed 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to the starving people of this country. Who called that a dole?

Just before I came to Congress old communistic Russia, or some of her emissaries, appealed to us to relieve the starving people of Russia, and we did so by giving them $20,000,000 to help feed the 100,000 starving people of that country.

What is new about this character of legislation anyway? As far back as 1812 we gave a contribution of $50,000 to the earthquake sufferers in Venezuela; in 1909 we gave $800.000 to Italy as a relief to the poor and suffering; in 1911 we gave a generous appropriation to China for the starving in that country; in 1919 we gave to the President of the United States $100,000,000 as a relief against suffering in Europe outside of Germany. Who cried "dole" when we were opening our Treasury to these foreign countries? What magic is it that permits contributions to Europe without a complaint, and then condemns a "mercy" fund to the starving men, women, and children in America as a "dole"? The President does not have to spend one penny of this unless it is needed. But who would have the President withhold this sum or any additional sum if it meant to keep the pangs of hunger from the tender body of childhood and the innocent and unoffending men and women out of employment?

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield? He talks about the starving people in Detroit. I want to say that we are feeding people from Arkansas.

Mr. RAGON. Yes; and we are feeding fellows from Michigan down in Arkansas. That is what I am trying to get you to see, so that we can get the money to feed them all.

Who dispenses the money? The President of the United States, and he may select any agency he sees fit to disburse the money to the relief of the needy. Who is there who does not trust the President of the United States to properly disburse this "mercy fund"? If it is not needed, he does not have to use it. If more is needed, we will be here in December and we can supplement the amount provided for in this bill if necessary.

We have sat here through seven months and no adequate relief for unemployment has ever been suggested by the administration until the Garner plan broke into action.

We have got to do something. I think it is in the heart and in the mind of every Member of Congress that we can not wait for Congress to adjourn to do this thing. I say let us not adjourn and leave the possibility of some little child in this country, under the protection of that flag, suffer from the pangs of hunger during the coming winter. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, this day will go down in history as marking the passage in the House of Representatives of the "gaggiest" gag rule ever known in the history of parliamentary procedure and the consideration at least of the greatest pork barrel bill ever known in the history of the American Congress.

This bill reminds me of the chorus to a song my father used to sing to me when I was a boy as he jounced me on his knees. It was popular in the days when the Government land in the West was thrown open for settlement. It ran something like this:

Come along, come along, don't be alarmed, Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm.

To make it apply to the present situation the word "post office" has only to be substituted for "farm." It would then read:

Come along, come along, don't be alarmed, Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a post office.

The only trouble with it is that Uncle Sam is not rich enough now to give us all a post office, and the passage of this bill will tend to put him into bankruptcy, but the Democrats must have adopted some such slogan the other day when they voted in caucus to bind themselves to vote for this legislation without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

The only possible justification for the building and river and harbor improvement program in this bill is the work which it may furnish to the unemployed. It violates every principle of sound economics. The expenditures of the Government are already greater than its receipts. The Government is having all it can do, if not more, to raise enough revenue to pay for the necessities of Government, to say nothing of luxuries such as this bill provides.

Yesterday the President signed the revenue bill, by which it is hoped to raise enough revenue, after radical reductions in expenditures are made, to balance the Budget. If this bill should pass, it would more than undo everything Congress has done in its effort to balance the Budget.

What this bill proposes to do is well illustrated by the statement of the Secretary of War, Mr. Hurley, before the Committee on Ways and Means in describing his experience. He said:

I have just gotten through with another committee of the House of Representatives, a most staggering fight, in which they cut my department $80,000,000, $61,000,000 on my own suggestion. In fact, I finally agreed to $19,000,000 more on top of the $61,000,000. We have cut that appropriation to the bone. * * * Now another committee calls me here and tells me not only to spend the amount of that saving that we have made at the expense of the national defense but to spend more than $537,000,000.

In other words, if this bill passes the War Department alone will be compelled to spend, in addition to the regular appropriations for that department, nearly as much as the most optimistic estimates of the total savings in appropriations for the next fiscal year provided for in the appropriation bills already passed and to be passed, to say nothing of the additional expenditures which this bill will require other departments to make.

This bill provides for five new post offices and an addition to another in my congressional district. Some of them are urgently needed, but the people do not want the Government to go farther into debt to build them at this time. The number of unemployed that would be relieved by putting this program into effect is insignificant as compared with the total number of unemployed. It is more essential to the communities affected that their factories be opened up and that they be enabled to furnish employment to the unemployed in the normal way. The number of men who could be put to work in building a new post office at Grand Rapids, for example, is insignificant as compared to the number that could go back to work by the opening up of a single furniture factory now closed which employs from 400 to 1,400 people in normal times.

The passage of this bill will retard the ultimate recovery of the country and delay by just that much the recovery of private industry, the opening up of our local factories, which, after all, must be depended upon to furnish employment to the great body of our people. The harm which its passage would do would be infinitely greater than any good it could possibly do.

This is no time for anyone, let alone the Government, to be spending money which he has not got on nonproductive and uneconomic enterprises or projects which will not pay for themselves. The Government can not spend itself back into prosperity any more than an individual can. It is only a collection of individuals. It can not pull itself out of this depression by borrowing money to put into nonproductive enterprises any more than an individual can. Who would think it wise to build a bigger and better home or to enlarge his old one when he was unable to pay for the upkeep of the old one? What banker would be foolish enough to loan him money to do so?

One of the first essentials to the recovery of prosperity in this country is that the Federal Government keep its credit good. If prosperity is ever to return to the country, the Federal Government at least must keep solvent. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woon].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this session of Congress the leaders on both sides of the House gave a statement to the public that they were going to use, so far as possible, their influence against the reporting of any bill carrying an appropriation that was not recommended by the Budget. The Committee on Appropriations has kept that agreement. We have not reported a single appropriation which was not recommended by the Budget; and, in addition, every appropriation bill that has come before this House has been cut under the Budget estimate, so great was the desire of the Committee on Appropriations to save money to the Treasury of the United States. Now, for the first time and in the closing days of the session, this agreement, had at the beginning of this Congress, is violated by the leaders on the Democratic side. This bill was not submitted to the Budget for its consideration, because gentlemen on the Democratic side knew full well that they never would obtain the recommendation of the Budget. Another thing I wish to impress on the committee is that this is the first time a caucus has been held on a legislative matter by the Democrats since the Underwood tariff bill was passed 19 years ago. When we have had bills up before this House during this session the purpose of which was to put money into the Treasury, there was no caucus held by the Democrats; but now that you propose to take more than $2,000,000,000 out of the Treasury, you hold a caucus for that purpose. When the tax bill was under consideration and ably presented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], there was no caucus to help him carry that bill, which would have been far better than the bill finally passed. When that bill came to final vote in this House it received more votes on the Republican side than it did on the Democratic side, so far as the policy advocated by the leaders on the Democratic side is concerned. When we had the economy bill under consideration, reported from the Economy Committee carrying $260,000 .-000 of saving to the Treasury, no caucus was held on that bill on the Democratic side which was responsible for either its passage or its defeat. What was the result? It went out of here carrying a measly $32,000,000 of savings. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] said to the gentlemen on the Republican side, "If you do not want any of these post offices, all you have to do is to tell the interdepartmental committee that you do not want them." The Members on the Republican side do not have to do that. The people back home already are doing it.

I have before me now a dispatch from Bryan, Ohio, where the citizens of that town and the surrounding country notified their Democratic Congressman that they did not want the post office, provided for them in this bill, at the expense of the Treasury under present conditions, and urged him not only to vote against it but also to vote against all of these wasteful proposals embodied in this measure.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. When the Interior Department appropriation bill came before the House the leader of the Democratic Party, Mr. Byrns, led the fight to cut out millions of dollars for public works to give aid to unemployment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct. And that is not all that Mr. Byrns, the able chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has done to save the Treasury of the United States. He has worked day and night in his efforts to reduce appropriations, and to his tireless efforts may be largely accredited much of the reduction that has been made in the several appropriation bills.

When we had the Treasury-Post Office bill on this floor for consideration the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] inquired of Chairman Byrns why it was that the sixth installment of the building program from the Treasury Department was not included in that appropriation bill. Mr. BYRNS replied as follows:

Because it has not been submitted, in the first place, and in that I heartly commend the Secretary of the Treasury, because he thought even though not elected as the gentleman and I are, that the burden which confronts the people of exceeding $1,400,-000,000 threatened deficit in June, 1933, should be taken into consideration. That is the only answer that I can give the gentleman. I thoroughly and heartly commend the Secretary of the Treasury in his endeavor to conserve the public money.

That has been the attitude of Chairman Byrns from the beginning, and if we had more Members on the Democratic side standing as Mr. Byrns has stood-for economy-I dare say we would not have before us to-day for consideration this "pork" bill.

I think the question propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Ragon], while he was occupying the floor, as to where we are to get the money to carry out the provisions of this bill most pertinent. Yet the gentleman from Arkansas did not give an answer. If this bill should, perchance, become a law, we will undo all that we have done toward balancing the Budget. But yesterday the country was made glad when the news went over the wires that the President had signed the tax bill and the Budget had been balanced. They will not be glad, however, if the news goes over the wires that this bill has become law and that it has created a new deficit of more than $1,250,000,000. What estimate will the country have of us if we should be guilty of such action?

The gentlemen who are advocating this measure seem to have paid no heed as to where and how the money is to be raised to carry it into effect, and apparently they care but little how this should be done, else they would not be supporting it. The taxpayers of this country are groaning under the weight of taxation. Are we to continue to make that tax heavier until it becomes unbearable? God forbid!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to supplement the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] relative to the attitude of the people back home with reference to these appropriations. This bill calls for the expenditure of $1,330,000 on public buildings in my district. I can provide the Democratic majority of this House with word from every one of those places that they do not want the money expended there at the expense of the Public Treasury at this time, as much as some of the buildings may be needed.

There are two elements entering into this proposal. One, that of economy, and the other, that of extravagance. Today the Republican minority in this House stands for economy in governmental appropriations, and we have stood there right through this period of depression.

Under the roads appropriation this bill asks for an appropriation of $233,000,000-extravagance again-for which $137,000,000 was appropriated but a few weeks ago, when the evidence proved you could not spend a dollar of it satisfactorily or fairly to the American people. This is pyramiding extravagance upon extravagance.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] said you are establishing a new brand of statesmanship. I am delighted to know that this bill represents Democratic statesmanship. We want less of it, and we will have less of it after November. What is that type of statesmanship that the gentleman from Illinois is advocating? Speaker Garner said before our committee: "You know if there is one thing of which I am jealous, it is the financial integrity of this Republic." Fine. We all believe in that theory, and, therefore, in order to finance this bill appropriating $2,000,000,000, the gentleman from Texas, under the bill which you have voted out of the Ways and Means Committee, under the gag rule of your caucus, and now under gag rule of the House, places a tax of one-quarter of a cent on gasoline. That is all the financing the bill provides. Therefore if the gentleman is a good financier, which we mightily doubt, that is all it is going to cost this country-one-quarter of a cent on every gallon of gasoline that is bought. What a ridiculous proposition. In the tax bill, which was signed yesterday, we put on a tax of 11/2 cents, 1 cent in one section and one-half cent in another section. The States put anywhere from 2 cents to 7 cents a gallon on gasoline. It would not be a great while before we will have to find a new kind of power in order to operate automobiles over the highways which you propose building under this extravagant building program.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What about the tractors which the farmers use?

Mr. TREADWAY. They are useful, but they will be paying that big gasoline tax under the method of financing such a bill as this.

The public-buildings scheme, the road scheme, the rivers and harbor scheme are all extravagances conceived in political ambitions.

I again say that I congratulate the gentleman from Texas on his ability as a financier, when he can show a method of spending $2,000,000,000 and not affect the Public Treasury. It is as ridiculous as any proposition that has ever been before this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, once upon a time there was in the dear old United States of America a great big party; it was called Democratic.

Under our 2-party scheme of government, that Democratic Party has had a mighty, if rather traditional history, and has made admittedly valuable contributions in the cause of better government. The distinguished names of Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson have adorned its roster.

For many years the Democratic policies were triumphant until "evil days drew nigh," when it took the leadership of Lincoln to lead our country from degrading chattel slavery into a larger freedom and stronger unity.

After a period of Republican control the Democratic cohorts again won victory under the leadership of Grover Cleveland, honest, fearless, patriotic.

Again in 1912, owing to a split in the Republican ranks, the Democrats came into power, and Wilson was chosen President and reelected President largely by the skillful use of the slogans "He kept us out of war" and "Watchful waiting," but, Mr. Chairman, once we had entered the conflict under our President's leadership, no partisan spirit was allowed to interfere with the successful prosecution of that war.

There was no Republican Party striving for selfish advantage; on the contrary, we were all loyal Americans, supporting to the utmost our President; and we went along 100 per cent in our devotion to the common cause under President Wilson.

With prodigal hands, we poured out of our immense wealth in order to win the World War. Railroads were built, harbors were dredged, and a multitude of ships sprang into being for the purpose of carrying endless supplies to the fighters. Above all, our priceless youth were fighting in the front-line trenches, endeavoring to "make the world safe for democracy." The final triumph was a splendid testimonial to the unselfishly contributed man power and wealth of America. There were no party lines drawn then; there should be none now. Either enthrone good government now or chaos is around the corner.

With the war ended, the Democratic leadership, filled with grandiose ideas of an absurd and impossible world-wide imperialism, tried to hook up the United States to a supergovernment called the League of Nations-or exterminations. The people of the United States, however, having recovered their sanity, rebelled at the notion of "foreign entanglements" that Washington admonished us to avoid, and the Republican Party was returned to power by an overwhelming vote

Eight happy, prosperous years followed. It seemed that the dreams of the founders were being fulfilled, and heaven on earth for our people was being developed; but we were like the children of Israel who, in sight of the promised land, fell and worshipped the golden calf, and then were forced back into the wilderness to ponder on their sins.

Governments, National, State, and local, entered upon an orgy of spending. Extravagant, uneconomic schemes were launched that were not "self-liquidating." Individually and en masse, the people were bent on gambling. Baal was enthroned; Wall Street, Florida real estate, Brownsville, Tex., orchards took their toll in the hard-earned savings of the people. Our banking system extended credits on gambling rather than investment values to countless thousands of people, and the worship of Baal continued with the Democratic Party too ill and the Republican Party too oblivious of all that was inherently wrong going on.

In times less critical, politics and pork could be forgotten. Why not now?

Our Government is being put to the supreme test now. We need patriots, not partisans now.

We need one general now, not a lot of self-appointed, political generals.

Business or pork? Sound finance or pork barrelitis.

> Odor of pork is in the air. A Democratic Speaker in the chair. Hog callers, calling in despair. Pigsties, post offices everywhere.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I wish earnestly and solemnly to urge the sane, constructive, patriotic program as advocated by our chosen leader in the White House, as is embodied in the Hawley bills.

Our President knows the whole situation far better than any Congressman can possibly understand it, for he has a large and able corps of trained investigators to advise him as to national and international conditions. Let us rally, then, to his standard of common sense, sound business, and decency; defeat the Garner plan and follow our President.

This country is not going to the "demnition bow-wows." or to the pork trough, either. It is your job and mine, as patriots, to save it from any such contemptible and unworthy fate.

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State! Sail on, O Union, strong and great!

[Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall require the full time that has been accorded me.

I say without any hesitation to every Illinois Member in this House that I know my State-Illinois-as well as any man on the floor of this Chamber. I do not think you will deny that. For more than 30 years I have gone into every section and portion of the State.

By the bill that has been introduced in this House there have been thrown to Illinois certain sops for the purpose of seducing the State of Illinois to vote for this measure. I do not wish to take the time to read the various appropriations that have been proposed for Illinois, but I ask of my colleagues on both sides of this Chamber the privilege of inserting as a part of my remarks the various provisions that have been made for various portions of Illinois, out of consideration for saving the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, such appropriations and projects as provided by the bill for Illinois are as and projects as provided by the bill for lilinois are as follows:

Illinois: Abingdon, post office, $70,000; Anna, post office, $75,000; Barrington, post office, $70,000; Berokne, post office, $70,000; Centralia, post office, $100,000; Charnage, post office, $190,000; Centralia, post office, $100,000; Charnagin, post office, $105,000; Centralia, post office, $400,000; Charnagin, post office, $120,000; Decatur, post office, $400,000; Des Plaines, post office, $120,000; Decatur, post office, $400,000; Est Alton, post office, $80,000; Est Alton, post office, $80,000; Egin, post office, $300,000; Ellorado, post office, $80,000; Egin, post office, $300,000; Ellorado, post office, $800,000; Ellorado, post office, $800,000; Ellorado, post office, $100,000; Glencoe, S00,000; Morrison, post office, $100,000; Riverside, post office, $85,000; Normal, post office, $100,000; Riverside, post office, $85,000; Sleibyville, post office, $100,000; Riverside, post office, $85,000; Urbana, post office, $100,000; Wimette, post office, $100,000; Wimette, post office, $100,000; Wime Illinois: Abingdon, post office, $70,000; Anna, post office, $75,000;

And then I only desire to say very plainly and emphatically that Illinois hurls back into your teeth the appropriations that are made for the various portions of Illinois; and they decline to be seduced or beguiled by these appropriations.

Now, then, I want to say one thing more to the cheer leader of the Democratic side. [Laughter.] Every man from Illinois who votes for this untimely measure will receive defeat at the hands of the voters of Illinois. [Laughter and applause.]

Jeer! But the jeers of the gentleman from south of the Mason and Dixon line will be answered by the people of the State of Illinois when they go to the polls in November. ask the press to convey to Illinois the fact that when I said that the people of the State of Illinois repudiate this "porkbarrel" proposition that it was met by jeers from the gentleman south of the Mason and Dixon line who takes from, but does not contribute to, the funds that will be used for this purpose.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. For a brief and respectful question.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Does the gentleman submit that anyone has conferred power on him to dispense offices throughout the country?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I thought that would be the kind of inquiry that would come. That is why I qualified my statement.

Mr. SIROVICH. What is the gentleman's answer?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I am going to answer it. I am saying to you that I know the people of my State, and I know what their answer will be. I do not misrepresent them, but I spoke the sentiment I know exists in the State of Illinois.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. For a brief question but not for a speech.

Mr. McCORMACK. I never make a speech in another gentleman's time.

Is the gentleman opposed to Federal aid to the unfortunate in an emergency like this?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I am opposed to anything that fastens an appropriation on the Treasury of more than $2,250,000,000 in the present distressed condition of the country when we have just balanced the Budget, no matter from what source it comes.

Mr. KELLER. Or for what purpose?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Or for what purpose at this time.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Now let me say to the gentleman: I know your district. Go on record.

Mr. KELLER. I am going to.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. And the gentleman will see what the people of his district will do to him.

Mr. KELLER. I am going to do it. Do not worry.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone." [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. Pratt]. [Applause.] Mrs. Pratt]. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, we have passed some pretty fantastic legislation during this session of Congress. If we pass the bill that is now before us, it will be our crowning folly.

For the past six months we have presented to the country the spectacle of a Congress that has been unable to act promptly, constructively, and fearlessly in the face of a great emergency. But, in spite of that, a few hours ago, comparatively speaking, we did pass a bill, the first step on our way toward balancing the Budget. If within another few hours we turn around and begin to unbalance the Budget, we make of ourselves a laughingstock to the thinking people of this country and would seemingly become the pawns of individuals and groups of individuals who for selfish purposes will press any kind of legislation, unsound though it may be, and regardless of the consequences, disastrous as they may be.

I predict that many an insincere vote will be cast on the floor of this House in favor of this bill. I have been told by responsible members of this committee that they do not like the bill, but would be forced to vote for it as a strictly partisan measure, feeling confident it would be defeated at the other end of the Capitol. I do not think such procedure will be conducive to any renewal of confidence on the part of the people of the country who, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Purnell] said this morning, have lost faith in their Congress. Perhaps it is too much to expect, but I sincerely hope that the Members of this House will have the courage of their convictions, will face their obligations fairly and squarely, and do their duty by killing this bill at its source. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM]. [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, Illinois is glad to accept the challenge issued a few moments ago by my distinguished colleague [Mr. Chiperfield]. Illinois—which has contributed so much to the honor and glory of our country, and has dedicated to the service of the Nation the immortal Lincoln, the illustrious Grant, and the renowned Douglas.

I wonder what these statesmen would say to-day if they were alive and could visualize the unfortunate spectacle of 8,000,000 American citizens unable to find lucrative employment and see their dependent families looking hopefully and anxiously to the Congress of the United States for remedial legislation in this hour of national distress.

In the name of the great men the State of Illinois has given the Nation, and in the sovereign name of the State of Illinois, with her rolling prairies, her fertile fields, her great agricultural and industrial activities, and in the name of her countless patriotic and loyal citizens, I accept this challenge.

I want to say here and now, that my State with its illustrious past—and with its record of distinguished service to our Nation in all national emergencies, would never agree to see the citizens of our country starve or be in want—when, in a statesmanlike manner and in a true spirit of sound economics, it is possible to obtain employment for the idle and provide food for the hungry, and by so doing restore to some degree the confidence of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Members of Congress, never before in the history of America have we been face to face with conditions as those which confront us at the present time. Unemployment with its ravenous results is growing day by day. We must do something to check its growth, to impede its further development, with its disastrous and depressing effects.

Since the beginning of Congress the people of America have been mystified with that expression, "We must balance the Budget." We have balanced it. We have passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. We have declared a moratorium for Germany. We have passed legislation for the banks and the railroads of the Nation, but the statesman to my left would allow the people who are out of employment to starve rather than pass this legislation to alleviate their deplorable circumstances.

I hope that the patriotic men in the Republican Party, conscious of their obligations and realizing the distressing situation which confronts America at the present time, will meet that challenge in a true spirit of duty—of patriotism, of humanity—and pass this measure overwhelmingly. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller]. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I admit the very high moral attitude of my colleague from Illinois. I must, however, answer directly and specifically by saying to him that the campaign in Illinois is an open field. I invite him to the twenty-fifth district, and I hope I get an invitation from his district to come there.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. The gentleman is assured of having it.

Mr. KELLER. I thank you, sir. Now I ask the gentleman not to change his remarks when he rewrites his speech.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I promise the gentleman I will not do that, and I will come to his district.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman, and I shall use the gentleman's statement there [applause], because the gentleman has stood here and said he thinks it is more important to balance the Budget than it is to prevent starvation in this country. [Applause.] He says that the people of Illinois, whom he knows better than anybody else, will vote to uphold such a position as that. The truth of the matter is that starvation is abroad even in the great garden of Illinois and in the great industrial center of Chicago. In the gentleman's own district there are thousands of hungry people. Go back, Congressman Chiperfield, and say to them, "We have balanced the Budget; everything is fine; that does the whole work. You do not need anything to eat because the Budget is balanced." [Applause.]

Ah, gentlemen, get clearly before you what you are facing at the present moment. I have no desire to talk party politics. I have never raised my voice along that line in this body, and I am not going to now. But if ever there was a time when such an answer could be delivered with crushing effect, it could be given here at the present moment. But I forego that. There is something higher and better that I desire to talk to you about. I am not against the authorized appropriations here in Washington City. America is rich enough and able to stand for them and carry them out, because America is the richest country in the world and we are poor only because we are idle. Nevertheless, when the President talks about "pork barrel" he forgets and overlooks the fact that the authorized appropriations for the city of Washington alone up to the present moment already reach the total sum of $300,000,000. Of course, that is not "pork barrel" here in Washington City; but it at once becomes "pork barrel" when you try to put a post office out among the people who produce the principal amount of wealth of this country.

Every one of my Republican colleagues who are here to-day so ardently supporting the President's charge of "pork barrel" against this Garner bill has heretofore struggled ardently for post-office buildings in his district. It was not "port barrel" then—oh, no; certainly not. It only became "pork barrel" when the President changed his mind. For be it remembered that this very building program was laid out and most of it actually authorized by Congress two years ago.

The same gentlemen who to-day are denouncing this program as "pork barrel" voted for it two years ago. It was not pork then, but it is pork now.

Now the gentleman from Kentucky challenged any Congressman who is shouting "pork" to stand up and say he will not accept post-office buildings for his district. How many stood up and made that announcement? Not a one. Why not? Because they are bluffing in the political card game. Many splendid men on the Republican side are going to vote against this bill only because the Republican caucus has bound them to "stand by the President," on the theory that when the President takes snuff they should all sneeze in chorus. But there are other Republicans and progressives who are, as I know, going to disobey the command of the caucus and vote for this bill on its merit.

Let us understand fully what we are driving at. It is to relieve unemployment—to put men to work. There are a large number of men at work on public improvements in Washington City. It is the most prosperous city in America at present on that account. Four or five large contracts have recently been let. The public improvements provided for in this Garner bill—roads, river and harbor improvements, post-office buildings—if this bill becomes the law and the departments in charge of these works carry out the plan honestly and energetically, it will put a million and a quarter men to work all over the United States. This will automatically put other very large numbers to work and actually give industry a chance to come back. And that is what we are fighting for.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. As I understood, the gentleman from Illinois, General Chiperfield, said he was against these items?

Mr. KELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. There is $22,500,000 authorized for Army construction in this bill, which was reported in a bill out of the Military Affairs Committee of this House less than a week ago, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Chiperfield] sent his proxy to the Military Affairs Committee and it was voted to report that bill out favorably. [Applause.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I denounce the statement of the gentleman from Alabama as unfounded.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman sent his proxy by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. James].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. It is not true that I authorized any such use of my proxy.

Mr. KELLER. I desire to call attention to the fact that I have in my hand a telegram from the secretary of the relief committee in Chicago saying that they have been spending $3,000,000 a month since last February and that the requirements are increasing.

There is, as a matter of fact, gentlemen, only one trouble with this bill. It does not go half as far as it ought to go. [Applause.]

It has finally dawned upon the officials of the cities and States that there is only one agency that can prevent starvation in America, and that is the United States Government. It not only can but must and will. That is provided for in this bill. One hundred million dollars is authorized in this Garner bill for direct relief to those in need. There is one difficulty about this. It is clearly entirely insufficient. With Chicago spending $3,000,000 a month and being entirely out of funds and looking entirely to the Federal relief, I am hoping to see the Senate increase this amount to three hundred and fifty million, as the hearings before the Labor Committee clearly disclosed is actually required.

The same gentlemen who are shouting "pork" at the public-works program are denouncing this Government guaranty against starvation as a dole. The President is against any dole, so my stand-pat colleagues are also against a dole. They all voted for the 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to prevent starvation. Wheat is not a dole, of course, but meat is, wonderful to relate.

We have this condition: The Republican Party is against any dole; the Republican Party is against public employment. What must the man out of a job think when you say to him, "You shall have no food; you shall have no work"?

If that announcement should go forth as the decision of this Congress, or if the President should veto a bill providing for food for the starving and work for the idle, what do you think would be the answer of the 8,000,000 men in enforced idleness with their families facing starvation? We must certainly see that 8,000,000 idle men are not going to remain idle. We must not gamble with misery. There is a limit to human suffering. No people on earth could be more patient and patriotically long-suffering than our own American people. For two and a half long years they have listened to promises while the gaunt form of misery and want drew constantly nearer. Every promise of returning prosperity has been an illusory dream. The people consumed their savings and fell into want. If there ever was a capital levy in actual operation, it was this compulsory consuming of the little capital of these good American working people.

I trust, in closing, I may be permitted to call to the attention of this House that on January 29, 1930, at Marion, Ill., in an address on Unemployment, Its Cause and Cure, I outlined fully a program for "a job for every man and woman who wants to work"—the first step toward which we are taking to-day in passing the Garner bill. And the people of my district, quite disregarding party lines, sent me here to preach the new doctrine of the right of every man to an opportunity to earn a living and a competency for himself and his family.

It is, therefore, with a sense of sincere thankfulness that I am permitted to record my vote to-day in favor of the ideals I held out to my friends and neighbors in Little Egypt two and a half years ago.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, reference has been made in this debate that the rule under which the bill is being considered is a "gag" rule. It certainly is a rule that permits speedy determination of the issues presented in the measures. Some of the gentlemen opposing the bill choose to call it a "pork barrel" measure. I challenge this statement with all my sincerity.

The only pork-barrel measures which ever came to my attention emanated from a Congress controlled by my good Republican friends at the time a Republican President was gracing the White House. It might be said that a good reason for this somewhat drastic rule—this so-called "gag" rule—was to prevent our good Republican friends from writing into this measure real pork-barrel legislation. In other words, this rule does not permit of amendments of pork-barrel nature, and consequently our friends on the left do not have the opportunity to burden it with unworthy projects or emasculate the provisions thereof.

It is a simple matter to generalize and call a measure "pork barrel." But I ask you, my friends, whether $100,-000,000 placed in the hands of the President of the United States, to assist the hungry and the starving—if that is your idea of "pork barrel" legislation? As you know, that is what Title I does. It places this vast sum in the hands of our President to use without stint or restrictions, to feed and clothe the American citizens, when, in his judgment, it should be done. No, you can not call such legislation "pork barrel." This amount could not provide pork for the eight to ten million unemployed Americans, with their dependents needing food. It is not "pork barrel"—rather I would suggest that this sum of money is a bread-basket appropriation.

There are those who do not agree that hungry and starving Americans should be cared for by the Federal Government. I would not counsel such legislation except in extremis. The local communities, the cities, counties, and States, according to the record, have exhausted their means. They can not care for their destitute. We must care for this situation and the situation to be ere Congress adjourns this session.

Tell me that the Federal Government shall not recognize the suffering, misery, and starvation of its own. We have historic precedent for this provision, dating back to the year 1803 when our Congress appropriated for the relief of sufferers from fire at Portsmouth, N. H. Throughout the years the American Government has recognized its obligations to its own citizens and likewise citizens of foreign countries in need.

In May, 1812, we appropriated $50,000 for the earthquake sufferers in Venezuela.

In 1871 authorization was given to use naval vessels for transportation of supplies for the destitute and suffering people of France and Germany.

In 1897 we appropriated for the relief for the poor of India. In 1897 we appropriated for the relief of citizens suffering in Cuba. This was just before the Spanish-American War.

In 1909 we appropriated $800,000 for the relief of citizens in Italy to provide food and clothes for them.

In 1911 we appropriated for the relief of sufferers from famine in China.

In 1919 we appropriated $100,000,000—placing it in the hands of the President of the United States—for the furnishing of food supplies and other urgent supplies for Europeans, outside of Germany and our other enemy countries.

In 1921 we appropriated $20,000,000 to purchase foodstuff for the distressed and starving people in Russia and for spring planting and areas where seed grain had been exhausted.

In 1924, I believe it was, the House passed a bill providing for some $20,000,000 for distressed citizens of Germany.

And throughout the years since the foundation of our Government this Congress has again and again and again looked out over its vast domain and appropriated money in various sums for distressed American citizenry. So, in this unprecedented dark hour of our Republic, we would meet the distressed condition and place this vast sum in the hands of our President to the end that American men, women, and children may not starve.

CONGRESS SHOULD STRIVE FOR RELIEF

I read from an opinion written by Justice Brandeis of our Supreme Court. It is in the case of New State Ice Co. v. Ernest A. Liebmann (March 21, 1932):

The people of the United States are now confronted with an emergency more serious than war. Misery is widespread in a time not of scarcity but of overabundance. The long-continued depression has brought unprecedented unemployment, a catastrophic fall in commodity prices, and a volume of economic losses which threatens our financial institutions. Some people believe that the existing conditions threaten even the stability of the capitalistic system. Economists are searching for the causes of this disorder and are reexamining the bases of our industrial structure. Business men are seeking possible remedies.

It seems high time that members of legislative bodies seek the cause of our economic disorders, reexamine the bases of our industrial structures, and present possible remedies.

Certain it is that the partisan political note which has been brought into this debate from your side of the aisle is to be regretted. From the first day of Congress until a short time ago, your cry was for nonpartisan, nonpolitical consideration of measures suggested for the relief of our country. In December the Democrats joined with you and passed the moratorium bill, asked for by the President as a relief measure. Democrats joined you and passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, which I think, did as much good as a "chock under the wheels."

The Democrats joined with you and passed, through the Ways and Means Committee and this House and Congress, a revenue bill. There was only one partisan vote, either in committee or on the floor of this House, in its consideration—one amendment upon which parties took definite political shape.

The Glass-Steagall banking bill, and many other bills, have been brought upon this floor and passed without political contest in an effort to relieve the situation. But, my friends, everything that has been done to this good hour has failed to start the wheels rolling in the right direction.

I do not claim for this measure that it is the panacea for all the ills that have fallen upon America in this dark hour, but I do believe that it does supplement the other legislation we have enacted and that it is a positive measure looking to relief to many who cry for work.

TITLE II. RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Title II of the bill, which broadens the base of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, certainly can not be truthfully denominated "pork barrel." In that title the base of this institution is broadened to the extent of $1,000,000,000.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its operations has made loans to the railroads, the banks, insurance companies, and what might be designated "big business." One provision called for loans to the poorest class in America, the tenant farmers. Two hundred million dollars was set aside for that purpose. Sixty-three million dollars has been used in such loans. The point I would make is that the middle class—substantial business men, small businesses of all kinds—have received no benefits from this legislation.

This bill authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan money to any person in the United States upon adequate security. The term "any persons" includes "an individual, a trust or estate, a partnership, a corporation—public, quasi public, or private—an association, a joint-stock company, a State, a political subdivision of a State, and any instrumentality or agency of one or more States or political subdivision thereof."

How anybody, even in a fit of partisan rage, could think of Title II falling in the category of "pork" is more than I can see. If Title II is pork-barrel legislation, then, my friends, the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, sponsored by our President and the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, is pork-barrel legislation.

TITLE III—PUBLIC WORKS PART I. PUBLIC BUILDINGS

This title has been subject to the severest criticism and characterized as pork-barrel legislation. I would ask you with respect to the public buildings specifically mentioned in sections 301, 302, and 303 of this bill, How many are of pork-barrel nature? It is easy to generalize, it is easy to criticize, it is easy to calumnize. The proof in this record shows that section 301 carries 948 projects. Eight hundred and ninety of these buildings appear in House Document No. 788, which the Treasury and the Post Office Departments, certainly under Republican control, have recommended, and these 58 cases, as I understand it, are being reviewed by the interdepartmental committee as likely sites for the expenditure of the moneys heretofore authorized by the past Congress, Republican in both branches, and by Mr. Hoover, who then advocated the public-building program for the relief of the unemployed.

It may be that some of you may not understand what the Interdepartmental Committee is. Back in 1926, as I recall, Congress delegated the power of selecting sites and recommending the expenditures in public buildings to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General. Subsequent to this legislation, they created the Interdepartmental Committee-a committee representing the two departments to locate the sites where, for business reasons, public buildings should be constructed, and further, to allocate the money needed for that economic construction. So, we have in section 301, no haphazard choice of sites and no hairbrained estimates as to the amounts to be expended. The sites are taken from the interdepartmental report as well as the sums of money to be used in their construction. One hundred and seventy-four million dollars is involved in that section. Is a dime of it pork barrel? If it is, you indict two great departments of this Government, which, as yet, are under your control.

This section calls for an appropriation of some $5,000,000 due to the desires of the Executive branch of the Government to have an increase in the limit of costs for buildings under contract and under construction. It was admitted that every dime of this amount was needed by the administration in the program under way. Could anyone truthfully say that there is any pork in that section?

SECTION 303

This section carries about 246 projects. It was admitted that these are specifically authorized. Mr. Martin, of the interdepartmental committee, who appeared with Secretary Mills, so testified. This section carries $90,000,000, and if there is a smell of pork in it, it comes from the administration.

In other words, in the drafting of sections 301, 302, and 303, the judgment of the executive branch of the Government in connection with the location of sites and the amount of money to be spent, has been transplanted to this bill. In these sections, you have $269,000,000 that is O. K'd by the present administration, except the few projects to which reference has heretofore been made.

These sections carry the sum of $73,000,000. Originally the projects in section 304 called for $70,000 as the maximum cost, while projects in section 305 called for $55,000 as the maximum cost. Realizing that construction costs were considerably lower than when former estimates were made, the committee has changed the maximum cost to $50,000 and $35,000, respectively. If the fact that the Interdepartmental Committee has not put its official O. K. on the projects set forth in these sections would condemn, then they are condemned. However, it might be suggested that it was only a few short years ago when Congress used the power itself of locating the post offices and allocating the money for them.

In section 304, the postal receipts run from $10,000 to more than $20,000. In section 305, the postal receipts are from $8,000 to $10,000. No project is listed in any city with a population less than 1,500 under the 1930 census. As a matter of fact there are many projects within few persons of that number that presented strong cases of considerable population adjoining the corporate limits. However, the ironclad rule adopted by the committee was a population of 1,500 with postal receipts exceeding $8,000.

PART II. RIVERS AND HARBORS

This portion of the bill has been attacked and the country has not been told by its critics that every single project looking toward the improvement of the rivers and harbors set forth in this bill has been O. K'd and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Congress of the United States, or in a few instances, by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. There are no projects in this bill which have not been approved and recommended by the Chief of Engineers; there are no projects in this bill that have not been approved and recommended by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives and in many instances by Congress itself.

The Secretary of War appeared before our committee and suggested that some 33 projects carried in the original bill should not be authorized at this time. These projects are admitted to be approved and recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and had been adopted and recommended by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and in many instances, by Congress itself. However, the Secretary stated that on account of certain conditions that obtained, it was not advantageous to begin their construction this year. He made it very clear that he did not intend to state that even these projects were not worthy of construction. Conforming with his request 31 of these projects were stricken. It was thought that the conditions on the other two could be met. I would suggest that there is no "pork" in the rivers and harbors section unless you believe that all appropriations for river and harbor improvement might be so characterized. In any event, these projects in the bill received the approval of the executive branch of this Government, as well as its legislative agency.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is not the real issue a justification of whether or not there is unemployment to such an extent and under such circumstances in this country that there is no hope of relief without the passage of the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Undoubtedly that is an issue. I take it that there can not be any question as to the serious extent of the unemployment and their need for relief. However, I do feel that the manner in which this bill has been prepared would be presented, so that those who care to know will understand that it is not a slipshod, ill-considered, uneconomic affair.

We have waited since December for some plan for substantial relief. None has been forthcoming. We have waited because we recognize the fact that another body as well as the Executive chair is occupied and controlled by our Republican friends. But with no substantial program presented by the President, it was necessary for us to submit this program, which certainly will provide employment for hundreds of thousands of American citizens.

This portion of the bill carries $246,327,409 with the adoption of the committee amendment to be offered.

This embodies the Missouri River project and the Miami Harbor project. Each of these projects has been approved by the War Department and by Congress.

The Missouri project calls for $20,070,000 and provides for the improvements between Kansas City and Sioux City. The President of the United States, particularly about four years ago, was an ardent advocate of these projects between these points. In one utterance he tried to show the people of that section that these improvements would mean an increase of 10 cents per bushel for their corn and wheat. Five hundred thousand dollars was recommended by the War Department for the next fiscal year for this improvement. According to that rate, many more years would pass before the farmers in that section could procure that extra 10 cents per bushel saved by water transportation. This bill merely accelerates that work, as it does that which has been heretofore referred to.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to how many men will be employed? I read in the hearings that the Secretary of the Treasury said that there would be 30,448 men employed to spend $233,000,000 over a course of years. Surely 30,000 men will not make very much of a dent on the question of unemployment at the present time.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman can take those figures and see whether they prove themselves. Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown said that 54 per cent of every dollar that went into river and harbor work went to labor direct on the job. The other proof before our committee showed that about 20 per cent in addition to this 54 per cent went to labor intake 75 per cent of it, he will find how many million dollars go to labor directly and indirectly, and then he can see just how accurate the conclusion of Mr. Mills is in respect to his statement that only 34,000 men would be employed.

However, considering the gentleman's question further, I take it that his question related to the amount of labor that would be utilized in the public-buildings program. I think that you will find the percentage of the money that goes into labor directly and indirectly to be approximately the same.

I recall distinctly that Mr. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Roads, testified that 85 per cent of every dollar that went into roads found its way to labor directly or indirectly. It is a hard matter to determine the exact number that would be employed if this full program were put into effect. It must be remembered that the 5-day week must be used in this work. It has been estimated that 1,000,000 men, directly or indirectly, would be put back to work.

PART III. ROADS

Subsection (a) of section 321 authorized $67,400,000. We found that this had been heretofore authorized. In consequence whereof we struck it from the bill in committee amendment.

We added a new section in lieu of it, which increases the 7 per cent of the total mileage of the States to 8 per cent. This will permit 14 States to take advantage of this Federalaid money and thereby have its proportionate share of the work for the unemployed.

Subsection (b) authorizes $150,000,000 for Federal-aid

Subsection (c) carries-

Total ___

Forest roads	$5,000,000
National forests	5, 000, 000
National-park roads	3,000,000
Indian-reservation roads	1,000,000
Public-land roads	2,000,000

PART IV. FLOOD CONTROL

_____ 16, 000, 000

This is carrying out the flood-control program, heretofore undertaken by the present administration. Accelerating the work, the Mississippi River project carries $176,-226,223 and the Sacramento River $4,466,245.

MISCELLANEOUS

SECTION 341

This section deals with the acquisition of sites for post offices.

SECTION 343

This section provides for the 5-day week.

For post offices costing $55,000 or less, the postmaster will see to it that the building be given custodial care and janitor service without additional cost to the Government.

SECTION 351

Provides for the sinking fund.

SECTION 361

Imposes a tax of one-quarter of a cent a gallon upon the sale of gasoline in the United States.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOUSER. I for one, do not suggest that the hundred million dollars for the relief of unemployment is a pork-barrel proposition. I regret that the bill does not include a larger amount than that. I do not think those who suggest that there may be pork-barrel provision in the bill are including the money appropriated for direct relief.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley] that this is a raid of $2,200,000,000. To reach that figure you must use every project in the bill, all authorizations, including the $100,-000,000 for direct relief.

Mr. MOUSER. But does the gentleman think $100,000,000 is enough to relieve the unemployment?

directly. If the gentleman will take the figure he used and I is authorized to relieve the needy citizens of this country who may suffer with hunger and cold.

CONCLUSION

With conditions so appalling, were it not for the presidential election I do not believe there would be a dissenting voice to the authorization of $100,000,000 for relief to our citizens. Were it not for a presidential year I can not conceive of objection being made to broadening the loaning power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As a matter of fact, the press would have us understand that the President contemplates broadening the base of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $1,500,000,000.

Were it not for the presidential situation, I do not think that any of our Republican friends would hesitate to accelerate the public-building program, the rivers and harbors program, and the road-building program. Our Government has called upon the private citizens to start the wheels forward. This proposition simply practices for the Government what it has been preaching. The wheels of industry must turn. They can only turn when they have a market for their products. The purchasing power of our people must be increased. It can only be increased when they can find wage-paying jobs. It is the belief of the sponsors of this measure that this is a step in the right direction; that the wheels of industry once started may continue to turn; that the work done hereunder heretofore approved and O. K'd by the governmental agencies affected will simply be accelerated; that labor will have opportunity to secure an opportunity for a living; that the farmer will have an increased market for his product and thereby have an increased buying power for the article manufactured by industry. In other words, it is hoped that this measure will be of direct benefit to the people of this country. We beg nonpartisan, nonpolitical help in its passage.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, nothing is gained in this discussion by trying to justify all of these appropriations by the existence of depression, want, misery, and distress among the people of this land. Any one of us, I think, can make the tearful plea that we heard a while ago for the suffering millions of the United States, and say, as did one of the gentlemen in this committee:

If you want to show that you have no heart for the suffering, if you are out of sympathy with methods for alleviating distress then vote against this bill.

That is a purely demagogic appeal and is unworthy of any Member of the House. There are other ways and there will be other opportunities for treating the unemployment and the starvation question by the present Congress during the present session than by passing this bill. After all, only the sum of $100,000,000 in the bill applies directly to that proposition. One billion dollars of the money in this bill is to be applied to public works, and I think it was conclusively demonstrated to the Committee on Ways and Means that the public works provided in this bill will not relieve unemployment to a sufficient extent to justify the expenditures that are involved. For instance, it is uncontradicted in the Record, and it was shown by the figures of the War Department itself, that under the present Budget there are employed upon river and harbor projects 29,264 persons per annum, and that the maximum number under this bill will be raised only to 63,442. The public-building program in this bill, when used to its greatest capacity, will give additional employment only to something like 30,500 men per year. When do you think these projects will be ready for construction?

Of course, we are told that the purpose is that the department shall go out and take sites without condemnation, that we shall seize sites without prior purchase. Then they tell us that we can proceed with this construction by standard plans. I can see Members of the House going up to the counter in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The $100,000,000 is not authorized as the sole method of relief for unemployment. It saying, "Let us see, Congressman Go-Getter, you get 25 buildings? You have 5 of such a class, 3 of such a class, and 10 of such a class; here are your sets of plans, all standardized, the buildings of each class will be all alike, there will be nothing individual about them and they will not mean anything in the particular locality where they are located, but you will get quick construction, and then we will send some of our traveling force out to pick out a site for you, and some time within a year or two we will bring condemnation proceedings to get title."

Mr. Chairman, we will not have these buildings started within much less than a year from the time that we pass this bill and none of these building operations will be started before the snow flies in the Northern States this year. Some of your Southern States may get a little bit of work before that time.

We balanced the Budget yesterday, or we hope we did, and we think we did. What are we doing in this bill? We are adding \$1,100,000,000 to the national indebtedness immediately. What are we doing on the other side? Talk about balancing the Budget! We are putting a new tax of a quarter of a cent on every gallon of gasoline, and we are adding $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum to the sinking fund to be carried for 40 years hereafter, to pay the expenses of this public-works program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I have referred to Title I of this bill, which proposes to place $100,000,000 in the hands of the President for distribution by him to the needy throughout the land. That places the Federal Government directly in the field of furnishing direct relief, alms, or the dole, or whatever you choose to call it. It moves this purely local function to the National Capital, and changes our whole past history and our system of Government from local to national responsibility for the individual citizen. Most certainly, if the Federal Government must furnish funds, they should be administered by local authorities. It is not enough to give the President discretion in the use of a fund of this kind; we should ourselves define the national policy as a part of our legislative function.

As to Title II of the bill, the new powers granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are too general and indefinite in authorizing the corporation to make loans "to any person," even as that term is defined later in the bill.

In my opinion, the proposal to extend the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to include the granting of loans to any individual or corporation, public or private, for almost any purpose would broaden the scope of the corporation's activities to include the conduct of a general banking business on a nation-wide scale.

Such action would change entirely the principles upon which the organization of this corporation was based. This agency was created in order to provide a large pool of resources which could be brought to the support of the existing credit structure through advancing funds at crucial points in our financial and business organization. By the proposed action, it would be converted into a banking organization with all the administrative detail and all the responsibility and risk that go with the extension of credit to individual borrowers.

It is inconceivable that individual credit needs throughout the entire country and throughout the full range of our vast and complicated business and commercial structure could be handled by this single emergency organization with full effectiveness. Clearly it would involve a needless duplication of the machinery for analyzing and assuming risks, supervising collateral, effecting collections, and eventually even of managing business and enterprise.

The difficulties attending such an undertaking should be apparent upon consideration of the tremendous complexity of the problems which are presented by the credit requirements of individuals and corporations engaging in an almost infinite variety of business pursuits under conditions that are by no means uniform.

It would be impossible to indicate the magnitude of the demands for credit with which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be confronted were its authority and responsibility thus increased. Since the autumn of 1929 credit liquidation has been reflected in a reduction of more than $10,500,000,000 in the loans and investments of the banks of this country. This decline obviously does not reflect the shrinkage in nonbanking credit, such as bond issues and direct loans by individuals and corporations. It follows from the liquidation that has taken place and from the decline in individual and commercial activity that the demand for additional credit consequent upon business recovery will be extremely heavy. If adequate support can be given to maintain our present banking structure during the period of the emergency, there is no question but that this structure will be able to provide adequately for the needs of the recovery period. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as now constituted and as affected by such legislation as the proposed motion to recommit the pending bill contains, in lieu of that proposed in Title II, will provide such necessary emergency support without putting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the general banking business. There is neither need nor justification for an attempt to set up an emergency organization charged with responsibility for the conduct of general banking business which it can not hope to discharge with full effectiveness and which should properly be assumed by our existing banking institutions.

Enough has probably been said about Title III. It proposes an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 upon a public-works program which is not needed for the public service and which will entail large maintenance and administration costs forever hereafter. For instance, it contemplates the erection of a post-office building in every village and hamlet having a population of 1,500 persons and an annual income of postal receipts as low as $8,000. It proposes the immediate completion of all the river and harbor and flood-control projects contemplated by existing legislation originally calculated to extend progressively over a period of years. In the beginning of an ordinary depression a reasonable expansion of public works might help to stimulate industry and create a hopeful psychology, but under conditions such as now exist the expenditure of large amounts upon projects not selfsustaining or revenue producing is virtually an extravagant and wasteful dissipation of capital whose very protection and preservation will necessitate further outlays until complete replacement will again become imperative. There is no element of soundness in the argument made in this debate that we should prosecute public works merely to give employment without reference to the necessity or utility of such works themselves. And this argument loses more of its force when it appears, as has been shown in this instance, that large expenditures of capital bring an actual minimum of return to the labor necessarily employed, a return out of all proportion to the capital expended and to the permanent tax burden laid upon all the people.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, several Members favoring this bill have asked, "What do you propose to do if you vote against this bill?"

We propose to offer a substitute for it in a motion to recommit, which is a wiser and better proposal than the bill. We do not expect that to pass; but when the Garner bill has passed the House and gone over to the Senate, we do expect the Senate to strike out everything after the enacting clause and insert a better bill that we will vote for. [Applause.]

This bill is a "pork barrel" bill. I wonder how many men in the House know what trot-line fishing is? One strong line of light rope is tied to a tree on the bank of a river, carried across the river, kept on the surface by floats, and every few feet a short line with a hook at the end of it is dropped with bait. This bill is a line from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with a hook dropped in every district, and in some districts as many as 50, baited with "pork-barrel" post offices. A caucus of the Democratic Members of the House

I never knew any fisherman that had the gall to call a caucus of the fish to make them take the bait. Poor fish. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TEMPLE. I yield.
Mr. HARLAN. I wonder if the gentleman can give us some reason why this satisfactory and better bill, with all the assistance of the executive department and the Cabinet, has not been presented to this House within the last six months, so that we might have the benefit of it?

Mr. TEMPLE. We have been working out a program that was agreed upon not by the President alone but by the President, by business men from all over the country, by leading men in both political parties. We have been working out the entire program, and if there had not been delay on the part of the Democratic committees of this House, we would have been to the end of this program before this time. [Applause.]

This bill is one of many proposals, all of which are intended to improve general business, and especially to give employment to the very large number of our people who are idle through no fault of their own and are earnestly trying to find work. If nothing more were needed than merely an opportunity for the Federal Government to pay wages, then this bill might be favorably considered. We could even build pyramids like those of Egypt, and such construction would do much that is claimed for this bill. It would "put money in circulation," it would give employment, but also it would lay heavy burdens on the taxpayers and sink in unproductive works the capital that is needed for the revival of wholesome, normal business.

Unproductive spending is one of the chief causes of the depression from which the whole world is now suffering. For four years a great part of the world gave up its ordinary business and engaged in the work of destruction. All the wealth spent in carrying on the World War produced nothing and destroyed much. The money actually appropriated by parliaments and congresses from the treasuries of the nations engaged in the war was calculated in 1919 by Col. Leonard Ayers, then chief of the statistical branch of our General Staff, to amount to $186,000,000,000. This enormous sum is equal to the total wealth of the United States, as estimated by the Bureau of the Census, in 1912, two years before the war began. It covers only money appropriated out of the national treasuries for war purposes. If we add to that the wealth destroyed in the war and not paid for out of these appropriations—the privately owned ships that were sunk at sea, the mills and mines destroyed in Belgium and France, the ravages in Serbia, the terrible destruction in Russia by the war and the revolution that grew out of it-we reach the enormous figure of three hundred and fifty billions, as estimated by careful statisticians, as the total direct and indirect cost of the war. This is more than the total wealth of the United States in 1922, as estimated by the Census Bureau, including the value of all mills, mines and factories, homes, business houses, railways, canals, crops and cattle on the farms, and the value of the soil itself.

If one could imagine the quick return of the ice age. and the polar ice cap moving southward, not slowly as a glacier moves, but with the speed of an express train, if one could imagine it dipping into the earth at our northern boundary and, like a huge steam shovel pushing before it everything above bedrock and shoveling the whole of the United States into the Gulf of Mexico, leaving nothing behind but bare rock, such an unimaginable castastrophe would not destroy more wealth than the World War destroyed. That is a measure of the magnitude of the calamity that befell the world. Is it any wonder that the world is still staggering from the blow? Most of this calamity fell on Europe, but the world is so knitted together that we suffer with our neighbors across the Atlantic.

This destruction of wealth is enough by itself to account in large part for the present suffering of the world, but has bound the members of that party to vote for the bill. I there were other influences of the war which, while they partially postponed the result, intensified the trouble when the full effect was developed. There were 65,000,000 men in uniform during the war-or to be exact, 65,038,810, according to the figures compiled by our War Department. These men were taken from their ordinary peace-time employment, and the goods they would have produced in their ordinary work were not produced at all. The men who remained at home were not engaged in their ordinary employment, but were manufacturing munitions of war. Everything else was neglected. We got along with nothing but essential things, but demand for war supplies was imperative and business boomed with high wages.

Then came the armistice and the canceling of war contracts. The armies were demobilized, munitions were no longer needed, and there was an interruption of business with consequent depression in 1920, until the men who had been in the armies were sifted back into the industries.

The depression of 1920 did not last long, however. The world was demanding the things that it had been doing without, the things not manufactured while all our energies were directed toward carrying on the war. Factories were enlarged, capacity was increased to supply the accumulated demand. Wages remained high and business again boomed.

The one hundred and eighty-six billions of destroyed capital had not been replaced, however. There was little saving. The world was following the habit developed during the war. It was living and working on credit. The United States, the least exhausted of all the great nations, was called on to furnish capital to the rest of the world. The Government had already loaned more than ten billions to European Governments to carry on the war, and now the American people (not the Government) were asked to make loans both to European Governments and European industrial enterprises. Foreign bonds were floated in America by our great banking institutions, and the people of the United States were in the mood to buy them. The American people, in buying these foreign bonds, not only financed the German Government and enabled it to make heavy payments upon its reparations but also financed industrial corporations in Europe which were our competitors and were doing all they could to recapture the markets that we were hoping to

The illusion of credit still led us on. High prices prevailed, and there was extravagance beyond imagining. Halfbaked economists were saying that a new economic era had come to the world; that prosperity was permanent; that there would never be depression again. Individuals and families spent their incomes and bought on the installment plan. mortgaging their future. Cities, counties, and States sold bonds for public improvements that were desirable but could hardly be called necessary. Taxes without precedent were the inevitable result. The Federal Government likewise yielded to popular demands that it furnish to the people services which it had never furnished before, and larger and still larger appropriations were made for everything that could show a plausible claim.

This bill would repeat the error, would erect post offices which are not needed, would improve for navigation streams upon which there is no commerce—and it is proposed to do this in spite of the experience we have had in the immediate past, when the country was still living on its future and when stocks went up to unheard-of heights because it was expected that sometime earnings would justify the prices paid.

Then came the collapse. Factories had extended their capacity, increased their power of production to supply the demand accumulated during those years when peace-time goods were not made, but the time came when the things that the world had been doing without were made up. The artificial market was at an end, and the normal demand was not sufficient to keep the enlarged factories going.

During the war the scarcity of labor and during the period that followed the war the high wages had stimulated the invention of what are called labor-saving devices. Men were replaced by machines, and the output of almost all kinds of goods exceeded the demand. This was perceptible even before the collapse of the stock market in October, 1929. Men were being discharged from the factories, and the problem of unemployment was coming upon us.

Conditions were almost intolerable in the latter part of 1929 and 1930, but in the summer of 1931, when the United States, the treasure house of the world, found its loans in Europe of doubtful value and when the rebuilt and enlarged industrial plants in Europe, which had been developed with the capital borrowed from the United States, found themselves in trouble, came the collapse which intensified throughout the world the depression that still troubles the statesmen of all lands.

The Members of this House and the Senate are familiar with the program for reconstruction that was worked out at the White House conference of last fall, when business men of all sorts-manufacturers, merchants, and bankers-in consultation with economists, with the heads of labor organizations, and with the leaders of both political parties, were summoned by the President to consider with him a reconstruction program. Some of the bills prepared in accordance with the plan suggested there have been passed and have had a wholesome effect on the country. Some of them are still to be passed. It is very certain that the most effective relief for unemployment will be the revival of general business so that men may be employed in their ordinary occupations and receive their ordinary wages, but such results can not be obtained speedily, and until the more general effect can be obtained it is necessary that some effective measure for the immediate relief of unemployment should be adopted. It is my firm conviction that the "pork barrel" bill now under discussion would not produce that effect, but would consume in unproductive works the capital needed elsewhere, but I again express the conviction that before this session of Congress closes a better bill than this will be passed. There are differences of opinion, but these differences will be ironed out, and before we adjourn we must have a relief measure which will give promise of results and provide for the immediate necessities of the unemployed until such time as normal business can be restored.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, we have to-day an unequaled opportunity to demonstrate whether or not we shall reassure a rather nervous country in this hour of stress or shall again shake its confidence as we have shaken it a number of times in the last few weeks. It is too clear for argument that before we adjourn we must pass a bill to aid unemployment and guarantee every citizen of our country against starvation. We are all agreed on this. We disagree solely on the way in which this aid shall be offered and these guarantees given.

We must admit that there is very little in the setting of the picture to-day which tends to give the reassurance to the country to which I have referred. We have had submitted to us wrapped up in the appealing cellophane of relief a larger package of pork than this Hall has ever seen offered at one time; and when I say package I speak advisedly, for it is tied up tight in a rule, a harder and faster rule than the barons of the steam roller ever attempted to propose. We are invited to swallow the whole mess under pain of appearing to oppose relief if we refuse, and we are not to be given an opportunity to say what part we favor and what we oppose.

The glaringly inconsistent part of the whole proceeding is that this bill, which certainly contains many different and highly controversial items, is presented to us in this way by the same group, the same individuals, the same party which brought in a revenue bill and an economy bill wide open, with no restrictions whatsoever, with the result that both measures suffered parliamentary murder at the hands of the very individuals who should have been pledged to support them.

Perhaps the leaders of the majority have learned their lesson and will never again show how little leading and how little following there is in their ranks. We can well understand why those who are attempting to perpetrate the present bill do not wish it to be open to attack, for it contains as one of its chief decorations a measure so outrageous as to justify unanimous defeat of the bill, no matter what other beneficial provisions may be included.

Think of it, ladies and gentlemen! This bill actually provides for proceeding with public works, chiefly post offices, roads, rivers and harbors, to the tune of more than a billion dollars. I sometimes think that here in Congress we get so used to talking in large numbers that a zero more or less matters very little; but what earthly reason can justify the waste of such a large sum at a time like this, for from the point of view of the kind of relief the country needs this amount would be practically wasted.

Do not the sponsors of this measure know how long it takes to prepare for most of the work of this kind? Do they not know that the great majority of the work would be done by machinery with a minimum employment of labor? Do they not know that a few contractors would be the chief beneficiaries of such a scheme?

Do they not know that this means the employment of only about 200,000 men when millions are demanding employment?

There is something grotesque in the desperate attempts which we have made to balance the Budget and to bring about sound measures of governmental economy when on the very eve of success along these lines the leaders of the majority party present to us a measure completely unbalancing the Budget and casting economy to the winds in an orgy of wasteful spending. Perhaps we have hoped for too much. When we saw the chairman of the Appropriations Committee state on the floor of the House not many weeks ago that he saw no particular need of balancing the Budget during the coming year we should not be surprised to see the Speaker and the majority leader sponsoring a bill which contains the greatest general grab of all times. It has been a distinct shock to many of us; but, oh! what a shock it must be to a country which was just beginning to be hopeful again.

Has there not been some little criticism of this House recently from the Nation at large? Have we not recently heard prominent leaders of the majority party taking the floor to protest this criticism and give assurances that it was unfounded? But if we pass this bill, what answer can we ever make to these criticisms? How can we reply to accusations that we are bargaining the welfare of the country for a few post offices which are not necessary and which the people of the selected communities in most cases never expected to get for many years and do not now want?

Others will go into the figures in detail and show how impossible it would be for the corps of Army Engineers to expand the rivers and harbors work beyond a certain point, or for the Treasury Department to go ahead with the projected buildings at more than a certain speed. They will point out the unnecessary future annual expenses which these public works will entail. I shall not go beyond a solemn warning to beware of the false appeal of this measure. The man who votes to secure a few post offices or a dredged channel for his district will not be able to appease the cry of outraged protest over the fact that his vote also fastens a billion-dollar load on an already suffering country, a load which his constituents and their children's children must help carry for many years.

Ladies and gentlemen, the important and appealing subject of relief should not be made in any way a party matter, though the majority party, in its attempt to jam this obnoxious measure through under an air-tight rule binding its members by caucus to support it in its vicious whole, has done its best to bring about such a result. I trust that the line of cleavage will not be that of party, but that a great majority of the Members of this House will be able in this emergency to rise above such considerations. We are squarely faced with the question of whether we are to be guided by sound and constructive ideas of relief or good old-fashioned "pork-barrel" cupidity. The issue is clear-cut and there should be no doubt of the result. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, it is my belief that the American people want the Congress first to reduce Government expenditures to the minimum whenever it can be done without materially affecting essential activities. I have consistently followed such a course. The plan means the discontinuing of activities, the dismissal of employees, the reduction of salaries.

The American people realize that the stability of our whole economic structure rests upon the stability of the economic structure of the Government. After we have cut the expense of government the American people want a tax bill sufficient to put the Treasury on a pay-as-you-go basis—they want the Budget balanced. The American people do not want one cent of additional expenses beyond that point.

A billion dollar bond issue means that the Government of the United States must borrow that much money, and that means that the taxpayers must pay it. Our people do not want more taxes. During the past two or three years practically every community in my district has rejected proposed bond issues for needed public improvements-bond issues for courthouses, schoolhouses, parks, sewers, and so forth have all been rejected because the people do not want that added tax burden. If our people locally refuse to bond themselves for public improvements, if our people locally are reducing governmental expenses, if our people locally are demanding decreased taxes, why should the National Government issue bonds, increase expenses and taxes in order to do that which the people themselves have refused to do? Personally I believe that tax money belongs to the people, that taxes should be levied for essential public purposes, but that beyond that it is better for America that the money be left with the people to whom it belongs, in order that they may spend it for productive enterprises as they see fit rather than take it away from them in order that it may be spent for productive or nonproductive enterprises as some Government official or Congress sees fit. I believe that a greater efficiency, less waste, and a more satisfactory expenditure can be had by letting people spend their own money rather than have Congress take it away from them and spend it for

So much for the general situation. What of the details of the bill?

Section 321 (a) authorizes the appropriation of $67,400,000 for public roads in the next fiscal year. This is another example of the fallacy and misleading features of the bill. This $67,400,000 has already been authorized; it has already been apportioned by the Bureau of Public Roads to the States. Nothing remains for Congress to do but appropriate the money. May I here again point out that the House Committee on Appropriations reduced the President's Budget for this purpose $19,000,000. That $19,000,000 is part of the $160,000,000 of alleged savings Chairman Byrns talks about quite often as a proof of Democratic economy. Having denied the $19,000,000 to the States that the President asked for for roads, the Speaker makes a show of willingness to appropriate to the States $67,400,000 more. That section 321 (a) does nothing but reenact existing law and the only accomplishment is to waste the paper upon which it is printed.

Section 321 (b) authorizes $150,000,000 for construction on the Federal highway system to be performed before June 30, 1933. The bill provides that that money shall be "reimbursed" to the Federal Government over a period of 10 years commencing in 1938 by deductions from Federal apportionments to these States. Pure chicanery that! For under that provision the States will never reimburse the Federal Government one red copper cent. The proposal means that beginning in 1938 States that continue the Federal-aid program will not get as much from the Federal Treasury as they otherwise might, depending on not what this Congress does but on what Congresses from 1933 to 1948 may do. That $150,000,000 is a proposed direct gift by the Federal Government to the States for road-building purposes. The States will neither match nor repay one cent of it.

The Interior Department appropriation bill took $1,000,000 from the President's Budget that was asked for for national park roads and trails. That amount is included in the savings claimed by Chairman Byrns, of the Committee on Appropriations, as a part of the claim that the Democrats wanted to save more than the President. Now that they have been fully publicized on that Speaker Garner proposes to appropriate $3,000,000 to accomplish the same purposes for which they refused the $1,000,000. On this item they propose to spend three times as much as they claim to have saved.

In the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill $595,000 was deducted from the appropriation for forest roads and trails. That sum is included in Chairman Byrns's total of alleged savings. That amount was deducted largely from proposed expenditures in Alaska for forest roads and trails and constituted what the five of us on the Agriculture Appropriation Subcommittee considered a wise and justified reduction of expenditures in Alaska. Section 321 (c) (1) authorizes $5,000,000 to be appropriated for forest roads and trails. Should it become a law it will be mandatory that $500,000 of that amount be spent in Alaska. Having deducted $595,000 from Alaska's forest roads, and justified it and claimed it as a saving, Congress is now asked to back up and appropriate $500,000 to Alaska.

This bill, by its title, is supposed to be a bill "to relieve destitution," "to create employment" by a "public-works program." This bill is built up on the basis of an assumed public-improvement need in the country and is entirely fixed and inflexible. "To relieve destitution" the bill should be built on the basis of the employment need and should permit the shifting of funds and expenditure from one locality to another. This bill does not and can not be made to do that. But some one may answer that the unemployment need is uniform throughout the country, and that the money should be spent uniformly throughout the country. There again the bill is wrong, for it is not built on a basis where it can be of uniform benefit to all of our population.

I have not studied all the States, but take, for instance, the authorized appropriations for public buildings and roads. On the basis of this set-up, Nebraska, from the appropriation for those two purposes, would get $4.20 per capita "relief"; Colorado would get $4.50 per capita relief; Kansas, $5.10 per capita relief; Wyoming would get $11.10 per capita relief; and Alaska, $22 per capita relief.

The public-project part of this program is reported to cost in excess of $1,200,000,000—or a cost to our people of over $10 per capita. For Nebraska that means $13,770,000 as our share of the cost. In return for that expenditure we are to receive a possible $2,645,000 for public buildings and $3,197,000 for roads, or a total of $5,842,000. This does not include possible expenditures on the Missouri River. It is readily admitted that all of the money allocated to our State for buildings and roads will not be spent in the State and that all of it will not provide labor for our people. Assuming that the people of our State would ultimately pay their share of the cost of this proposal, it follows that as a State we would lose in excess of $3,000,000 in the transaction.

The situation in Alaska illustrates the inequalities and the injustices of the bill. There are less than 60,000 people in Alaska. They are entitled to the same relief accorded the rest of our citizenship—but see what they get—a $425,000 post office for Anchorage, a town of 2,300 people, an expenditure for that community of $185 per capita for a post-office building; Ketchikan, a community of 3,800 people in southeastern Alaska, gets a post office and courthouse to cost $425,000, a per capita expenditure of $112.

Alaska is so situated that no great part of that proposed expenditure of $825,000 will inure to the benefit of the balance of her citizenship. In addition to that $825,000 it is proposed to spend $500,000 on Alaska's forest roads and spend an undetermined number of hundreds of thousands of dollars on five harbor projects in Alaskan waters. The fundamental error in the structure of the bill is illustrated by the undue favoritism shown to Alaska. I am sure that

Speaker Garner did not so intend it—but it can not be spend $2,200,000,000 more money. Is it not time that the helped when a bill is built as this one is.

Section 331 (a) authorizes the appropriation of $176,226,-223 for expeditious prosecution of the Mississippi flood-control work and $4,466,245 for the Sacramento River flood-control work. Congress has already authorized those appropriations. It is a waste of printing to include them in this bill—but the States in the lower Mississippi must not be overlooked.

Section 303, which authorizes the appropriation of $90,-000,000 for public-building projects which have not yet reached the contract stage is also a reauthorization. Their authorization already exists. Its futility is illustrated by the reference to Sidney, in my district, where the bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed as "expeditiously as possible" with a building. That building is expected to be under contract by July 4, and no further action by Congress is necessary.

Section 312 directs the appropriation and expenditure of $140,000,000 on 138 different river and harbor projects. This is again a proposed reauthorization where authority to appropriate already exists. There is a total of $478,000,000 in this bill proposing to authorize expenditures where Congress has already authorized expenditures and in many instances actual appropriations have been made.

These river and harbor appropriations again throw this bill out of balance so far as a fair and evenly balanced relief bill is concerned. All States get road and public-building expenditures, but on a basis that does not permit of an equal distribution of funds. The Coast States and Alaska all get river and harbor expenditures running into millions, while the interior States do not. In addition to public buildings and roads and river and harbors, a favored few States in the lower Mississippi flood area get $176,000,000 on top of their other allocations of Federal funds. All States get one layer of relief in an unequal spread, the Coast States get a second layer in an unequal spread, and the lower Mississippi States get the third layer, or $176,000,000, on their pork pie.

The impossibility of expanding the Government organization sufficiently to take care of this proposed expansion program is self-evident. Construction programs hastily conceived and hastily executed during the World War were accompanied by mistakes, waste, and unheard-of extravagance. I can not conceive that this program could be carried out with sufficient speed so as to be of any appreciable benefit as a relief measure without the same objectionable mistakes, waste, and extravagance.

My State levies a 4-cent tax on a gallon of gasoline. I voted against the revenue bill when it passed the House partly because it levies a gasoline tax of 1 cent per gallon. Now this bill proposes an additional tax of one-fourth of a cent on gasoline. Is there no limit in the tax burdens that are to be imposed upon the users of gasoline? This is just one additional reason for opposing this bill. I can not support this bill on principle, but waiving that, it should not be supported because of its obvious inequalities and injustices, and manifest waste expenditures.

I think it fair, also, to consider that this program includes increased interest charges against the Treasury, several millions of dollars annually increased operating charges against an already money-losing Post Office Department, and loss of taxes and payment of rents in those communities where buildings are proposed to be built.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, in presenting this bill to the House the Democratic majority has demonstrated its absolute incapacity to learn anything from experience.

For three years this country, by its corporations spending big money and getting in debt, by its municipalities and its States spending big money and getting in debt, has made greater deflation. We have by these means created unemployment, and we have stopped the natural processes of recovery so that the depression has been made worse. After that has been clearly demonstrated the Democratic majority in the House comes in here and brings in a bill to spend $2,200,000,000 more money. Is it not time that the people of this country came to the realization of what the Democratic majority is trying to foist upon the public? The public back home knows this situation. They do not want it.

For the purpose of pork barrelling this bill through they included an item of $315,000 for a new post office and a new courthouse in my home town. I know we do not need it. I wrote home to the papers there that we did not need it, and the independent paper in that town came out with an editorial supporting my position. That is just a sample of the items throughout the bill. They will not create employment because on these post-office buildings only one man is put to work for each $5,600 expended. In highway construction only one man is put to work for each $3,600 expended.

Nobody wants to get away from taking care of relief. The proposition of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley] provides for loaning the money necessary to take care of those who are suffering. We have already turned over 40,000,000 bushels of wheat for the relief of suffering, and there are 90,000,000 more bushels in the possession of the Farm Board that can be used in the same way if we need it.

Let us do things in an intelligent way and not destroy the confidence of the people which we have gained a little bit by the action of last week, and give the country a chance to recover, and employment a chance to get back. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Clancy].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been called throughout the afternoon a "pork barrel" bill, but I think it is sort of a combination pork barrel bill and gasoline drum or cask bill. The bill carries at least $42,000,000 of taxes additional on gasoline, although gasoline is now being taxed 125 per cent, and there is the greater portion of a billion dollars of taxes on automobiles which burn gasoline, and you have recently added $150,000,000 more in the revenue bill to the gasoline tax. Every time you beat the gasoline drum you squeeze a little "pork" out of the "pork barrel."

I want to make a deal here. I want to give back, temporarily at least, $2,000,000 in items in this bill for Detroit. I want to forego the two items for the city of Detroit and make a deal with the gentlemen on the other side to give my Detroit people back $2,000,000 in gasoline taxes.

I do not see how any Member of Congress with an idea of responsibility to his people can vote for this bill. It is too wasteful.

There is in the bill $1,700,000 for a parcel post office station in Detroit near the Michigan Central Railroad. Now, all the railroads have notified the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department that in the future, 5 or 10 years from now, they are going to build a union station several miles from where you want to put up this building. So, you would then have to tear down this building and remove it several miles. The union-station project is probably 5 to 10 years in the future. There is this $1,700,000 item which we present to you to keep in the brine for five years or so.

There is another item in the bill of $300,000 for an appraisers' stores building in Detroit. I know this is absolutely not needed in this period of terror and desperation, because I was customs appraiser in Michigan for five and a half years. I know the present building is good for some years. With the collapse of world trade, with the collapse of imports the building that we have in Detroit will do, also because a large new Federal building is being completed now in Detroit, and more room can easily be obtained in the present appraiser's building.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] said that those of us who did not want the building projects could deposit them on the Democratic table. Speaking purely for myself and not for the other Members from the city of Detroit, I desire to deposit the $2,000,000 on the table over there, to be held until a more auspicious time.

I can compliment the House on passing out yesterday a bill providing for distributing 50,000,000 additional bushels of Government wheat. We are suffering in Detroit, but nobody is starving to death there yet. The gentleman from Arkansas said to-day, I believe, that our people in Detroit are starving. We are not allowing anybody to starve. Most of our needy are not native sons. They are people who come from other States; but we are feeding them just as generously as our own people. These needy come from every State and every country.

Detroit has been most anxious to see that no man, woman, or child within its borders starves; and I say this to contradict rumors and newspaper stories both in this country and in Europe that people have starved to death in Detroit. We have taxed our people to the absolute limit to feed the hundreds of thousands of strangers from other States and countries within our gates, who have been rendered destitute by the fact that one out of every three workingmen and working women are without jobs. Tens of thousands of our working people have been without employment for two years, and one can appreciate the destitution and suffering in Detroit.

No community in the world has been more generous with its public welfare and private welfare funds than Detroit, but we are now reaching the breaking point.

We have had to lay off thousands of city employees, including firemen and policemen, who are absolutely necessary for the safety of life and property in the city. Our school teachers have had to go without pay for periods. We want help and we want it badly; but it is no help to us to have a wasteful "pork barrel" bill like this go through the House and assess the cost of it upon the chief industry in Detroit—the automobile industry.

Autos were assessed three-fifths of the billion dollars plus revenue bill, which was signed by the President yesterday afternoon. Now, this bill proposes an additional $42,000,000 to $88,000,000 assessment in gasoline taxes. Ninety per cent of these gasoline taxes will be upon autos. If the interest on the bonds is 4 per cent, the cost per year will be $88,000,000.

Nearly everybody in this House knows that many of these public buildings and other public works provided for in this bill are entirely unnecessary at this time and constitute a tremendous waste.

A steady stream of protests has been waged to-day against individual buildings by Members who speak of building projects in this bill proposed for their districts and of which they had intimate knowledge. For the past few days numerous other individual instances of waste in this bill have been demonstrated.

The evidence is absolutely incontrovertible. May I bolster up what I have already said about the $1,700,000 item for a parcel post office in Detroit, by testifying that Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Ferry K. Heath has said that this project would go through "only over his dead body."

Mr. Heath is the high-class official who has charge of the Federal building program, and he has intimate knowledge of the Detroit situation because he is a native of Grand Rapids, Mich. He says he knows that because of the depression causing a considerable decrease of post-office business that the new building is not required at the Michigan Central Railroad station near the present Roosevelt sub post office. Formerly the item was approved by the Treasury Department.

But since the railroads have requested that the new parcel post office be not built until they have determined upon the site of their downtown union station, which they are proposing, Mr. Heath says it would be pure insanity to put $1,700,000 into a new modern building which would have to be abandoned or torn down in the near future when the new union station is built.

Amplifying what I have said about the wisdom of the House passing immediately the bill appropriating 50,000,000 additional bushels of Government wheat to make flour and bread for the needy in Detroit, I recall to the House that I

I can compliment the House on passing out yesterday a made several speeches demanding that the former bill be providing for distributing 50,000,000 additional bushels of passed providing for the first allotment of 40,000,000 bushels.

Indeed, it was the concentrated effort of Mr. Fish, of New York, Mr. LaGuardia, of New York, and myself which forced this bill out of a reluctant committee, and it was passed out after we made threats to employ a discharge petition with the signatures of the 145 Members thereupon.

Detroit's allotment of this Government wheat has prevented tens of thousands of our people from going hungry, and it came just at the right time, when our public and private welfare agencies were going broke. It was administered very efficiently by a committee of which County Auditor John C. Cowan was the chairman.

We had a riot in Detroit yesterday morning in which 3,000 unemployed attacked a factory in which 18,000 people were employed.

We have had riots in the past and may have riots in the next few months and also during the coming winter. We will need this additional Government flour very urgently to relieve acute suffering and to help prevent disorders and riots.

May I also congratulate the House Rules Committee and the House Banking and Currency Committee for passing out favorably the home loan bank bill to aid home owners and home builders in Detroit? I have worked very hard for this bill both before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and with the two House committees.

It is a relief bill which will do us a great deal of good in Detroit and there is tremendous sentiment in Detroit for it.

In the Hawley bills, H. R. 12409 and 12410, there are provisions which will allow Detroit to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation either directly or through the State of Michigan, which is specifically given the right in these bills to borrow.

I was assured in the Republican conference yesterday afternoon that these bills would give Detroit the right to borrow from the Federal Government and help carry my city over its present crisis.

I was told time and again by the sponsors of the bill that it provides for an extension of Reconstruction Finance Corporation credit to cities and that it will allow the purchase of refund bonds by the corporation and that the bill will provide openings for welfare help.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, every endeavor of this Congress for economy and balancing the Budget is cast to the winds when you pass this greasy "pork-barrel" bill. It is generally understood that the condition of unemployment is greatest in our large industrial centers. I challenge the distinguished leader of the majority to point out in this bill where there is one dollar of expenditure for public buildings in the 20 largest cities of the country. No. You propose to distribute in little agricultural communities where there is little or no unemployment. You propose to expend $176,000,000 for flood relief on the Mississippi River, where there is no destitution. You propose to spend money for good roads, and we are surfeited with good roads, merely to pile up taxes on the present overburdened taxpayers of the country.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. I will tell you one. They are contemplating a bridge-

Mr. STAFFORD. I said public buildings. I am in favor of the proposal of the administration as incorporated in the motion to recommit whereby the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be authorized to build tubes in New York City and bridges in New York City, and public and private works in our other large industrial centers, but you are standing up against that very constructive policy which the President is back of, and favoring an expenditure of over a billion dollars in communities where the pangs from unemployment are wanting, and mostly on public buildings, roads, and rivers where the expenditure is pure economic wastefulness. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WELCH. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in regard to the subject of what he was about to speak when interrupted by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.
Mr. WELCH. By reading a telegram addressed to me:

San Francisco is looking to you to vigorously support amendments to Reconstruction Corporation financing bills to include San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge. Am advised these bills, unless amended, will exclude this vitally necessary project. Under our State law bills should be amended to provide that Finance Corporation may purchase bonds of public agencies of States. Inclusion of transbay bridge would greatly aid economic conditions

ANGELO J. ROSSI, Mayor of San Francisco.

Mr. RAINEY. Title II of this bill fully meets that case. In that case, as I understand it, arrangements have been made to issue bonds, and that this is a $75,000,000 proposition. That is the kind of proposition we will be looking for if this bill passes, and it is fully covered.

Mr. WELCH. May I say to the gentleman this refers to the transbay bridge, which is a $75,000,000 project. Section 2 also covers what is known as the Golden Gate Bridge, a $35,000,000 project, for which contracts have already been let. Like inquiry is also made by Ossian E. Carr, city manager of Oakland; by Marshall Hale, president of the Down Town Association; and Joseph R. Knowland, vice president of the California State Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. RAINEY. This bill meets the situation. Mr. WELCH. I understand that under the provisions of the gentleman's bill those projects are fully covered.

Mr. RAINEY. They are fully covered. Mr. WELCH. I am satisfied that the bill sponsored by the gentleman from Oregon does not cover them as completely as the bill sponsored by the gentleman from Illinois. The telegrams referred to are as follows:

OAKLAND, CALIF., June 6, 1932.

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of city of Oakland, urge your earnest support to necessary amendments making possible inclusion San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge under Reconstruction Corporation financing. This project would greatly stimulate industry and relieve unemployment and is vital to bay-district development.

Ossian E. Carr, City Manager of Oakland.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 6, 1932.

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH,

House of Representatives, Washington:
Understand amendment necessary to Reconstruction Corporation finance bill to permit authorization to buy securities issued by public agencies of State; and as such action necessary to have our bridge projects considered, we earnestly urge your support to amendments making such provision.

DOWN TOWN ASSOCIATION. MARSHAL HALE, President.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 6, 1932.

RICHARD J. Welch,

House Office Building, Washington:
California State Chamber of Commerce earnestly requests your active support to amendments to be submitted by Kahn and Johnson (H. R. 12410, Hadley), (S. 4755, Wagner), which will permit purchase of bonds by Reconstruction Finance Corporation of revenue-producing and self-amortizing California projects, including bonds of revenue-producing public water districts, of which the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California is an example, and also such projects as the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge. This we understand to be in line with President Hoover's program to assist in financing of self-Bridge. This we understand to be in line with President Hoover's program to assist in financing of self-supporting projects.

JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND, Vice President.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 7, 1932.

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH,

Hon. Richard J. Welch.

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In order that proposed projects to be eventually publicly owned, such as proposed San Francisco Bay bridges, may be included in permissible financing of Reconstruction Corporation, it is necessary that pending bills be amended to provide that corporation may purchase revenue bonds of public agencies of States. You are urged to support such amendments in interest economic conditions, this area. ditions this area

CALIFORNIA STATE AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION, D. E. WATKINS, Secretary-Manager.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., June 7, 1932.

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH.

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.: City about to offer $6,000,000 Hetch Hetchy bonds for sale. Newspapers here carried Washington dispatch to the effect that Federal loan bill would make money available to municipalities for public improvements, making loans therefor on municipalities for public improvements, making loans therefor on municipal obligations voted by the people. Please wire me if this is correct and when money would be available and prospects of the Government taking our Hetch Hetchy bonds.

JOHN J. O'TOOLE, City Attorney.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] had the floor, I made the statement that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Chiperfield] had voted by proxy in the Committee on Military Affairs for the favorable report of the Army housing bill, which was reported by the Military Affairs Committee less than a week ago and which is incorporated in the pending Rainey public works bill. I also stated that the proxy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] was held by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. James].

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] questioned my statement. The facts of my statement are correct, but my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] states to me that he did not know that the Army housing bill was coming up for action by the Committee on Military Affairs on the day that the bill was reported, that he was not familiar with any of the items in the bill, and, of course, the gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dickinson]. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, with some reluctance and hesitancy I am taking the time of the committee for a brief few minutes. I want to say a few words with reference to that section of the country in which I live and as to which the charge is made that the erection of public buildings, standardized and at reasonable prices, is "pork barrel," while we are spending millions in the great cities without any protest. Population, wealth, and power are going from the agricultural sections into the great cities and centralization encouraged to the detriment of the small cities.

We are asking in this bill to carry out a program in accordance with the utterances of the President as delivered time and again. In this Garner relief bill there are five cities named in the sixth district of Missouri, which I have represented for 18 years-Windsor, Pleasant Hill, Holden, Rich Hill, and Eldorado Springs. For 15 years I have been trying to secure Federal post-office buildings for these cities. Hon. Thomas Halsey, who served from this district during the last term, also introduced bills for these same cities, all worthy measures and earnestly desired by these communities. These were not "pork barrel" propositions then, nor are they now. If worthy then, they are worthy now. Why should I not support these now which I have cordially supported in the past? Why should the building programs in the small cities be abandoned or delayed when hundreds of millions are being spent in the erection of expensive Federal buildings in the great cities? I make no complaint but ask that all be treated alike. For 15 long years these communities have asked for reasonably priced Federal buildings and that the surplus revenues of these communities be applied to the erection of post-office buildings there and not taken into the great cities. We are inviting these building projects in the small cities and hoping that the labor that is centered and congregated and is now idle in the great cities may come back to these communities. Let us all build together, cities and small towns alike, and let all the country have the benefit of these appropriations and let employment be provided in all sections. Let us think about the agricultural communities. The country outside of the cities is entitled to as much consideration as our great cities, where millions of dollars are spent with approval of the administration and of the Congress, but in the district where I live I hear no word of protest and no word of "pork barrel." They want these buildings that they have been asking for for 15 long years, and they do not understand why Congress continues to appropriate only for public buildings in the large cities. Why should small cities in the agricultural sections be drained of their surplus revenues to be expended elsewhere?

In the foreword of the Book of Washington the statement is made that $400,000,000 for the District of Columbia, covered by the city of Washington, have been authorized in four years, one building alone, the Commerce Building, costing seventeen and a half millions, beside the grounds upon which it is erected of equal or greater value; twenty-two and a half millions recently authorized for Federal building in Chicago, seven and a half millions in St. Louis, and multiplied millions in the aggregate for all the great cities. No cry of "pork barrel" there, but when a program is proposed for public buildings throughout the country to take care of needed and long-delayed projects, where labor can be employed not only in their erection but in securing the material therefor, and the cry of "pork barrel" is heard to create opposition.

I regretted to hear an injection of sectional appeal in this debate and an attack on those who live south of the Mason and Dixon line, who want public buildings in the South. When I heard these words injected into the debate, I recalled the fact that the Civil War, or the War between the States, ended 67 years ago, when I lived in the Southland, south of the then Mason and Dixon line and near the village of Appomattox Courthouse, Va., where Robert E. Lee, commander of the Confederate forces, surrendered to the great Federal general, U. S. Grant, who uttered the long remembered words, "Let us have peace." I recall again when several years ago a then Senator from a Western State, who grew up after the war, offered a resolution in the Senate to remove the statue of Robert E. Lee from Statuary Hall. That resolution received one vote alone, the vote of the author of the resolution, and the statues of Lee and Jefferson Davis and Alexander Stephens remain in Statuary Hall as evidence to the world that the passions of the Civil War are forgotten and that there is no longer any Mason and Dixon line dividing our country. Let all those born after the war remember that the spirits of Lincoln and Lee and Grant all call for peace, and not sectional prejudice.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Lovette].

Mr. LOVETTE. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, to me this proposition is the most inconsistent I have ever come in contact with in my life. We have been working all winter in an effort to balance the Budget. The appeals have come from every section of the country insisting that Congress balance the Budget. This effort on the part of the Congress culminated yesterday in the President signing the tax bill, which is supposed to bring about that result; and now, before the ink is dry on the President's signature to the tax bill, you propose to unbalance the Budget by forcing through the House a $2,000,000,000 obligation of the Government, without the right to offer an amendment, and with only three hours' consideration, or even without reading the bill.

It seems that after you have concluded that you had the Budget balanced that you have absolute license to do anything. The strange thing about the whole proposition is that you gentlemen on the other side of the House have just now found out that it is necessary to do something for the relief of the unemployed. You say that being in the majority you take the responsibility; and that is true, the responsibility being yours. You should have found out before this time that the country was in great distress in many sections and needed relief. One gentleman, in discussing this proposition this afternoon, made the statement that no step had been taken for relief in this Congress until now. I call your attention to the fact that I introduced a bill on the 8th day of February, four months ago, seeking relief for those who are in distress and which provides much more adequate relief than is proposed in this bill.

It was a bill to provide $375,000,000 to be immediately available for allocation to the several States by the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Labor, constituting a board for that purpose, and provided that it should be allotted upon the applications of the governors of the States, showing in their applications that such an emergency existed as required aid from the Federal Government.

There is no doubt that there is great need for help in many cities and localities of the country. There is no doubt but that the charitable organizations have exhausted themselves in many sections, and that the burdens of the States, counties, and cities, in some instances, have become too great to be borne by them; and if that is true, and direct relief is needed, then we should not shirk the responsibility but should grant it.

This bill is not a relief measure; at any rate, if it could be called a relief measure, it is a poor one under the circumstances. With eight to ten million people out of employment, and in view of the fact that it is admitted that the public works in the proposed bill would only furnish employment for a very few, and in comparatively few localities, it would be impossible to scarcely make a dent in the unemployment situation. This terrible situation has existed all winter, and even before that, and yet the majority comes in now, for the first time, to relieve the situation with this wild and extravagant proposition. To build post offices where they are not needed, and to dredge rivers, which would be considered an extravagance even in prosperous times, and at the same time proposing to add to the tax burden by a bond issue of $1,000,000,000 with no adequate provision to meet it-coming as it does at this late date I want to lay down this proposition to the majority on the other side, that from your action in connection with this matter you would not vote for real relief if it were not for the pork barrel that is in it. [Applause.]

The reason I say this is because you have been here six months, and you have not offered any relief measure. You have taken no steps for relief. What you ought to do, and what this Congress ought to do, is to pass a relief bill, a genuine relief bill that would relieve the distress in this country, and not raid the Treasury with a dubious proposition which can not stand the test even in prosperous times.

The distress that is prevalent in the country to-day may go on for some time, and it probably will, and the Government may be called upon to grant relief beyond anything which you have yet conceived, and when the time comes to give that relief the Government should be able to do it, and you can not do it if you break down the credit of the Government with "pork-barrel" propositions like this.

Mr. KUNZ. Will the gentlemen yield for a question?
Mr. LOVETTE. I have only three minutes, and I do not yield.

If the time does come when you want money for relief of distress, it may be said, "We have spent $2,000,000,000. we have built post offices that were not needed, we have dredged rivers that could have been postponed, we have engaged in a wild orgy of spending money in reckless and wasteful expenditures that were not needed." And that is where we will get to if we go ahead with the program such as is set up in this bill. And whether it is a "pork-barrel" proposition or not there is one thing that is certain—it is an unjustifiable extravagance and you can not balance the Budget, and you can not keep it balanced, with that sort of program. I will vote for any reasonable relief bill; for a bill that will carry relief to those who need food, clothes, and shelter; for a bill that will give prompt relief, but I do not want to support a bill that will so endanger the credit of the country and cripple the finances of the country that we can not give the real relief that is so urgently needed. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Snell] inserted in the Record of June 4 last a list of post offices carried in the Garner bill giving the population of the towns, the receipts, and rentals at such places. In order that the House may have full information, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the rule by inserting as a part of my remarks a list of the offices which the interdepartmental board has authorized and for which appropriations have been partially made, as well as those offices which have been approved and allocated by such board, together with the population of such places, annual receipts, and rentals paid, and the amounts recommended for buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Busby].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill brings a portion of the relief that the proponents of it have in mind. I want to say that I believe real relief in this country must come through a reestablishment of purchasing power in the people.

It must be evident that the Government can not furnish employment to the people who are out of employment. This must come through private business. To-day I have introduced a bill in the Congress to cheapen the gold content of the dollar by lessening the gold content so as to bring it into relation with present commodity prices.

The chief purpose of the bill is to reduce the amount of gold in the dollar from 25.8 grains to 16.5 grains to bring the dollar into proper relation to commodity prices.

The present depression is unlike any other financial panic or depression which has occurred in this country. It is unlike them for the reason that the outstanding debts of all kinds—National, State, municipal, district, personal, partial-payment obligations, and other kinds of debts—are far in excess of anything the country has ever known.

During the World War new methods of salesmanship were developed by the Government to put over the Liberty and Victory bond sales, savings stamps, and other methods of raising revenue to carry on the war. After the war these same methods were adopted by all the leading business houses and commercial concerns of the country. Out of it grew the partial-payment plan, whereby the people were told that it was good business to contract on the expectation of future earnings, to pay and make payments on every kind of property-wearing apparel, farms, homes, and investments-as well as almost everything else. This method was pursued for more than 10 years, until the people had become heavily loaded, their property mortgaged by bond issues of all kinds, and burdened by private debts. These obligations were as much as the people could bear comfortably on their earnings in their best financial days when property was at a fair value and farm commodities brought a fair price.

Partial-payment-plan purchases always bind what the purchaser hopes to earn in the future—not only does his property become mortgaged, but his future earnings burdened and his income obligated and spent even before he has it. This necessarily takes him out of the free class of consumers in the future, because he is loaded with obligations until he can carry no more.

DEBTS IN THE UNITED STATES

Debts of all kinds by 1929 had reached the staggering total of $203,000,000,000. The amount of the debts was fixed at that sum regardless of what happens to the market value of property. Under our system of applying the unchangeable "gold-dollar yardstick," the debt figure must remain at two hundred and three billion, even though property values were cut in half by a change of circumstance.

At the time the debts were $203,000,000,000, the wealth in the United States amounted to three hundred and sixty-two billions—the debts were 56 per cent of the wealth in 1929. Since 1929 the market value of property has greatly depreciated until a recent statement of Government departments gave the wealth of the Nation as $240,000,000,000. So, at the present time, the debts owed by the people are about 85 per cent of the entire wealth of the Nation. We are nearing the line of national bankruptcy. I am directing your attention to this situation so that you will get the picture and clearly see the reason for the things I am about to state.

NATIONAL INCOME

In addition to property values there is another wealth in a Nation which we call the national income; that is to say, the amount that all the people earn by their wages, farming, mining, and business operations.

For the year 1929 the earnings of the people of the entire country amounted to almost $90,000,000,000. For 1930 it was about $75,000,000,000, or a loss of fifteen billions. For 1931 the annual income of the people was about $54,000,000,000—a loss of $36,000,000,000 in income when compared with 1929. This, as you see, was a loss of income of the people as a whole of $3,000,000,000 a month, an amount equal to the total expense of the National Government, leaving out interest on the national debt. For 1932, it is estimated that the national income of the people will be no more than $38,000,000,000. This will mean that the amount the people of our Nation are able to earn under the present conditions will be $50,000,000,000 less than it was in 1929.

This loss is permanent—it can not "come back." It falls most heavily on the millions of laborers who are out of work. It falls on the millions of farmers who under the present arrangement must sell the things they raise at ruinous prices, making it impossible for them to pay debts contracted when the things they had to sell were at an entirely different price from what they are to-day. Farmers have to sell five times as much cotton to get a dollar as they did five years ago. They have to sell many times as much wheat, dairy products, farm products of all kinds to get a dollar as they did five years ago.

This is not just—it is not fair—it is not an honest monetary system and our Government is at fault in not correcting it.

OUR MONETARY SYSTEM IS WRONG

Our monetary system is wrong—dollars are too high. Farm products—in fact, all other kinds of commodities, are too cheap in relation to money. Legislation must be passed to cheapen the "gold-standard dollar" and to lift the things that have real value to a better relation with our "standard of value." If this is not done, bankruptcy will certainly come throughout the land—trouble of all kinds will develop from one end of the country to the other. The masses of hardworking, stable, well-meaning, liberty-loving Americans will continue to lose respect for the National Government and resolve to take their welfare in their own hands; and who can blame them, when we could correct the evil.

THE NATION SUFFERS BECAUSE OF BAD FINANCIAL GENERALS

The people of this country believe they are being oppressed by a creditor class which has been led by such great financial generals as the former Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon; his successor in that office, Ogden Mills; the hand-picked Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Eugene Meyer. These cooperating with, and being advised by, the interests dominated by J. P. Morgan and his financial associates. The people believe that their deplorable financial situation has been brought about by the Mellons, Mills, Meyers, Morgans, Wall Street gamblers, and international bankers and credit sellers—and the people are exactly right in this belief.

These financial interests have made the "gold-dollar standard" everything; and with it as the standard of value, by manipulation and unfair handling of credits, the favored classes of the Nation have crushed the life out of the people who were unable to help themselves. They have made their property sell for nothing and have turned millions of honest, capable, well-meaning Americans who are anxious to work into the streets and out of their homes with their dependents—wives and even little children—to beg and starve. We can not see this course helping our Government. It would be foolish to think that the people are going to stand for this indefinitely. If Congress does not see that the end to our present conditions must come they will certainly realize it within the next few months from the uprisings of the people in protest.

REMEDY APPLIED BY OTHER COUNTRIES

How can the situation be met? It must be met by cheapening the gold-standard dollar. All leading countries of the world have taken that course. When the World War | ended the European countries were overburdened with private and public debts. The market value of the property did not meet the amount of the debt obligations outstanding. There was no other way for those countries, just as there is no other way for the United States, but to pass legislation which would cheapen the monetary "measure of value." Debts made in war times were often for little or inadequate consideration. People had promised in the excitement of the times almost any price. It was imperative that debts be reduced where they would be clearly within the wealth of the respective nations.

FRANCE

The "standard of value" in France was the gold franc, which before the war contained 19.3 cents' worth of gold. France later stabilized her franc on a gold basis, not at 19.3 cents, but instead a law was enacted whereby the franc would contain 3.91% cents' worth of gold, and this paid off debts contracted at the old price of the franc. This resulted in a cancellation of 80 per cent of the debt claims against the people. Instead of having to sell farm products and other commodities sufficient to get 19.3 cents' worth of gold to secure a franc, under the new arrangement they had to sell only enough to pay 3.91% cents' worth of gold to get the franc, which would pay off the old 19.3-cent franc debts.

The "standard of value" in Italy was the lira, which was, before the war, worth 19.3 cents also. Debts were created in Italy beyond the capacity of the people to pay. Italy, like France, stabilized her "unit of value," the lira, not at 19.3 cents but at 5.26 cents' worth of gold, and thereby canceled 72% per cent of the debts.

Germany took a little different course and printed so much paper money without relating it to commodity values, gold, or anything else that the people paid off their debts with paper marks, which were practically of no value, thereby canceling the debts of Germany. It is true this course was not desirable. It ruined the creditor classes, but it saved the masses of the people from trying to meet debts impossible for them to pay, and it left the poorer classes, in a large measure, in possession of their properties. The American financial policy is taking care of the creditor classes that we know as the "money barons," and destroying property values as well as the poorer and middle classes of our people by high money which can not be easily bought with commodities or property.

ENGLAND

England has largely taken the course pursued by other European countries in adjusting her finances, debts, and value relations to commodity prices. England is off the gold standard, and the English pound, instead of being worth $4.86 as fixed by the English law, is to-day worth only $3.69. It has been as low as $3.20 in recent months.

UNITED STATES

What can be done in the United States to relieve our present situation? The year 1926 was a time when money and the things people had to sell were on a fair relation in price to each other. It was about the level at which most of our debts were contracted. Debts which to pay at present commodity prices would take, so far as the farmer is concerned, three, four, and five times as much of the stuff he raises as it would have taken at the 1926 price level. This is not right. It is not a just system of government which will heap that kind of a burden upon its people. There is no fairness in it and no common sense back of an arrangement which will place the people at the mercy of persons who are the creditors under such a system.

While farm commodities have depreciated in value much more than many other kinds of commodities, the general level of all commodities compared with the 1926 price level to-day stands 64 per cent of what it was then. The amount of gold in the "gold-dollar standard," or "measuring stick of value," should also be reduced to 64 per cent of the amount of gold contained in 1926. The dollar, or "yardstick of value," should be kept in a true relation to commodity values and debts. The gold-standard dollar contains 25.8 grains of gold, but should contain 16.5 grains of gold.

In other words, people ought not to have to sell enough commodities at their present prices to buy the dollar that contains 25.8 grains of gold. They should only have to sell enough commodities to buy a dollar of 16.5 grains of gold. Commodities have dropped in price in relation to debts and dollars. There certainly is nothing unfair about this proposal. As I have pointed out above, this is what the leading nations of the world have done to save their people from the burdens of debts which they could not pay.

THE GOLD STANDARD

What is the gold standard? On March 14, 1900, Congress passed a law setting up what has come to be known as the gold-standard dollar. It is section 3511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and in order that everyone will fully understand what it is, I will quote it:

The dollar consisting of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity.

The bill I am introducing simply strikes out the figures of 25.8 where reference is to grains of gold in the dollar and inserts the figures 16.5, and leaves the remainder of the statute exactly as it is, but brings the amount of gold in the dollar into a proper relation to present commodity prices.

I am also including provisions similar to those contained in the Goldsborough bill, reported by our committee and recently passed by the House, which directs the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve bank and Secretary of the Treasury to use their powers as Government officials to keep prices stable and dependable, so that the people will know that they can depend upon the American dollar as an honest dollar.

If this bill is enacted into law, as in justice it ought to be, it would immediately strike out the 36 per cent difference between commodity values and the high price of money. When the dollar is made 36 per cent cheaper it will be that much easier for us to pay our debts. In a word, it will strike down the difference between the price of the commodity and property people have to sell, and the dollar which they have to buy in order to pay their debts.

Common justice demands that this be done. The bill I am proposing is in these words:

THE BILL

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 41, paragraph 1, Thirty-first Statutes at Large, enacted March 14, 1900, same being title 31, section 314, of the Code of Laws of the United States, be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. The dollar consisting of 16.5 grains of gold nine-tenths

"SEC. 1. The dollar consisting of 16.5 grains of gold nine-tenths fine shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity."

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar shall be 64 per cent of the purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the year 1926, and that such purchasing power of the dollar by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the year 1926, and that such purchasing power of the dollar shall be maintained and kept as near as practicable at that point by the control of the volume of credit and currency.

SEC. 3. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

SEC. 4. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

A great many bond issues and commercial mortgages contain a clause which provides that the amount of the obligation shall be "paid in gold dollars of the present weight and fineness.'

It is estimated that $50,000,000,000 or more of the outstanding debt obligations contain a contract that they shall be paid in gold dollars of the "present weight and fineness." Of course, it is impossible for these :lebts to be paid in gold, because the most gold that was ever in this country was little more than $5,000,000,000. Under our present theory of redemption of money in gold, the five and one-half billions of dollars of currency outstanding and the fifty or more billions of dollars of gold debt contracts must all be paid 100 cents on the dollar in gold, but our stock of gold at present is only $4,200,000,000. In actual practice gold is not used to redeem outstanding paper money nor is it ever required in settling these "gold-contract" obligations. The only thing for which monetary gold is actually used in any substantial way is to pay debts from one nation to another and between individuals of different countries.

The dollar mark on the gold, the French stamp on the franc, or the Italian inscription on the lire is never taken into consideration. Gold is sold and bought among nations by weight and by weight only. Even a worn $20 gold piece in the United States, if presented to the United States Treasury, is not taken at its face value but according to its weight only.

I have called attention to this impossibility regarding the contracts to pay gold for the purpose of pointing out one of the many unreasonable things we find in our monetary set-up.

The opposition heard to reducing the number of grains of gold in the dollar is that gold-dollar contracts will have to be paid in a sufficient amount of gold to equal about a dollar and a half under the new arrangement.

I would answer that by saying that it is necessary now to sell enough commodities to buy 25.8 grains of gold in order to obtain a dollar of any kind of money, since all money is on a parity with gold.

If the bill I propose is enacted into law, it will be necessary to sell enough commodities to purchase 25.8 grains of gold in order to discharge the dollar obligations called for in the gold-dollar contracts.

The billions and billions of dollars in contracts and debts which do not require the payment to be made in gold will be reduced one-third and more. Such was the course, as I have pointed out, taken by France, Italy, and other countries of the world—and such will be the course ultimately taken by the United States, if we are to avoid wholesale bankruptcy of individuals, cities, States, and perhaps the Nation.

We can "balance the Budget" this year, but when the springs of revenue dry up, the Budget will be again unbalanced. Unless the people have buying power restored to them, business can never recover and the Government can not get revenue by taxation unless the people have something to tax and money with which to pay their taxes. The Government can not furnish employment to its citizens—this must be done by private enterprise and business.

BUYING POWER OF THE PEOPLE

I have appealed to Congress time and time again during this session to consider legislation which would restore the value of commodities and the buying power of the people. These appeals have fallen, for the most part, on deaf ears. Leaders in both of the great political parties have been more intent on making fair weather for the coming presidential election than they have on considering and enacting legislation to relieve suffering among the masses and the unemployed and in restoring financial conditions for the country.

Before we adjourn Congress should enact a law which would place at the disposal of the Federal land banks enough money to enable them to carry over payments of borrowers which have become due and which can not be paid by the farmers for a period of at least another year. Forced sales and foreclosures should not be permitted to continue any longer by the Federal land banks until the people have had a chance.

The surest way to break down and destroy this country is to permit attacks to be made on the homes and farms by the creditors who hold mortgages and foreclose them, and thereby dispossess the people who produce the food and the material from which the clothing of this Nation is made.

Such a procedure is demoralizing, weakens the morale in the extreme of the most sturdy and dependable class of our population.

If the farmer does not prosper the Nation can not prosper, and that has been the cause of the beginning of our present downfall. If the farmer does not prosper the merchant can not sell his goods and his business fails. The banker has his deposits withdrawn from the bank. Doctors and lawyers can not collect their bills.

It is not possible to have prosperity in any country unless the farmers and laboring classes of people prosper and have buying power so that they can be consumers of a reasonable amount of the necessities of life.

I say again in conclusion that the burden of debt heaped upon the people must be lessened. There must be a partial elimination of debts as provided for in the bill I have presented, which in fact does eliminate 36 per cent of the outstanding debts by cheapening the dollar and thereby raising commodity prices, or later on we will find it necessary through bankruptcy and otherwise to repudiate all debts. That is one way we can get rid of the "gold-dollar contract debts" for less than their face value. Bankruptcy will wipe them out as completely as it wipes out the common obligation.

We must eliminate extravagance in governmental expenditures. We must restore to the people the opportunity to labor and earn a living.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collins].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I fear the membership of this House fails to appreciate the magnitude of our unemployment problem.

In order to discover how many people are out of work at the present time it is necessary, first, to determine the number of unemployed persons at the time of the census of unemployment, in April, 1930, and second, how many additional persons have been laid off since that time.

First, the results of the unemployment census of April, 1930, are shown on page 2 of Unemployment—United States Summary, published by the Bureau of the Census, and are reproduced here as Table I.

TABLE I

Class A. Persons out of a job, able to work, and looking for a jobClass B. Persons having jobs but on lay off without pay,	2, 429, 062
excluding those sick or voluntarily idle	758, 585
Class C. Persons out of a job and unable to work	172, 661 Class D. Persons having jobs but idle on account of sickness or disability	273, 588
Class E. Persons out of a job and not looking for work	87, 988 Class F. Persons having jobs but voluntarily idle without pay	84, 595
Class G. Persons having jobs and drawing pay, though not at work (on vacation, etc.)	82, 335

Obviously not all of these persons were unemployed in the ordinary meaning of the word, particularly classes C and D, who were idle because of sickness or disability, and class G, who were on vacation or furlough with pay. Classes E and F, however, who were reported as "voluntarily idle," probably include some workers who misunderstood the questions asked by the enumerator and who were really involuntarily idle and therefore unemployed.

In this connection the census report (ibid. p. 3) states

Many persons in class E gave reasons for idleness which suggest that the reason for their not seeking work was that they felt it useless to look for work in their occupation at that time. Some of these might properly have been placed in class A if more adequate information had been available. Class F may include some persons for whom the reason voluntary lay-off was given by enumerators who misunderstood the expression.

It would probably be conservative to assume, however, that classes A and B constitute the unemployed in the ordinary sense of the term. The total of these two classes (class A, 2,429,062, plus class B, 758,585), 3,187,647, can be considered the number of unemployed in April, 1930. When it is said that this is conservative it is important to remember not only the qualifications stated above regarding classes E and F but also that there were 100,252 "omitted entries," according to the census report (ibid. p. 84). "These were cases for which there was an answer on the population schedule indicating unemployment, but no entry whatever on the unemployment schedule."

(2) Since there has been no complete unemployment census since that of April, 1930, in order to determine how many persons lost their jobs since that time it is necessary to refer to certain other information. The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor publishes in the monthly Labor Review each month reports on employment from a large number of industries and occupations, including manufacturing, anthracite mining, bituminous-coal mining, metalliferous mining, quarrying and nonmetallic mining, crude-petroleum producing, telephone and telegraph, power, light, and water, electric railroads, wholesale trade, retail trade, and hotels. The Interstate Commerce Commission publishes reports on employment on class I steam railroads each month.

In agriculture the Department of Agriculture collects reports from several thousand farms on the number of hired farm workers employed and publishes a report each month showing the "average number of hired workers per farm." In the field of building there are no employment figures available for the entire country extending back to April, 1930, although the Survey of Current Business publishes an index of construction employment in Ohio. Also the F. W. Dodge Corporation compiles data showing the number of building projects undertaken each month, the square feet of floor space represented by those contracts, and their valuation. From these figures it is possible to arrive at an estimate of the changes in employment in the building industry.

By computing the percentage changes in the various indicators from April, 1930, to February, 1932—the latest month for which complete figures are available—and applying these percentages to the actual numbers at work in April, 1930, it is possible to estimate the number of workers laid off in the various industries specified above.

The results of this computation are shown in Table II. All told the compilation covers industries and occupations in which the normal number of "persons with gainful occupations" is 26,643,323, or 54.6 per cent of the 48,832,589 gainful workers as reported by the April, 1930, census.

According to this tabulation the total estimated number of persons who have lost their jobs since April, 1930, in these industries alone is 6,502,794. This figure represents an increase of unemployment over that of April, 1930. Adding this figure to the 3,187,647 reported as unemployed in classes A and B we get an estimated total of 9,690,441.

The compilation covers only a little more than half of the gainful workers of the United States. Some of the occupations for which there is no employment information, such as public service, insurance, farming, and professional occupations, have probably experienced little unemployment since April, 1930. But common experience tells us that in forestry and fishing, construction of roads, streets, and sewers, banking and brokerage, recreation and amusement, water transportation, domestic and personal service, and many other occupations there has been a considerable increase of unemployment since April, 1930. Taking into consideration all of these factors-possible error in these estimates, the stability of employment in certain occupa-tions not included in the compilation, and the probable increased unemployment in other occupations for which there is no information-it is safe to conclude that the estimated total of nearly 9,700,000 unemployed is the minimum. It is quite possible that there were more than 12,000,000 persons involuntarily idle in February, 1932. The number of unemployed has increased since February.

The present relief bill will not furnish permanent relief. I do not believe it will provide more than temporary relief. Something, however, must now be done to relieve human suffering. This bill, if passed, will be of much help in doing this.

I shall discuss later a proposal that I believe, if adopted, will go far toward preventing a repetition of our present economic breakdown.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe in party responsibility. With it the people may hold that party responsible that is guilty of wrongs or is derelict in its duty. Without party responsibility the people are helpless.

The Democratic Party speaks only through the voice of a two-thirds majority of its members. When it so speaks it has the right to expect that its members will uphold its party plans and policies. My party organization in this House has spoken. It has indorsed this bill. I am a Democrat.

When last summer President Hoover wired us asking that we support his $250,000,000 moratorium to Europe, I refused to agree to it. And when it was brought up in this House for ratification I voted against it, because I felt that we had done enough for Europe, and that our first concern should be the best interests of the American citizens.

When President Hoover asked us to support his $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation I could not do it. I spoke against it. I voted against it. And what I then predicted about it has come true. He has placed on the pay rolls of the Government an army of high-salaried employees, drawing salaries up to $16,000 per year at a time when we are reducing the $10,000 salaries of Senators and Congressmen. It is squandering huge sums of money in wasteful overhead. It will continue to do it. It has not yet helped a single farmer in my district to stop a foreclosure or to prevent his farm being sold at sheriff's sale,

When President Hoover asked us to pass the Steagall bill giving an additional $125,000,000 to the Federal land banks, I could not support it. I spoke against it. I voted against it. And what I predicted about it has come true. Practically no relief whatever has been granted the farmers of my district from this big sum of money. Foreclosure suits are still being filed against farmers. Farms are still being sold at sheriff's outcry to satisfy judgments. Farmers and their families are being turned out of doors.

I am unalterably opposed to doles. The principle is wrong. It sets a bad precedent. It destroys initiative. It makes men shiftless. It destroys self-respect. I am willing to do everything possible to help and assist men to find jobs, so that they may earn an honest living. Earning one's own living is what satisfies.

If it were left to my individual judgment, I would never vote to place $100,000,000 in the hands of President Hoover to be doled out.

If it were left to my individual judgment, I would never vote to give an additional $1,000,000,000 to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. And I would never vote for any proposition which might involve governmental waste and extravagance.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, following the publication of the so-called Garner-Rainey relief bill, which is now being considered by the House, there emanated from the executive department under the supervision of the President's "political secretary" a flood of adverse criticism. As a result of that publicity, I have received from some constituents letters, practically all of which are in the same wording, urging me to "follow the policy of the President."

Mr. Chairman, how I should like this afternoon to be able to say that I could follow the policy of the President—how proud I should be this afternoon to be able to say that we have a President who, during this calamity, had marked out for his legislative department a real definite policy, instead of the flood of propaganda, consisting of abstract phrases and truisms which have meant nothing on the real controversial issues before Congress, but which have all been designed to sell the President to the country just as stocks in a Chinese mining project have undoubtedly been many times sold. A policy does not mean platitudes which state both sides of every public question, with a solemnity and weight that give them the appearance of deep wisdom and yet do not contain specific remedies for any of the evils outlined.

The policy of our Executive in dealing with the problems confronting this Congress has been of uniform consistency. It has been to wait and do nothing, no matter how crying the need, until Congress acted of its own initiative, then to deluge the country through the press with destructive criticism and finally to offer a program which in practically no instance received the real support of his own party.

In the matter of reorganization of governmental departments, our Executive was elected on that platform, with specific promises to use the wealth of experience and the unlimited intelligence which his supporters informed the | cities in which all forms of machinery have been prohibited, country he possessed, to accomplish this great good. Yet he allowed our Appropriations Committee practically to complete their program, with all governmental departments in status quo, and then when it became apparent in the third year of his administration that the majority of Congress was going to take the task in their own hands, he proposed a bill without any definite program except the employment of four new secretaries with their staffs.

He has talked to the press about balancing the Budget. Yet on the raising of revenue there were no specific recommendations made by the Executive or his Cabinet, and it was not until the last day of the hearing of this bill before the Senate, when it was apparent to everyone that the formation of the bill was a concluded affair, that the President. in a half-hearted way, indorsed the manufacturers' excise

On the question of economy the President and his Budget commission recommended certain expenditures, and then, if we are to believe the press, stated that there were many places where economies could be effected in his own bill. If this were true, and if our Executive were a leader, if he were laying out a policy which the Members of Congress could follow, why not, in the name of reason and fairness, stipulate to Congress what portions of his own recommendations ought to be rejected.

And now we have this relief bill. We were told this afternoon by the leader of the minority, evidently expressing the decision of their caucus, that after the debate on this bill is closed they will submit an alternative bill; a bill which must have the indorsement of the President because it is officially sponsored by the organization of his party; a bill which has not been submitted to any committee; a bill which has received no bipartisan consideration; and a mysterious bill with which none of us are familiar.

This depression started in the fall of 1929. The Executive had absolute control through his party of both Houses of Congress until March, 1931. During all that time no policy of relief, no evidence of foresight, was exhibited by our national leader. Following the convening of this Congress the Democratic majority enacted into law, in a nonpartisan spirit, practically everything that the President recommended, while he temporarily assumed the rôle of leadership in this country. Now, in the closing days of this Congress, we have come to the place where some relief must be given to the animal needs of the human beings who occupy this continent. To say that we have balanced the Budget, that we have aided the railroads, that we have salvaged banks. and helped the insurance companies are all fine accomplishments; but they will not relieve hunger during the ensuing winter. We must do something now; we ought to have done it six months ago; and if we had had executive leadership in our Commander in Chief after the manner of a Roosevelt, a Wilson, or a Lincoln, we would not be waiting until the last days of Congress to perform the most important act of

They tell us that but 30 per cent of the money involved will go toward the payment of labor on the job. In final analysis we know that practically every cent will be consumed either in labor or interest charges. If not on the job it will be in the quarries, in the factories, and on the farms and in the mines, where the raw materials are raised and the commodities manufactured. Nor is this more than the start of the help extended. The money thus spent for labor will be used by those laborers to buy other material for food, clothing, and shelter coming from other farms and factories, thus multiplying by manyfold the benefits that these improvements will bring if constructed. They tell us this is a "pork-barrel" proposition. Did you ever hear of a pork-barrel" program in which one party in the legislature turned the entire expenditure of the money and the complete determination as to where the money should be spent over to the opposition party?

In extending relief we have two methods of procedure-one is to give the money out directly and the other is to give the individual employment. If we give employment we can supply unnecessary work, such as has been done by a number of or we can give necessary work, done by modern methods, resulting in permanent improvements. In the final analysis the amount of money to be given must be adequate to supply the need, and I doubt very much whether there would be a great deal of difference in the amount required, whether it be an outright gift or invested in valuable public work. For my own part, I do not like an outright gift. It produces no permanent benefit and demoralizes the recipient. I do not like the creation of unnecessary jobs, because the worker realizes that he is doing a useless, silly job. His self-respect is not maintained, and the public receives no benefit. There is only one way to extend relief, and that is to afford work on useful public improvements.

It is remarkable, the lack of real information given to the public about this bill. In 1926 the Congress of the United States, carrying out, no doubt, the recommendations of the Secretary of Commerce, who at that time was one Herbert Hoover, to the effect that public construction should be planned for in advance and that it should be carried on in times of depression, enacted a law which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General to survey the United States and determine where buildings were needed. An interdepartmental committee was appointed and a list of needed buildings prepared by this committee after investigation, together with the funds needed for those buildings. We now have before Congress this bill which simply reenacts the former legislation and formally approves the recommendations of this interdepartmental committee. No appropriations are made in the Garner-Rainey relief bill; there is no obligation upon any official to spend one cent of our money in construction work unless the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General approve such expenditure.

In 1926 President Hoover did not criticize the action of Congress, yet in 1932, in the midst of the very depression for which the act of 1926 was designed, out of his department emanates the cry of "'pork-barrel' legislation." If there are any "pork-barrel" tactics employed in the administration of this law, it will have to be under the direct supervision of the Executive of the United States and he will be chargeable therewith.

Are we unwilling to follow the "policy of the President," when we are turning over to his direction $100,000,000 for him to disburse as public relief during this winter or not, as he so desires? This is far greater confidence expressed in him by a Democratic majority than a Republican majority were willing to give to him at the time he had supervision over the Belgian relief.

They tell us that this money should not be lent except in self-liquidating investments. This would automatically eliminate all highway construction, harbor improvement, and, in fact, every form of public works conceivable except in cases where municipalities enter into the construction of power plants.

They tell us that this bill will unbalance the Budget. It has certainly been my conception that the balancing of the Budget referred only to recurring expenditures and not to capital investments. It is utterly absurd to talk about balancing the Budget so far as building programs are concerned. This Government has balanced its Budget by very rigid economies, and by its revenue-raising bill. Such extraordinary expenditures as are necessary to afford relief have no place in the consideration of the operating Budget of the Government.

They tell us this is not a permanent relief, and that when this program is over, unemployment will still exist. May Heaven forbid that that condition will exist: but if it does, we are doing the best that we can do at the moment; we are carrying out the only program for direct relief that has received real consideration. Certainly it will not remove permanently the cause of this depression. Nothing less than the reestablishment of world trade and the reduction of impassable tariff barriers will ever accomplish that. We can not, by a policy of universal tariffs, load down all the civilized world with ineffective industries and expect a world that lives on commerce to be prosperous.

In the meantime, I shall cast my vote for this measure because I see nothing better proposed. Our Commander in Chief has waited from the fall of 1929 until the spring of 1932 to devise some relief methods, and I do not believe that such tardiness is conducive to confidence.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, if we did not know that our friends on the other side held a caucus we would know it by the unanimity with which they have expressed themselves here to-day. Evidently they voted last evening to dub this a "pork barrel" bill, and they have appeared here to-day following their bellwether and delivered their message.

I want to call your attention to a "pork barrel" that is no ordinary "pork barrel." It has no bottom.

We have a Federal Farm Board "pork barrel" that has no bottom, and no less than 8 or 10 friends on the other side have introduced bills asking for fifty million to a hundred million dollars to put into this bottomless "pork barrel." The ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Hawley] has one bill, and the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee [Mr. PURNELL] has another, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Strong] has another one, which he says was recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde, and President Hoover from his Rapidan fishing camp advises the Congress to pass a bill that would give a hundred million dollars to the Federal Farm Board. Having no more time, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein a letter from the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Strong] to the editor of the Wichita Beacon.

There was no objection. The letter referred to follows:

> CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Washington, D. C., May 20, 1932.

Mr. M. M. LEVAND,

Wichita Beacon, Wichita, Kans. My Dear Mr. Levand: Miss Krieselman advises me this morning that you are very much opposed to the bill I introduced yesterday at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture and the officers of the American Farm Bureau, which has for its purpose the use of $100,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the Secretary of Agriculture for purchasing and financing sales of wheat and cotton in the markets of foreign countries, in which such sales can not be financed in the normal course of commerce with exporting nations. It gives the Secretary authority to finance such sales either through an export corporation that he shall create in his own department or through any existing agencies. The term financing sales shall be held to include the purchase of domestic wheat and cotton and the sale of either for cash or on credit.

I realize that you have made a determined fight on the Federal Farm Board, and I fear your prejudice against the board is causing you to misinterpret the purpose of this bill. It was drawn so that the Secretary might, with an export corporation he himself should create in his own department, or he might, if he thought best, purchase the wheat and cotton either of the Farm Board or otherwise. About three weeks ago the President advised me that he was informed that the Secretary of Agriculture could sell wheat and cotton to certain foreign countries if he could be supplied with funds that would enable him to extend credit, taking good securities therefor. Later the Secretary of Agriculture came down to the House and had lunch with me and dictated the language of the bill, stating that he could sell much of our surplus wheat and cotton to certain countries before the new crop came in, which, he thinks and I think, would be of great advantage.

the thinks and I think, would be of great advantage.

I realize there is a good deal of jealousy as to who shall sell this wheat (whether it will be the grain trade, the Farm Board, or the Secretary of Agriculture), but somebody ought to sell it and get it out of the country.

The argument that to sell wheat upon the market to foreign countries would interfere with the exportation of wheat by other organizations and interfere with our market does not seem to me to be sound. The wheat is in the show window now, either with the Farm Board or in storage in the countries, and to my mind the important thing is getting it out of the country before the next crop is harvested.

The argument that it will reduce the price of wheat seems to The argument that it will reduce the price of wheat seems to me could only happen if the wheat was purchased and sold at a lower price than the market. But I am informed that if this wheat could be financed to European buyers, giving them time to receive the wheat and sell it before settling for its financing, that they would be willing to pay a better price even than the market. My information is that the Secretary has been in touch with those who could sell the wheat in foreign markets at a good price; but while they have not the money to finance its purchase and shipment, they have good securities to pledge until the wheat could be delivered and sold.

I looked at this thing rather carefully before I introduced the bill, and I hope that the press will not seek to prejudice the people before the facts develop.

before the facts develop.

I realize that with the national election in the offing and the Democratic leaders of a Democratic-controlled House seeking to embarrass the President that the opportunity to abuse Congress as a whole is looked upon as news. Loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are criticized. But I think I can say to you that the financial program of the President, forced through Congress not because the Democratic managers of the House wanted to go along with the President but because the true situation was made so plain to them that they dared not do otherwise, has avoided what I believe would have been the greatest financial panic this or any other nation ever experienced. While I think we have passed the crisis, so far as a great financial disaster is concerned, the greater number of unemployed, the panic that exists among bankers and business men, has developed into a fear that prevents their resuming business, and until this results conditions will not improve. conditions will not improve.

I honestly think that if we had a House that was in accord with the Executive that the passage of suggested legislation would have greatly improved conditions. I know that they are improving, but I am afraid it will take some time.

I inclose you copy of the bill I introduced yesterday.

Sincerely yours,

P.S.—The thought has come to me that perhaps you feel that the $100,000,000 will be turned over to the Federal Farm Board, but I assure you that such is not the purpose, because the bill especially provides that the money shall be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture, so that he alone can control the same in the interest of exporting wheat and cotton to foreign countries. I.G. S. tries .- J. G. S.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of the Committee of the Whole to a circular letter which you probably all received this morning from the American Farm Bureau Federation. This outfit in my estimation is the most vicious and dishonest lobby in Washington. Vicious because they will trade or sell the welfare of the farmer, whom they have led Congress to believe they represent, to assist in creating and maintaining organizations for the purpose of high-salaried jobs. They will also trade the welfare of the farmer to the high-tariff interests of the country, thereby placing an additional burden upon the backs of sorely pressed farmers and destroy their markets abroad. They have carried this to the point where they now desire to obtain money from the Treasury to give away in Europe farm surpluses which would not be here and which would have been sold in the regular channels of trade long since, if it were not for this lot of propagandists who seek to get their hands deeper in the Federal Treasury so as to perpetuate this monstrous inequality, the Federal Farm Board, with all its costly subsidiaries.

If we have wheat and cotton to give away, let us give it to those American citizens who are now without funds, without work, through no fault of their own.

If the Federal Farm Board has squandered the $500,-000,000 that were given them and can not deliver to the unemployed this surplus cotton and wheat, let them present this Congress with a statement and admit the facts, but not come here under the guise of exporting surpluses in order to again raid the Treasury.

Our Republican friends have dubbed this bill a "pork barrel" bill, but there is no greater "pork" than is recommended by Mr. Hoover when he asked Congress to provide more money for the Federal Farm Board, who have been paying scandalous salaries through their various subsidiaries, all of which have come from the Treasury. I charge that these $500,000,000 have been absolutely wasted, partly because of the ignorance of those who were in charge of it but largely because of their dishonesty. I charge that the members of these subsidiary cooperatives have been speculating in the market on their own account. I charge that the Farmers National Grain Co. has purchased a bucket shop, paying $200,000 for the stock of this same bucket shop when the stock was not worth one-quarter of this price upon the open market. This same bucket-shop subsidiary of the Farmers National has been expelled from the Chicago Board of Trade for violation of its rules and is now demanding that the board be closed by that arch politician. Secretary Hyde.

many Members of Congress have come to believe that those engaged in the merchandising of farm produce are by nature vicious and rapacious. If there has been or is any abuse in the Chicago Board of Trade, I hold no brief for them; and I have introduced a resolution to investigate and find out the facts with regard to the Federal Farm Board, the Chicago Board of Trade, and the cotton exchanges. This Congress should know the facts and not rely upon propaganda to shape their course and justify large appropriations from the Treasury.

So far as I am personally concerned I have had 30 years of experience in marketing of grain and other farm produce. I am personally acquainted with many members of the Chicago Board of Trade. There are scores of these members who never have executed an order on the board which involved any speculation upon their part. In my 30 years' experience I have never bought or sold long or short upon the board of trade, and I know that is true of scores of others of the board's members. I want to call your attention to the fact that thousands of cars of cash grain are consigned to these members every season with no price fixed, with the grade not even established, and they have handled this large volume of business in such an honest and equitable manner that small shippers continue to consign them year after year; and I make this assertion without fear of contradiction that those records can be checked and it will be found that 99% per cent of all these transactions have been handled in an honest and upright manner, that there has been no overcharge to shippers, and that they have accounted for the last cent received.

You can not condemn these thousands of merchants if there have been, and I do not admit it, some irregularities among the membership of the board of trade. This organization will stand comparison with any other business organization. I estimate that this House is composed of at least 75 per cent attorneys. Would you condemn the American Bar Association for the dishonesty of a few of its members? I do not think you would. I have many friends among your profession whom I know are honest and conscientious, and I have been so impressed with the membership of this body. However, if the handling of some bankrupt estates by the members of the American Bar Association were dragged into the light of day, and if they were investigated as this Chicago Board of Trade has been investigated, I believe that you would have a higher regard for the membership of the Chicago Board of Trade and the grain trade in general.

This attempt to obtain more money for the propagandists of the Federal Farm Board so that they might continue the existence of this institution and enjoy their fat salaries is indefensible.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crowe].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is an undisputed fact that conditions in the United States are the most deplorable that have ever been known before in this country. Hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children are not just hungry, but they are really in a state of slow starvation for the lack of proper food to preserve life and health. unemployed in this country are now placed at 11,000,000, and according to the American Federation of Labor and other organizations who are in a position to give competent figures, it is stated that the unemployed increase at the rate of 280,000 a month.

This condition means ultimate disaster unless some positive, corrective measures are taken to avert it. Local institutions in cities, towns, and even villages have been nobly combating this terrible condition which is equal to, and in many instances, worse than war. But many of them have reached the end of their resources. That statement is an unchallenged statement and can not be successfully contradicted in face of the recent conference of the mayors of 31 of the leading and ranking cities of the United States. The people living in Washington hardly know that a panic is on, and they hardly know that disaster is abroad in the land. since they are mostly employees and officials of the Govern-

You have read and listened to so much propaganda that | ment, and up to this time have been drawing their regular salaries. The first real indication that the people of Washington have had of the nation-wide panic was with the arrival of the bonus army in the Capital, from all parts of the land; and in that connection, whether this army was ill-advised in assembling here or not, we should not say harsh things of them because they are part of that great army, the flower of American manhood, who went forth to save our country in the great World War.

Many people have said that this is a crisis equal to a state of war. What would this country do in time of war? What would we do if they sunk our passenger ships? What would we do if their fleets would bombard our coast cities? Would we debate and lose valuable time, hoping that maybe in 60 days or 6 months they would cease? When our Government is threatened in time of war, do we say that we do not have the money, and that we have to balance our Budget? Have we ever said during war that we have to quit fighting, that our Budget is unbalanced? That is the story right now. I ask you that if our conditions are equal and amount to a state of war, then why do we consider longer to take a chance by letting our millions go hungry? It is true that the Government voted to give and did give to the Red Cross 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to aid the starving people. I supported that measure whole-heartedly. Another 45,000,000 bushels was voted, and I supported that measure. That, however, is only a drop in the bucket to what is needed. Moreover, it is just a dole; and doles are what we have all said that we do not want, but if we do not find any better way to take care of our jobless, hungry people before this winter, I am of the opinion that the Government will have to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars which will be used as an outright dole in some form or other.

For six months this Congress has been nobly working, and both sides of the House cooperating for measures to relieve the distress of the country. Chief of these measures is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I supported this measure whole-heartedly, along with other relief measures. I knew that they would help some, and they have given tremendous relief. They have saved hundreds of banks and helped in many ways along that line. However, they are and can only be of a temporary nature, as far as relief is concerned. They have hardly given a job to the working men, they have not relieved the distress of the common men and the poor people, they have not fed any widows or orphans, they have not furnished a home for the poor who were ejected from their homes, because they were unable to pay their rent. Foreclosure on farms and homes in the city have continued by the thousands, and families are being grouped in small residence and small apartments with distress increasing. The poor of this Nation have been patient and have waited for some relief actions to be taken, which is to their everlasting credit. Is the Government going to take such action, or is it going to continue to overlook all of these hungry, homeless people? Will Congress adjourn and go home, without making a provision for the common people, or the poor people of this Nation?

The Congress must support a relief of proportions adequate to meet the occasion, or hundreds of millions of dollars will of necessity be appropriated by the next session of Congress and signed by the President. Why longer delay?

STOCK EXCHANGES

The financial heads of the stock exchanges, the international bankers, and big interests, in my opinion, have more to do in continuing the distress in this country than all other agencies combined. It has been reported in Congress that $30,000,000,000 worth of worthless foreign bonds have been sold to innocent purchasers in the United States. That money has gone to Europe and other nations and it has been the cause of the breaking of hundreds of our banks. It has taken the life savings of millions of people, but do you see much editorial comment by the metropolitan press concerning it? No; you do not; it is passed by almost un-noticed by them. Just as soon as an investigation was started, these big money interests began at once to train their guns on Congress. When certain Congressmen and certain Senators recommended that to relieve this terrible distress there be $5,000,000,000 prosperity bonds issued for construction of Federal buildings, highways, rivers and harbors, reforestation, and other needed Federal improvements, it is at once called "pork barrel."

A $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan would only be one-sixth

A $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan would only be one-sixth of the amount of the worthless European securities sold to innocent purchasers in the United States.

Three hundred millions of South American Chilean securities sold here through New York stock exchanges, without a word of warning by the administration, are worth fifteen millions or less to-day. Two hundred and fifty millions Kreuger securities were sold here worth practically nothing. And on and on the piracy continued until some $30,000,-000,000 of securities were sold here to our people. The big interests raked in hundreds of millions of dollars. When an attempt is made to rehabilitate small business, farmers, workingmen, immediately the guns of Wall Street, the stock exchanges, and the metropolitan press is turned against Congress, throwing up a smoke screen. A relentless Federal investigation by men capable, honest, and fearless to uncover and break up those groups is needed. Things are winked at when committed by these pirates that would send men of lower estate to the penitentiary.

The manipulations of the financial bandits who have no regard for the welfare of the Nation should have their entire transactions gone into and collect all back income and other taxes from them which is due the Government, together with proper fines and charges. This will no doubt go a long way toward helping in a relief program for many thousands who have lost their life savings to these leeches.

These financial leeches are to-day profiting by untold millions by the continuance of this panic. They are determined to squeeze to the last drop, and for that reason they do not want this panic to end until they have the resources of the country within their grasp.

I mention the legislation which we have joined with the President to restore prosperity in the country. The legislation will give temporary relief, but something must be done to give permanent relief. One must go to the root and not to the top of the tree. Something must be done for the workingman in this country, which in turn will give him money with which to buy food and clothing and other necessary things in life. There is no telling how much longer this panic will last, but it most likely will last until the big interests have squeezed everything out they possibly can, and then they will release their hold and business will start to resume, but that will be after millions have lost all of their life savings, their homes, and so forth. Let us act while there is time and do something to promote the return of prosperity in this country, and give relief to the millions of unemployed.

The farmer must have aid, reduction of his tax burden and other relief. If this panic is to be allowed to run its course, hundreds of thousands of additional farmers will lose their farms. Unless progressive steps are taken more millions of jobless workers will be added to our army of unemployed now placed at 11,000,000. In times of war we spend many billions of dollars to preserve our country and its national honor. Now, because of the manipulations of the wealth of the country in the hands of a few, are we to refuse aid to those who by no fault of their own are losing their farms, their homes, and everything that they own in this world? For my part I intend to work for and vote for the interest of the common people, the farmer, the workingmen, the small merchant, and all of that great army of common people, who are the backbone and life of this country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Snell].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the very serious condition that confronts the country at the present time and that is the reason that this character of legislation is before the House. No man has a deeper desire to do what is best for every part of the country and the people than I have, and I really take it for granted that the average Member of the House feels the same toward this general relief legislation. While of course we have a little banter back and forth in regard to the adoption of rules and one thing and another, yet away down deep in his heart every Member here desires to do his duty and do something to relieve the present situation. As far as I am concerned, and I think I speak for the majority of the Members on my side of the House, there is no real politics in this bill. As far as I am concerned in my opposition there is absolutely no politics, not a particle. There are two titles of the GARNER bill that I am opposed to in principle at this time, and the Republican administration has opposed this principle from the very beginning. Title I provides for $100,-000,000 to be placed in the hands of the President to be distributed as a gratuity to anyone needing it and asking for it. That is going farther than the Federal Government has ever gone in any matter of relief as far as I know in the history of this country. The reason I am opposed to that primarily is that the minute you start that you are never going to stop it. In my judgment the $100,000,000 will probably be used before next fall, and by the time we get back here we will be asked to put up two or three or four hundred million dollars more, and you will have a heavier tax burden than ever placed on our people.

Furthermore, the minute that you hang up the advertisement that we have a $100,000,000 fund here which any man can get who says he is in need, you absolutely stop all sources of private contribution to charity. That has been the experience even in local communities.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. SNELL. For a short question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In naked principle what is the difference between the Federal Government spending money directly for destitution and lending it to the States to spend it?

Mr. SNELLi. In lending it to the States you put the responsibility nearer home for the spending of the money, and you are not getting as far away from normal process of government and where you actually give away money, and if the State itself is not interested in its individual citizens who are suffering, why should the Federal Government be interested in them?

As far as Title II in the Garner bill is concerned, I have no great objection to it. It is not materially different from the bill introduced by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Haw-LEY], H. R. 12410, but it is probably a little more liberal, and is not so specific in regard to its loans. But when you come to Title III of the bill I am absolutely opposed to issuing a billion dollars of new Government bonds to provide for uncalled-for and unneeded public improvements at the present time. I think that is the most vicious part of this whole program. When you stop to consider that we have spent six months of time trying to do this job and every energy and resource of every man on both sides of the Capitol has been appealed to in order to do something to balance the Budget-we accomplished it on paper only yesterday-and now to turn around and vote in this House to issue a billion dollars more Federal bonds and undo the work of the whole session would, I think, make us the laughingstock of the entire world. The thinking people back home will lose what confidence they now have in the House of Representatives.

We expect to offer a program in opposition to this which, in my judgment, is absolutely constructive. We propose to lend $300,000,000, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to the various States of the Union for the purpose of meeting emergencies caused by unemployment or for any other cause. As I said in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], if the States themselves are not interested in individual communities and the individuals enough to have made out a certificate by their governor that they need this money and are willing to put the credit of the State behind it, I do not think the Federal Government need spend much time worrying about it. The second part of our program is, as I said before, something like Title II of the Garner bill. Individually, I would not find any fault with Title II. I would be willing to go along with that title, even though it is more liberal than our proposition. In addition to what Garner provides in his Title II, we provide $50,000,000 to loan through the Farm Board to agricultural cooperatives for the purpose of carrying and marketing the farm crops, and also $50,000,000 to help export American farm products. In brief, here is the whole situation.

I want to make a straight, clean-cut comparison between the administration program that will be embodied in our motion to recommit and the program sponsored by Garner in the bill being considered at the present time.

The Garner bill provides, first, for $100,000,000 in gratuities to be given to individuals or communities that are in need. Second, it provides for a billion-dollar increase in the capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for lending money to various communities and individuals for various projects. Third, it provides for the issuance of $1,000,000,000 of Federal bonds for the purpose of promoting the most gigantic pork-barrel, public-works proposition that was ever presented at any time by any nation in the world.

Opposed to this, the administration plan that we are considering provides for a clean-cut proposition of lending through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $300,000,000 to the individual States for the purpose of meeting the unemployment conditions or any other emergencies. Second, we provide for a billion-dollar fund to be loaned through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to States, subdivisions of States, municipalities, and corporations for the purpose of constructing income-producing projects, projects that will amortize themselves. Our program does not place any additional burden upon the taxpayers of the country while the Democratic program provides for the issuance of a billion dollars in Federal bonds immediately, and the taxpayers will have to bear the burden of the interest and amortization of the same.

Those are the two programs that are before this House to-day. Which program will you adopt? The Republicans are standing solidly for the businesslike administration program as it will be presented in our motion to recommit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, really, the least said about this bill, the better. [Laughter.] Of course, everybody knows its purpose. Everybody knows it was constructed so as to particularly embarrass every Member on either side of the House if they vote against it. It is just a mouse trap loaded up with cheese. [Laughter.] There has been a great deal of talk about pork, but this bill also carries a distinct odor of limburger.

On the 7th of last December my distinguished colleague and former committee colleague, now the distinguished Speaker of this House, said from this rostrum:

Ordinarily this would be an occasion when I might express the hopes and aspirations of the House of Representatives in its legislative program for the coming session of Congress, but at the moment I do not feel at liberty, in fact, I do not think it advisable that I should undertake to make a statement on that subject. At an early date, and I hope at an early date, I expect to make to you a complete statement touching that program.

Up to this good hour the most sensitive microphone in the world has failed to record a single syllable to carry out the declaration made at that time, unless we come to the conclusion that this pork and cheese bill, masquerading as a relief measure, is the final answer to this promise that was made on the 7th day of last December. [Laughter and applause.]

Oh, we used to hear our friends on the Democratic side of the aisle get up and chide us about our gag rule, but you have outgagged gagdom, and, of course, we all know who is the prime mover in all these inequities. There is a beaten trail to the office of the distinguished Speaker of this House who holds the Democratic side in the palm of his hand, and you all jump when he pulls the strings. There was no caucus called when the tax bill was brought into the House to put it through. A great deal of earnestness was manifested for it.

My dear friend, the Speaker, never was for a sales tax, but he had to be sort of halfway for it, because the strongest advocate in the country for it, Mr. Hearst, had nominated him for President of the United States. [Laughter and applause. 1 So, of course, he had to kind of go along with the sales tax, but when the final show-down came they said, "Oh, let CRISP take his licking on the sales tax in the And you administered it to him. Oh, yes; you all helped. You all slipped once or twice. Then what hap-Then our dearly beloved Speaker got up and exhorted, like a Billy Sunday, on this side, all who were in favor of balancing the Budget to stand. Do you remember how he held out his arms, and everybody arose except the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], who moved near that door and sat down while the rest stood up, because the gentleman from Tennessee had taken the floor the day before and attacked the Republican administration and said there was no necessity of balancing the Budget? That heartened and gave courage to the gentlemen on the Democratic side who wanted to vote against the sales tax. I could not help thinking the other day at the ball game that our dearly beloved Speaker, when exhorting, holds his arms in the same position as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] when he goes after a foul fly-in just that same way. [Laughter and applause.] When he turned that ignominious flip-flop, after misjudging that foul fly and fell on the diamond with the umpire counting him cut, I could not help thinking that that was indicative of the present condition of the Democratic Party. The press said at that time "the political ball game was historically and prophetically true to form." An apparent advantage was lost when the man on the hill weakened; and divided leadership, as usual, threw the game away.

Oh, my Democratic friends, you are not fooling the people of the country. They know why the bill was written and they realize that it is but another example of Democratic incompetency. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hoch].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult to get much interest in discussing a bill that is brought before us under procedure such as we have here. We are told by members of the Ways and Means Committee, which reported this bill, that it was not even read in committee, and the gag rule under which it is presented to the House to-day provides that it shall not even be read in the House. It comes before us under a rule which prevents the offering of any amendments except by the Ways and Means Committee and that the amendments offered by the committee do not need to be germane to the bill. So we have no notice of what the amendments which the committee will offer are to be and we are bound under the worst gag rule I have ever seen offered in this House.

As one Member of this House, I express the keenest and most sincere regret that in a tragic hour like this, upon a question so vital as this, we should have a measure presented to us under strictly partisan procedure and in a spirit of extreme partisanship. Of all times this is no time for such proceedings. I have talked to some of my Democratic friends, and I know how they feel about the action of the Democratic caucus declaring them bound to vote for this bill, no matter what their personal views may be. I have a great sympathy for them, for I know that in a few minutes, when it comes to the vote, they are going to cast a vote, under the lash of a party caucus, which stultifies their judgment and their conscience. And yet I do not see how they can do it.

I have been a Member of this House for a number of years, and my friends on the Democratic side will bear me witness that many times I have crossed this aisle to vote for motions offered from the Democratic side, although the so-called regular vote on my side would have been to vote the other way. On other occasions, and for the same reasons, I have opposed motions made from my side of the aisle. On the economy bill which we had before us recently

I voted in every instance to protect the bill, whether the motion was offered from the Republican or the Democratic side. I believe in party organization and the need for party teamwork, but I have never believed in any blind subservience to party, and in all the years I have been a Member here I have never known any attempt in a Republican conference to bind members to vote one way or another. The Republican organization has sought to secure teamwork, but it has never, in any instance since I have been here, attempted to bind the judgment and consciences of Members. I do not see how my Democratic friends can submit to such procedure. What will your people say when you go home to them and say that you did not agree with this bill, but that you had to vote for it because the Democratic caucus bound you to do it? I think I know how far that excuse will go with the free-thinking, free-acting, independent people of that part of the country from which I come.

I wish there were time to discuss this measure, even if there will be no amendments permitted. Every man here knows that it is crowded full of pork projects that would be utterly unwarranted as a business proposition even in prosperous times, to say nothing of times like these, when the backs of the people are bending under tax burdens almost unbearable.

I could illustrate from the projects provided for my own district. Take the case of my own home town, for instance. A beautiful little town of 2,000 people, a town where I was born, where I have lived all my life, and where I expect to spend my later years. The interests of that fine little town are my interests and I am bound to it by the tenderest ties of life. But is there any sane man who thinks that under present conditions Uncle Sam should spend $70,000 of the taxpayers' money for a building in which to transact the postal business there?

Of course, it would be handsome and we would point to it with pride. But I say to you that doing things of this sort in town and county and State and Nation, and as individuals, is one of the things that is the matter with us. The first cost would be bad enough. But that would not end the matter. The department figures that the annual cost of such a building, counting interest on investment, depreciation, repairs, janitor service, heat, and light, would be close to 10 per cent of the first cost. That would mean an annual burden of at least six or eight thousand dollars a year.

The office receipts last year were about $14,000. The building alone would eat up every year half of the total postal receipts of the office. If a vast building program were to be put on it would be fairer and far better business sense to build smaller buildings in all the towns of any considerable size rather than just a few out of all proportion to postal needs.

One more illustration. Emporia, in my district, already has a substantial building, which, with the extension to the workroom now being made, serves present needs very well. And yet the bill carries a quarter of a million dollars for a new building for Emporia. That anyone should seriously consider under present economic conditions tearing down that good building and building a new one is beyond my understanding. The bill is full of projects, scattered all over the country, that have far less merit than these I have mentioned. I can not support any such utter squandering of public funds. I can not betray the policy of drastic economy which I have endeavored to follow, regardless of pressure from active and influential groups who were urging some appropriation or resisting some cut.

There is much I would like to say, but my time is limited. In these trying times the right path is hard to find and to follow, and many mistakes will be made. But one thing is sure: Adding pork under the fine name of relief will not solve unemployment or restore prosperity. That policy simply mortgages the future and puts new and lasting burdens on the backs of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Holaday].

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that an appropriation for public construction can not be justified in an hour of emergency unless such construction can be justified from the economic standpoint under normal conditions.

In other words, as far as we may go on account of an emergency is as to the time when the appropriation is to be made. It may be possible that the immediate construction of a building intended to be built in the future can be justified by an emergency.

I do not find it embarrassing to vote against this measure, and in the moment or two I have I want to call to your attention the condition that exists in my district. Buildings are provided in my district which cost an average of $71,000 each. The average population of all those towns is 2,599. I am frank to say to you, knowing the conditions, I do not believe there is any justification for the building of any of those offices with one exception.

To-day the average cost of operating the office in my district, including rent, heat, light, and janitor service, is $1,225 per annum. It is proposed to construct buildings costing $71,000. At 4 per cent the annual interest charge will be $2,840, and janitor service will be absolutely necessary in a building costing $71,000 and will be as much as the post office is to-day paying for rent, heat, light, and janitor service.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLADAY. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. Does the gentleman understand that the $70,000 items have been reduced to $50,000? And if he reads section 344, he will find that the janitor service for buildings of $55,000 or less shall be done by the postmaster and no extra compensation shall be paid to him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not have it done by the wife of the postmaster?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hoch] well expressed the thought in the minds of many of the Members of this House when he said that within three days this Democratic majority had spelled the doom of the Democratic Party in so far as the Middle West was concerned when in two days it had taxed everything from radios to gasoline and voted special discriminatory taxes, when it violated every rule of the House with the most drastic gag rule that had ever been heard of in the history of any party in the United States and bound the conscience of its alleged liberally minded progressive Members who have sworn that they will abide by the wish of a majority of the Democratic Members of this body when they do not believe a majority of the Democratic Members are right.

In verse, the situation of the poor taxpayer might be expressed as follows:

While Garner and Rainey are issuing pork
For the Democrats, claiming that men can get work,
The plain common citizens know of the taxes
They'll pay, and repay, while they whet up their axes
For men who dump money in building and rivers
And don't give a cuss for the taxpayer's shivers.

In the Tombigbee River and at the crossroads
They dump our good money in trucks and in loads,
While they tax the poor voters who furnish the trucks
And take from them billions and billions of bucks,
Just to fill the "pork barrel" and make it smell sweet
For the prostrate taxpayer at Democracy's feet.

[Applause.]

And this is exactly what the Democratic House is doing. At this time I wish to again point out what has been proposed in the bill for the second congressional district of South Dakota. In that district there is the little country post office, town of Stephan, which is a little cross roads 25 miles from a railroad and served only by a rural mail route. There are not 20 families living there, but there is a Mission Indian school. That Mission Indian school is a fine institution and is receiving only $450 a year for post-goes back and forth is what comes to and from some Indian students. The post-office receipts are only $8.800 per year. yet in this "pork barrel" bill the Democrats wish to spend $35,000 for a post office in Stephan.

The bill is replete with these outrageous expenditures. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman. I expected to yield to the next speaker much longer time but it is impossible. I have only 16 minutes left. The next speaker has an important message and wants to discuss a matter to which he has given a great deal of attention. I hope Members will find it possible to read his message in his extension of remarks because I can yield him only 10 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIST.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, my theme is the right to work. I am proposing that Congress provide this right with legal sanctions, with the same legal protection accorded to rights of property.

On returning from Europe about a year ago I was often asked, "How did you find things over there?" My answer was that in Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, and in France things looked about normal, but in England and in Germany conditions resembled those prevailing in the United States, but the agony was taken out of it for the workers by their social-insurance systems.

The prime ministers do the worrying over there-and why should they not? Certainly governments have been doing everything they could to create unemployment. They have supported the sciences; they have subsidized the inventors with exclusive patents; they have promoted labor-saving devices; they have chartered great industrial machines for mass production-all to lessen the labor necessary in production for the benefit of society. And their reduction policy has succeeded. Eight men now do the work of ten men a generation ago. And millions are disemployed. Then who should do the worrying when these men, willing to work, find their jobs taken away? Let the prime ministers find jobs for the men their policies have disemployed or compensate them. The prime ministers of Europe have accepted this duty, and the dole is their method of indemnifying the disemployed. Indemnification is due. But is the dole a necessary or the best method?

A large part of our unemployment is due directly to the reduction of labor achieved in this way. For this economy in labor we have to thank the sciences, invention, our patent systems, industrial organization, and efficiency engineering. And we do thank them! Yes; we thank them for these great contributions to human progress. It is doubtless true that in the long run it is desirable that the work of society should be accomplished with the minimum of labor. But it is only desirable, I affirm here to-day, on one condition, and that is that no fundamental right of the human being shall be denied in doing it. [Applause.]

EQUALITY REFORE THE LAW

The world does not owe a man a living; but just as surely as the principles of righ are essential to civilization, the world does owe a man a chance to make a living. plause. I

For he has a right to work, a right as binding on the conscience as the rights of property. If as a matter of state policy the prime minister, by chartering large corporations for mass production, by subsidies to the inventor and support of science and engineering, has encompassed society's desire to cheapen products by reducing the amount of labor essential, then he ought to accept responsibility to the workers which his policy disemploys. Equality before the law! We boast of our "equality before the law," but do we give it to such disemployed workers?

Gentlemen, your home-city government finds it necessary to cut a new street across from one avenue to another. The property owner objects, but you override his sentiment in the matter with the argument that the convenience of society must prevail over his desires; and so you evict him from the property, but you do not evict him until you have office rent, heat, and light. Practically all the mail that | made just compensation for the rights taken away. Shall we be less just to the worker evicted from his job for the convenience of society? Shall he be evicted from his livelihood without any compensation? What, then, becomes of our guaranty of equality before the law?

> Are the rights of the workman to hold his job to earn his living less sacred? Are they less to be respected by the lawmaker than these rights of property? Who can say that this disemployed worker is without a just claim upon society? Should society take all the gains of industrial progress and unload the incidental losses on this worker?

> Mr. Chairman, may I say that legal institutions to protect and effectuate this right of the workman, to provide him legal sanctions for this right, are practicable and not too difficult. They do not now exist only because of the neglect of the lawmaker just as workmen's accident compensation laws were long neglected. [Applause.]

> Are the neglected rights of these disemployed of sufficient moment? Well, even in 1929, in the midst of our supposed great industrial success, we had 2,000,000 "men at the gate." able and willing to work, denied their share of opportunity to earn their bread.

EQUAL RIGHT TO SHARE OF AVAILABLE WORK

If men have a right to work, it follows, of course, that they have an equal right to work and to an equal share of the employment available.

Data supplied by the Department of Labor now nearly a year old, make it clear that by introducing a 5-day week of 8 hours in the cotton-goods industry, 34 per cent more employees could be taken on. In the same way, in the woolen and worsted goods industry, 21 per cent more men could have been taken on; and embracing a total of employees of 8,778,156 in different trades, a 5-day week would have permitted the employment of 2,402,818 additional persons.

Mr. ESLICK. Mr. Lewis, may I ask one question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.
Mr. ESLICK. The legal right to regulate the number of hours and the number of days-have these questions ever been passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to defer that part of the discussion until the end.

Mr. ESLICK. I have never had occasion to look into it. DISCRIMINATION AGAINST UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Mr. LEWIS. We should be able to rely on the natural instincts to apply this humane principle of equal rights, and often we can. But, unfortunately, its violation is rather general. A depression occurs, cutting down normal work demands by one-third, that is, from six days a week to four. The management in many cases furloughs one-third of the men, that is, gives 4 men 6 days a week instead of giving its 6 men 4 days a week. The management has no moral right to discriminate in this way against one-third of its men; no more right than it has to discriminate among its stockholders. If the net income of the company should fall short one-third, it would not pass the dividend as to one-third of its stockholders in order to pay a full dividend to the others. But the stockholders are protected; their rights have been granted legal sanctions. The lawmaker has legalized the moral principle of equipartition of the available income for their protection. In former times you remember an insolvent debtor could give all his assets to the creditors he preferred, ignoring the others. But the social conscience rebelled against this discrimination, and the insolvency laws now compel a proportional partition of the assets among the creditors.

Mr. Chairman, why not divide the available employment equally? Unfortunately, while a number of industrial leaders accept the obligation and apply it scrupulously, perhaps a majority of them do not.

The President's Unemployment Commission some months ago so reported. Sometimes the violation is at the instance not of the management but of a faction among the employees. I have such a case before me. Railway-enginehouse men took a secret ballot. The senior employees were able to outvote the juniors, and demanded of the company a reduction of forces rather than a reduction of hours. The company, perhaps feeling a kind of duress, yielded. Thus the seniors pushed the juniors off the raft, four seniors getting a 6-day week and two juniors being outlawed. It became necessary for me to take up this subject of discrimination in awarding the available employment with the president of one of the premier railway systems of the United States. Since I come from Maryland, I should say that it did not happen to be the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. We had quite a frank correspondence. The significance of the correspondence may be stated as follows:

Mr. Chairman, the manager admitted such discrimination in awarding the employment available. The traffic of the railroad was down about one-third. It was necessary that the management restrict expenses. Sometimes meetings of the men were held as to distributing the employment. Where open meetings of the men were held, the principle of equality was recognized. But on occasions there were secret meetings of the men. Then what happened? The seniority rule figured, a rule of wide application in the railroad industry. At secret meetings the seniors prevailed; and when the employment was off one-third, instead of the vote being to give 6 men 4 days a week, the vote was to give 4 men 6 days a week.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND SENIORITY

Gentlemen, I am informed that even now it frequently happens under this seniority rule that engineers and conductors are realizing from 36 to 40 days in the month, while the wives of their brother engineers and conductors may be vainly seeking for the last pound of flour in the barrel. The rule as to seniors and juniors is not justly applicable to such a situation. It was intended as a protection, and justly, too, to prevent boss favoritism in determining promotions. But applied to deprive a minority of their equal rights to work, it is indefensible. I am informed that employees have always voted for an equal division of work when assembled in open session. In secret session the larger faction was willing to outlaw a minority.

I have two observations to make about the parties to this incident:

First, as to the workmen who did it, they started a new form of blacklist, a blacklist against their fellows, and their blacklist is not a bit less odious than the blacklist of an employer. And second, as to the employer who yielded to their discrimination, the minority thus outlawed was entitled to his protection at any cost. This manager missed a chance for real glory by refusal to stand up and take punishment; to stand up like Prime Minister MacDonald. Besides, these workers who voted their fellows out of their jobs actually received more than six days a week. The cost of the household budget has dropped some 18 per cent because of the depression, so that people now enjoying full-time work may, in effect, be receiving seven days' pay.

LEGAL ANALOGIES

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, this manager had no more right to discriminate against one-third of his employees than, if his net income were falling short, to outlaw one-third of his stockholders in favor of two-thirds of the stockholders on the ground that they were the oldest or biggest of his stockholders. The moral principle is the same in both cases. Why should not the legal principle be made so?

Now, why is the minority stockholder not discriminated against when the dividend fund runs short? Obviously, because there are rules of law, and there are courts with jurisdiction to apply those rules of law to the subject matter. More recently this principle of equal partition has been recognized by Congress and applied in industrial affairs. I refer to the equitable distribution or partition of coal cars on railroads in the coal-mining field.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; I have a family reason to remember the necessity for enacting the coal-car distribution law. I think the law may also be applied to other cars.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, gentlemen, our duty, as it seems to me, is to apply this principle of equal partition to the employment field, so far as it is legislatively practicable. And when I say "legislatively practicable," I am thinking of a real parliament, a national parliament, which has power to act on national subjects and on national problems; of a parliament of not less power and purpose in the world than the House of Commons of Great Britain; and the object of this discussion is to see to what extent we can apply the principle already applied to stockholders, to bankrupt debtors, to the distribution of the car service of the country, to legalize the worker's right to his share of the employment asset.

EMPLOYMENT ASSET MOST IMPORTANT ASSET OF SOCIETY

Mr. Chairman, again I repeat: The most important asset which society possesses to-day is its employment asset. It is far the most important asset, gentlemen. The employer may naturally assume that this employment asset wholly belongs to him. It does not belong to him wholly. It belongs also in equity to the worker who, under modern conditions, must rely upon it to sustain his family. The owner is a trustee with regard to this attribute of his property, the employment attribute. He holds the property, it is true, for other equally important purposes-his own right, for example, to secure a fair return on his investment and to compensate him for his own efforts. But our present industrial system must now give recognition to the fact that it stands under obligation to provide the means of support for the human family. No such institution can deny this obligation. Feudalism provided a place for every human being. Even slavery accepted the obligation, for it undertook to feed and clothe and doctor the slave, whatever might happen to crops or markets.

LEGAL SANCTIONS NECESSARY

It is evident, gentlemen, that the moral sanctions alone are not sufficient to protect the worker in his right to work. And legal sanctions have not yet been given this right. What an incongruity, what a contradiction. Here is a right, the oldest in the world, a right which no one has ever disputed; and yet this right will not assure a single laborer a loaf of bread to-morrow. How does it happen that a right so undisputed is so ineffective in the hands of its possessor? Well, after all, our modern industrial system is a newcomer in the world. Our great-grandfathers knew it not. Perhaps it has not had time to perfect itself in all its important human relations. The individualism which it supplanted evolved through thousands of years to fit the human being. It takes time, especially in the United States. I think of an incident in my own life that illustrates this lag in the development of legal institutions.

When I was a lad about 12 years of age, working in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, I witnessed an accident that left an indelible impression on my mind. The driver was starting into the mine with his mule and a couple of empty cars. The mule suddenly took a crazy spell and ran away into the lightless mine. There was no method of control. The runaway mule and cars continued until they came to a prop at a switch that was sustaining a lot of loose rock; the cars struck the switch, jumped the track, knocked out the prop, and down came the overhanging roof, smashed the cars, killed the mule, and ended the earthly career of the driver.

What happened in the office of the board of directors of the company at its next meeting? This accident was reported. They naturally said that they could not run coal mines without killing mules, without smashing cars, and so they charged up the price of a new mule and of new cars to the cost of running the business. But how about the value of the driver's life? He was not a slave, but an American citizen. That was different. His widow had no legal rights. His life had no legal value. But, gentlemen, if his face had been blackened by an African sun, if he had been a negro slave in the Alabamas before the war, then a thousand dollars at least would have been charged up to the company's operating expenses to cover the human value contributed to the cost of running a coal mine. And now let me add that the first workmen's accident compensation law passed on this side of the Atlantic Ocean was passed by the General Assembly of Maryland in 1902, and-pardon my possible immodesty-that bill was prepared by the hand of the man who, as a boy, witnessed the accident in the coal mines of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To complete that story, if I may ask, do you know whether anything was done for the family of that driver?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. In those days the mines closed until after the funeral. I do not think the mines stop now. A collection was taken. The village probably buried the man. The company may have done something. But nothing of real economic consequence was done, as is now done under our accident compensation laws.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was there no legal theory existing then under which compensation for the loss to the dependents might be obtained?

Mr. LEWIS. No. The truth of the matter is that these accidents, which we lawyers endeavored to impute to some negligence of the employers, were accidents only. They represented the risque professional. So many miners are going to get killed; so many are going to get hurt. Now, as lawyers, stimulated by sympathy and our professional ambitions, we always endeavored to stretch the negligence laws to the very utmost, to reach the employer in the widest number of accidents; but even with the sympathy of a jury aiding us, only a small percentage of the accidents were compensated. For the others the industry escaped obligation; and who was to blame? Not the industry. The law-makers of the country were to blame for neglect to clothe moral rights with just legal sanctions to match these industrial conditions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. How many States in this country have workmen's compensation laws now?

Mr. LEWIS. All but four now, I think.

Mr. DICKINSON. What four States are those?

Mr. LEWIS. They are Florida, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Arkansas.

THE PURPOSES OF THE BILL

Mr. Chairman, let me say bluntly that it is intended by the institution set forth in the bill to give the competent workman, willing to work, a legal and enforceable right to his share of the employment, or compensation in lieu thereof. Section 1 of the bill H. R. 7448 reads as follows:

SECTION 1. (a) That it is hereby declared as a principle of social justice that (a) the citizen possesses a right to work and is entitled to the protection of the laws in maintaining such right and in demanding an equal share of the employment available in the trade; and (b) it is also declared to be the duty of the trade association concerned to provide him with an equal share of the employment available for which he is competent; and in default to render just compensation in lieu thereof.

Mr. Chairman, I will append a brief analysis of the whole bill to my remarks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Lewis, I wonder whether you would care to have two or three questions interposed in the very interesting statement you have made?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I will be glad to answer questions.

THE MEN AT THE GATE

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Do you think that the 2,000,000 men, or thereabouts, who were unemployed and have been pretty generally unemployed in this country even in times when we do not know of any general depression, lack employment because there is no employment for them, or have lacked it because there was no employment for them?

Mr. LEWIS. Your question goes to the heart of the problem—chronic unemployment. I am glad you have asked that question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I may amplify it in this way: Do you not think there are many other conditions which render it impossible to avoid having a certain number of persons out of employment even in ordinary times? A good many people are not wanting employment; a good many people are moving from one place to another.

Mr. LEWIS. I am speaking of the men "at the gate," who are out of work and on the employment-seeking list.

Mr. DICKINSON. Those who want employment?

Mr. LEWIS. Those who are looking for it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You say there were 2,000,000 men looking for employment prior to—

Mr. LEWIS. In 1929, before the great break in the stock market. I am not presenting a remedy for the present depression. I am under no illusion that applying this rule of equipartition will "restore prosperity," but it was made evident before this depression that we had a chronic unemployment problem. Two million people were out of work in 1929 because they were denied their rights. The bill is designed as a specific remedy for these disinherited "men at the gate."

COMPETENCY OF WORKMEN

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In this matter of equal partition of employment, you will not lose sight entirely of the matter of personal capacity?

Mr. LEWIS. The bill requires that the workman must be competent. But who is competent to work? Must the worker be an athlete? Are only athletes entitled to live? Driven by the forces of competition, employers are applying gladiatorial tests to the workers. But the workshop is not a Roman arena, even if it does sometimes call for equal courage and sacrifice. Only men who are virtually athletes are now acceptable as new employees; men over 40 are sentenced to beggary without a trial or appeal. This order of things can not stand-"A man's a man for a' that." Our industrial system must recognize each competent worker, and he is still competent if he can work well enough to support himself or his family. Let his competency be determined under reasonable rules by boards in which worker, management, and the public are represented. Let boards similarly constituted in each industry periodically determine the number of days' work per month available, and let an excise tax be imposed on the employer granting a favored employee more than his share. The bill makes provision for all this in paragraphs (b), (c), and (d).

ADMINISTRATION BY NATIONAL TRADE ASSOCIATIONS

Gentlemen of the committee, in proposing his plan of oldage and unemployment insurance, and so forth, which are also carried in this bill, Mr. Swope suggested the establishment of national trade associations to administer them. His thought was that only through such a national trade association could the mobility of persons in the national trade be secured; that, if the worker disconnected with one employer, he should begin where he left off as to these benefits to which he would be contributing.

I want to stop a moment to pay my compliments to Mr. Swope and say that he is one of the industrial leaders of the country who has accepted his full responsibility in the world. He has recently declared after reviewing the industrial situation since the advent of the factory system that—

Society should have seen to it that justice was rendered for each individual and group without building up class consciousness and destroying unity and solidarity. What is really desired is some definite assurance of employment—but in the absence of this, unemployment benefits should be provided jointly by employer and employee.

The bill begins with the acceptance of the trade association as the method of administration as proposed by Mr. Swope. Here is a trade, let us say, with a million competent persons ready to work. A hundred thousand of them are "at the gates" seeking employment in their trade. Nine hundred thousand of them are fully employed. How are we going to escape a flat dole in that situation, and give the man what he is entitled to—his share of the work?

Well, the trade association will have a national administrative board of nine members. Mr. Swope suggested that 3 be selected by the owners, 3 by the employees, and that 3 should be selected to represent the public. This board, under the bill, makes monthly estimates of the amount of employment available per listed workman for the coming months.

Now, this estimating will not be a new function. These employers must now make such estimates; and organized in this national fashion, their ability to make such monthly estimates as to the probable employment should be greatly enhanced.

Continuing the illustration, if it be found that in the coming month 25 days will be available for 900,000 men, and there are 1,000,000 men on the list, the trade association divides the amount of available work by the number of available employees; and instead of each of the 900,000 getting 25 days, each of the 1,000,000 workers would be entitled to his quota of 22½ days.

THE EXCISE TAX

Now, having thus ascertained the quota of the worker, how can the industry be induced to give him his quota or share of the work? Well, the bill employs two methods. (1) An excise tax is imposed on the employer who employs any man more than his quota—an excise tax equal to the wages of the excess work granted, which would go into the quota compensation fund provided in the bill. The duty to "place" him or compensate for his quota denied is on the trade association. Then (2) any worker denied his quota can sue the trade association for the wages lost before the workmen's accident commission of his State.

PROOF OF COMPETENCY—QUALIFICATION

I found that it would be difficult to say to a particular employer, "You, sir, have got to employ this particular man." So the freedom to hire or discharge which now obtains, is not denied individual employers by the bill.

If John Smith is out of work, and nobody in his trade will employ him, he has a right to go to the workmen's accident compensation board of his State to prove his competency in the trade. Notice is served on the trade association, which may contest his application through its representatives. Two kinds of questions may be raised before the compensation board. (1) Is the workman actually competent? (2) Is he qualified? Suppose he was competent and had been employed until a month ago, but was dismissed for habitual drunkenness. Here you have a case of a man, competent, who disqualified himself.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Or, let me say, for an irascible temper. Mr. LEWIS. Yes; or, if it were on the railroad, disqualified for his failure to go out and plant a signal, which involved the safety of life and property.

Now, the trade association itself is placed under the duty to develop the rules for determining competency and qualification. As to an irascible temper, Mr. Chindblom, suppose he had been discharged for it two years ago, and they still wanted to deny him employment. Manifestly two years of deprivation would be excessive. One or two weeks might be appropriate. Industrial organizations have already worked out more or less reasonable routine to cover such matters, and the compensation boards would have all these to apply as the cases arose.

WORKER'S RIGHT TO SUE-COMPENSATION FUND

Let us suppose that these questions have been passed on in the worker's favor. His quota entitled him to 22½ days' work last month, on the basis of the estimate, supported by the month's experience. Still, no employer in the trade would give him his share of the work, and the trade association failed to place him. Then the right is given him to sue the trade association before the State accident compensation board for the wages lost and the quota compensation fund of the trade association will be responsible for such wages. Moreover, that judgment will be a continuing judgment until the trade association places him.

Mr. HAWLEY. How would you raise the funds sufficient for that work?

Mr. LEWIS. First, by the excise taxes already referred to, imposed on the employer who gave other workers more than their share of the work; second, by any necessary additional excise taxes on the trade on a per capita basis which had failed to give him his adjudged share of the employment available

Mr. HAWLEY. Would you have the same principle that the Government has adopted, that the employees themselves should contribute part of this fund?

Mr. LEWIS. To the unemployment-insurance fund, yes; half and half; that, however, is another feature of the bill.

But as to this compensation for denial of his share of the work, no. The employers there should be responsible. The employers, supposedly, have denied him his birthright—his share of the work available. If they prefer to give him compensation rather than his share of the work in their control, that would be their own affair. Theoretically, the excise receipts derived from employers giving excess employment should equal the quota claims of those denied employment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is that the only source from which the fund would be acquired?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. Each trade would have to take care of its own disemployed. The penalty excise tax, theoretically, if fully collected, would be equal to the needs of the quota compensation fund.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But assume that they would obey the law and would not employ men more than 22½ days in a month; then their judgment would be worth nothing.

Mr. LEWIS. Additional excise taxes would be levied under the bill. But if they fully obeyed the law—such perfection is not expected, of course—every man would have gotten his share, and there would be nobody demanding compensation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. LEWIS. Each one would have gotten his share theoretically.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I understood you, you said that the excise tax would be paid when the employer violated the law in employing men more than 22½ days.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. Now, then, if no employers employed anybody in excess of his time, everybody in the trade would be employed their share of the time. There would be no disemployed to sue.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Now, you might have in one locality a large number of men in that trade who were unemployed, and the trade in that section of the country would be within the law in employing a man 22½ days a month?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. You have raised an important point. The theory of the legislation is that a man disemployed in Connecticut should go to Virginia if the work was only available there. Special provisions as to transportation expenses should be considered.

EXCEPTED EMPLOYEES

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me ask another question: Suppose a manufacturing establishment is engaged 12 hours, 18 hours, or perhaps even 24 hours a day; then, of course, the employment will have to be divided up into shifts for the employees? But the employer has in his employ some men—they are key men to him—that he needs all the time.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Or that he thinks he needs all the time?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In his judgment they are needed all the time?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Do you provide for that?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. In other words, supervisory persons, a secretary—

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Persons particularly skilled?

Mr. LEWIS. Persons particularly skilled, who are indispensable, are not placed under the act. The act applies only where it can be reasonably said that the employment is substitutable. One driver in the coal mines for example would be easily substitutable for another. Paragraph (i) of section 1 of the bill provides:

The right to quota compensation shall not apply to the general officers or supervisory agents of any member corporation, nor to professional employees, secretarial employees as such, or to such positions of employment as the Federal Trade Commission shall find are not susceptible of substitution of employees because of the special skill or responsibility necessary.

VANISHING INDUSTRIES

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. What would you do in a case of this kind? There is a motor-manufacturing company that I am somewhat familiar with. In a long building they had machines all along the wall and each machine required two men to operate it. Some time ago the company took out all of those machines and put in new ones. One man could operate two of them. Of course, a good many men in that way lost their employment. What would you do in a case of that kind?

Mr. LEWIS. The plan is as I have stated. Each man in that trade is registered on the pay rolls of the company, or is listed as an applicant with the State accident compensation board. Both lists are combined in making up the divisor of the hours of labor available in the trade in the coming month. Each of these registered workers has a right to his quota of employment-little or great. The trade association is responsible to place him or to make compensation to him for his quota of employment.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is, if the development of machinery, in the case of these million men, displaced, we will say, 75,000, the result would be a diminution in the number of hours each person would be entitled to work?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; just as in the case of the net income dropping the dividend must fall.

WORKERS' RIGHT TO SELECT TRADE

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the particular case mentioned by Mr. McLaughlin, where, instead of 2 men on each machine, 1 man is employed for 2 machines, it would cut down the hours of labor for each one to one-fourth of the former number of hours?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. Changes in industry are quite conceivable that would reduce the work time to one-fourth. They all would still be entitled to their share, whatever it is. Of course, in the case of a vanishing industry, the workers would seek another industry. Under the bill they could enter any industry in which they proved competency. The right to work implies a right in the worker to register in a trade, or trades, of his own choice, subject only to his possessing the necessary competency. If it be objected that too many applicants may qualify in a given trade, and thus pull down the quota of work below the average of other trades, the answer is that this very result will work its own correction; the trade thus affected will become uninviting for this very reason. On the other hand, occupations hitherto less desirable will tend to afford higher employment quotas and so attract those seeking larger weekly pay. Differences in the amount of the quotas of employment should tend to act like differences in wages; that is, to stimulate or discourage the demand of workers for entry into the respective trades.

BILL APPLIES TO ORGANIZED CORPORATE INDUSTRIES

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I would like to ask a question or two on the scope of your plan. So far as your statement has gone, it deals with the unemployed in connection with trade associations.

Mr. LEWIS. With corporate industries; corporations employing 50 persons or more.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the machinery of the plan and the bill have application to the unemployed in the clerical field, for instance?

Mr. LEWIS. No; unless employed in the trade. For example, in the electrical industry the clerical employees would come under its operation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does it have application in any way to the unemployed outside of industrial life; for instance, in professional life?

Mr. LEWIS. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Or in any other form of human effort to maintain existence and a livelihood, other than in the industrial field?

Mr. LEWIS. No. Not to individual businesses or to the professions. It applies only to corporate industries employing 50 persons or more. But these embrace the bulk of non-agricultural workers. It may be helpful to insert a table here:

Gainful workers 10 years old and over, by general divisions of occupations and sex, for the United States, 1930 and 1931

Census year and general division of occupations	Number		year and general division of
	Total	Male	Female
1930-	48, 829, 920	38, 077, 804	10, 752, 116

The bill, Mr. McLaughlin, applies to the following industries of the above census:

Extraction of minerals	984, 323
Manufacturing and mechanical industries	14, 110, 652
Transportation and communication	3, 843, 147

About 19,000,000 employees should be affected out of a total of about 49,000,000 gainful workers-a pretty good slice to begin with.

THE TRUST-FUND DOCTRINE

Mr. HADLEY. Your plan seems to be predicated somewhat upon the theory of the application of the trust-fund doctrine, so far as assets are concerned, as we know that doctrine in estates of insolvency where the State laws recognize that doctrine?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; the employment trust fund.

Mr. HADLEY. A very equitable principle, perhaps the most equitable of which I know. But if the trust-fund doctrine is to be applied as a matter of equity in aid of relief of unemployment in industrial life, why should we discriminate in a legislative way by making such application in that little field and not extend it, make it all-embracing in the life of the country?

Mr. LEWIS. This is pioneer work. The lawmaker may find it practicable to make the application more general. I hope he will. In developing the institution alone I have confined it to the corporate form of industry, which presents less initial difficulties than individualistic industry.

DOES THE BILL DISCRIMINATE?

Mr. HADLEY. Well, I wanted to get that clear. Why? You predicate this whole plan upon the original premise that you want to avoid discrimination. Now, why would you limit your aid and protection to those who are in corporate industry and not to those who are embraced in private industry, other than corporate industry?

Mr. LEWIS. Well, the consideration was the principle of relative practicality. However, you will find that in the manufacturing and industrial field, excepting agriculture, of course, that corporate management means nearly the

I have not taken in under the bill, for example, merchandising houses that often take a corporate form. manufacturing, transportation, the electrical-communication industries, the distribution of gas and of electricity, coal mining, metal mining, embrace a large part of the whole industrial field.

Mr. HADLEY. In line with this discussion, I call your attention to the fact-and I think it is a fact-that owing to the imposition of various forms of what are regarded as burdens, say taxation as one illustration, and various other limitations and burdens placed upon the corporate form of doing business by law, both in the Nation and in the State, corporations are in a large degree disposed to and are going out of the corporate form and into partnerships and other forms of industry. Would not this have the direct effect of practically nullifying the corporate form?

Mr. LEWIS. I think it will have the reverse effect. Unless this step is taken, compensation to the disemployed workers will come as the dole. It is inevitable, taking the human heart as it is, gentlemen, that we are going to take] the step in the United States taken in Great Britain, Germany, and other countries. This "man at the gate" is a torment to the social conscience. He has been disemployed for the sheer selfish benefit of society. If the railroads and other employers decide against equal partition of employment among employees and disemploy a fourth of their employees; if President Hoover, that is, the Government, also decides against the dole, these decisions mean that these disemployed workers have no real rights, but may live only on the sufferance of charity. It means that they are outlaws without rights. This is anarchism; gentlemen, I reject it as monstrous. It denies the disemployed worker a place de jure within the state and leaves him an outlaw in the world. The heart of man will not stand for this even in the United States. We are slow, but we are not inhuman. Society is going to pay him a dole if the trade does not yield him his rights to work. It will follow Europe. If, on the other hand, the trade association will do its duty, will give him his share of the employment, then you will have stopped the dole; and instead of corporate industry being deterred by the measure, will it not rather be encouraged?

Mr. HADLEY. In any event there is that general tendency to-day; and whereas formerly the tendency was toward the corporate form of doing business for the benefits derived under that form, to-day there is a definite tendency to get away from it because of conditions which have grown up. Now, that being true-and this is not upon the merits of Mr. LEWIS. No: I understand.

APPLICATION TO INDIVIDUALS

Mr. HADLEY. I do not like the appearance in the legislative field of the country of a clearly discriminating class of legislation for one type of our people as against other

Mr. LEWIS. Nor do I like it. The corporation presents advantages of practicability because of its larger numbers and therefore greater substitutibility of employees. Moreover, I think if corporate mass production had not replaced pure individualism in our industrial order this problem would not be presented. It is a problem which has come with organized industry-with the corporation. The loss of wages is not the only loss involved. Persistent industry in the individual is, after all, only an acquired virtue. It may be lost by involuntary, habitual idleness. This is the real criticism on the dole-given the worker as a substitute for his share

Mr. HADLEY. If there is not a way to reach the individual under our Constitution, and prima facie, without great consideration at this moment, I think that must be true, then going back to the very basic principle of morals, the principle of equity as between all of our people, why should we attempt to apply it in part where we can not apply it in its entirety?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Oh, well, that is common in the formulation of laws. An illustration on my tongue's end is our workmen's accident compensation laws, which generally except the farm and employers having a minimal number of employees.

Mr. HADLEY. I recognize that in matters of minor application, but here you are attempting to apply this to the great field of industry common to all men, and I would say, Why should we enter a field that is strictly discriminatory in favor of one class as against those others?

THE DOLE OR EQUIPARTITION

Mr. LEWIS. It is a question of time and public education. The principle of equipartition of available employment implies such treatment as you suggest. I am ready to fix a 5-day week, or a 4-day week, to aid in such equipartition and to enforce it by a similar excise tax on all excessive employment. The opinion is widespread that society will have to resort to this method. Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has been advocating it, and so have business men of prominence. Only recently the Secretary of War, Mr. Hurley, and I had the following dialogue before the Committee on Ways and Means:

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Secretary, you speak of the dole. May I ask you a question with regard to it? Society finds it necessary in Washington here to cut a new street across from one avenue to another. The property owner protests. But society answers that its welfare must prevail over sentiment in the matter and it constructs the street. It evicts him, but it does not evict him until it makes full compensation. I am sure you will agree that that is all right in principle.

Secretary Hurley. That is the law of this land.

Mr. Lewis. And it is justice. But now society grants subsidies to patentees to encourage efficiency in engineering and supports the sciences and the inventor constructs work-reducing mechanisms because of which men are thrown out of jobs that have afforded them livelihoods from their childhood. Do you call any payment made to such a man so thrown out of employment, on account of no fault of his own, willing to work, but unable to get employment-do you characterize a payment to him as a dole rather than compensation?
Secretary Hurley. What you need to do is to further reduce the hours of labor so that a man can make an honest living and get his just distribution of the wealth of this Nation and so that all may be employed. Now, you may stagger at the reduction of the hours of labor. You may think that is going to upset us, but I have seen in my lifetime a greater reduction than that occur. If the hours of all labor were now reduced to six hours a day, every the hours of all labor were now reduced to six hours a day, every one would be employed.

The answer to the employment situation is not that you shall grant anybody a gratuity. If those people to whom you are granting the gratuity had turned in an invention for the benefit of mankind, as you say, it would be proper to subsidize and pay them for that intellectual achievement. But I tell you that when, in place of giving a man an honest day's work, by which he can pay for bread for himself and his family, you attempt to give him a gratuity instead, you are insulting the very soul of labor.

Mr. Chairman, it must be remembered that this simple treatment, as proposed by Secretary Hurley and more recently in the Democratic and Republican platforms, would still leave unprotected "the men at the gate," the 2,000,000 unpreferred workers of even prosperous times which it is the fundamental object of the bill to defend during times of prosperity as well as in depressions. I am ready to add such a treatment to the bill, and will apply myself to the necessarv detail.

The bill already applies to manufacturing, mining, transportation, communication, building construction, distribution of gas, oil, and electrical energy. There are but few noncorporate employers in these fields—a negligible number.

The equipartition principle might also be applied to the clerical occupations where the employer relation obtains, representing 4,025,324 employees. But it would hardly be applied to the professions, to doctors, lawyers, clergymen, engineers, architects, and so forth, who have clients rather than employers and who numbered 3,253,884 in 1930. Nor could it be applied to ordinary farm activities, where 10,471,-998 are engaged. I am not making difficulties, Mr. Chairman, but simply recognizing them. They can be conquered. I believe, with the application of a will and intelligence worthy of the subject and the exigency.

TWO KINDS OF INVENTIONS

It is true that the early economists always said that invention need not be dreaded; that one invention would take care of another, with no deprivation of employment to the workers at length. The people who wrote that a century ago did not foresee the conditions obtaining in the present world of science, invention, efficiency engineering, and mass production.

There are two kinds of inventions when you fully consider the matter. In one kind of invention you have the laborsaving purpose and the labor-saving effect. The ditch-digging machine, with two men operating it and a hundred employees eliminated, is an extreme illustration of the laborsaving invention. On the other hand, the automobile, with the road construction and other employment it has entailed, is a mighty illustration of the labor-increasing invention in our age. I dread to think what the unemployment conditions in the United States might have been if the automobile had not made its advent here to magnify consumption demand.

Now, gentlemen, if there were some power in the sky to control the appearance of labor-saving and labor-increasing inventions as some power in nature controls the distribution of the sexes—one little girl, one little boy, one little girl, until they virtually matched each other in effect—the old view of this subject might still be the rational view. But the practical fact is that in every factory to-day you have an efficiency engineer; you also have a suggestion box in which the workman is invited to drop his suggestions for improvement—which in such cases always means reduction in the expense of operating and in the amount of labor essential. The emphasis—one can see it readily—the emphasis in industry is on the labor-saving invention. The invention to greatly increase human consumption, to develop new kinds of human demand for goods, does not have in modern times the same organization forces behind it as the labor-reducing invention.

BALANCING THE FORCES OF PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION

Why, it was nearly 70 years ago that Clerk Maxwell, mathematical physicist, discovered the identity of the electromagnetic field with the field of light, demonstrated physically a little later by Hertz, the German physicist; 60 years later we have the radio. So we must have one genius standing on the shoulders of another for 50 years before that new form of human consumption can be developed. It took about the same period to set the gasoline motor going on the roads. May I say that if the radio should quickly lead to effective television: if for a thousand dollars they could give me a television, enabling me to stay home, hear the music, see the picture, all without forsaking my pipe or rocking chair, the money to buy it would be gotten in some fashion. If they shall make it possible to cross the Atlantic Ocean in daylight, trips to Europe, not once in a lifetime, but every year may result. But with this one-sided invention the employment asset is going to grow smaller and smaller while fewer and fewer days in the week will be available to those who can look only to their labor for the necessities of life.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS IN THE PAST

Certainly, gentlemen, the increasing forces of production must be taken up by the increasing forces of consumption, or we may have to go to a 3-day week with this laboreconomizing progress. In the past similar social programs have been inaugurated and realized, giving employment to fill up the gaps created by invention and the increasing effectiveness of man-plus-machine methods in production. This has been the history of mechanization within the past century. The public schools are an obvious and tremendous example, with expenditures in the United States alone at $2,184,847,000 in 1928, with 831,934 teachers. And this figure does not include the many others employed about the schools or in the construction of school buildings, the printing of schoolbooks, the training of teachers; nor does it include the employees in the prodigious printing trade, having as its supportive condition the common schools, which gives us a national population able to read and desiring the productions of the printing press. Hospitalization and medical aid to the less fortunate now present a field as worthy in the twentieth century.

Another method has been the reduction of the hours of labor, which ran about 12 hours or more per day in the beginning of the nineteenth century, and, by steps, have been diminished to 11, to 10, to 8 hours, and often to a 5-day and 48-hour week. "Man does not live by bread alone," and this method is certainly worthy of continued application.

Obviously one, probably both, of these social methods must be employed, decreasing the work day or an increasing program of consumption, if a reasonable balance between the productive and consumptive forces is to be realized.

PROVISIONS FOR EXCEPTIONAL CASES

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Recurring to the bill as it now stands. Assume now that a branch of a certain industry was located at a certain place where workmen did not want to live, or the management was such that the surplus employees would not gravitate toward it. The management of that industry would not have available a surplus of employees. Would you exclude them from the operations of your provisions?

Mr. LEWIS. The bill makes a special provision for such

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Excusing them from paying the excise tax in the event that there was not a surplus of employees?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. The bill makes provisions for that. It is as follows: When there are no registered workmen available who are willing to accept employment with a corporation member, the employment-quota obligation shall be subject to suspension by the national trade association, with the approval of the Federal Trade Commission, as to such member corporation. In special exigencies, the Federal Trade Commission, upon application of a national trade association, may suspend operation of the employment-quota requirement for a definite period, either for an entire association, or for a specified region. The national trade association may, in case of sharp changes in the employment situation during an estimate period, revise the employment quota to be effective for the remainder of such period. But the employment quota shall not be increased for any corporation member during a strike or lockout, nor shall quota compensation be payable to any employee during the pendency of such strike or lockout. Let me also say that the restriction on excess employment does not apply to the mill hours. A successful mill may be running on four shifts a day, and every day including Sunday.

OLD-AGE INSURANCE

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Going back to the general discussion of the principles underlying your plan, and I am not now taking issue with your premises, but referring to the one premise that organized society owes a man a chance to work and an employer is a trustee for his employees, subject, of course, to his own right to earn a reasonable return on his investment and a reasonable compensation for his own labor—assuming that an employer has complied with those conditions in all good faith, and after years, perhaps a lifetime, spent in industry, he himself, by reason of conditions not any more in his control than are the conditions of labor in the control of the laborer, loses out and has no means of earning a livelihood. Does your plan contemplate any relief for a man in that position?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; the old-age insurance provisions of Mr. Swope are carried in this plan and the pension would bear a ratio to the salary. Employer and employee each pay half to this fund.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, he has never been, in the real sense, himself an employee.

Mr. LEWIS. If he had been an officer of the company, he would fall under the purview of the insurance plan. Many provisional objections may be urged against plans like these. They are not final objections if provision can be made for them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, these are extraordinary times, but just exactly that situation arose, for instance, in Germany, where a tremendous number of people who had not been in the real sense employees but who had been employers, and even capitalists, found themselves absolutely penniless.

Mr. HADLEY. May I observe there that I think that condition has arisen in this country in the midst of this depression in cases, not limited to those of old age, but to those who after a few years of great profit and success find themselves reduced to the point of being penniless. What would the plan contemplate with respect to them when they are not within the old-age class?

Mr. LEWIS. Well, I do not know that I can at this time answer your question, unless it be to say that like the worker they could claim their quota as workers, if competent, in any occupation covered by the law.

Mr. HADLEY. I did not mean to divert you, Mr. CHIND-

Mr. CHINDBLOM. An interesting case is mentioned in the papers this morning; one of the greatest employers of labor and promoters of industry in the United States, who I by the lawmaker. It has been unconscious, yes; I am glad apparently is going to be placed upon a pension by the industries which he has heretofore controlled.

LAWMAKERS' DUTY

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, as lawmakers, our obligation is to enact legislation to meet the general conditions, and do the best we can for exceptions. We are under obligationat least I have felt under obligation—to first provide legal protection for the fundamental rights of human beings. The bill is not offered as a panacea for depressions. It is designed to remove discriminations amounting to outlawry which have become chronic in distributing employment. Society's support of invention, the sciences, efficiency engineering, its charters to large cooperations for mass production, and the 40-year-old deadline were responsible for 2,000,000 "men at the gate" even in 1929. Considering their equal moral rights, this is mere outlawry, only to be excused because the individual employer "must meet competition," and because the insurance rates and old-age pension liability on his employees goes up with the average age of his men. Under this ruthless rule, with 10 men applying when 8 can do the work, it is not a question of the survival of the fit but "the survival of the athlete," without regard to moral rights or the ability of the discountenanced worker to serve in a competent way.

The bill strikes against these discriminations by prohibiting the imputation of incompetence on account of age or physical defect if the worker can in fact render the service, unless his age entitles him to a pension.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Would you find any difficulty in attempting to control the operations of corporations organized under the State laws observing every part of the State law, operating their property, and the Government of the United States coming in and directing their operations to the extent of employment and wages, and so forth?

Mr. LEWIS. To the extent of restricting the hours of employment only. It does not apply to wages. Well, you are raising a subordinate legal question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Subordinate?

Mr. LEWIS. I should say a very relevant but a subordinate legal question. I think it would take another session to discuss the legal phases and implications of this subject. I may add a brief discussion of the legal questions in the Appendix.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. After all, of course, the fundamental question is whether the control of industry, of employment, and even of investment, should be attempted by law, and whether that would be an improvement over the system that has prevailed heretofore. That is the fundamental

Mr. LEWIS. The fundamental question, as I view it, is the right of the human being to a chance to earn his bread. That is the paramount question. Let the lawmaker consider what measures may be taken to defend that right. If no practical measures can be taken for that purpose, the lawmaker is discharged. If, however, the lawmaker simply ignores it, as for a generation he neglected workmen's accident compensation, then he is a miserable delinquent, indeed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You might concede the right and still not reach a remedy by legislation.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; but it does not lie in the mouth of any civilized man to make that argument until he has made an earnest investigation of the subject and failed to find a

The lawmaker has not been negligent with regard to other kinds of rights. It would take 1,000 pages to describe the legal routine which has been developed by lawmakers for the regulation of automobiles moving on our highways today. And as to the legal rights of property, why a book on the law of ejectment alone of less than a thousand pages would now be regarded as worthless in a lawyer's office, Mr. CHINDBLOM; and whole law libraries are devoted to the right of property.

There has been the plainest discrimination. Where property rights have been involved one does not find such neglect to think it has not been conscious discrimination, but there has been the crudest class discrimination or neglect as to this right of the worker by the lawmaker, and millions of employees are suffering because of it, and will continue to suffer until we act.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, well, I am by no means denying the duty of the legislator to seek remedies, and I congratulate you, Mr. Lewis, our colleague, upon the very interesting discussion we have had on that very subject today. [Applause.]

Section 7. Definitions.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time simply because I feel I am somewhat of an exhibit as the one receiving the most pork in this Democratic measure. I have more than $25,000,000 handed to my district under this bill, and it can have been out of goodness of the heart of the proponents of the bill that I am given this amount of money for my district. I rather think it has been given to embarrass me, although I doubt it could prove an embarrassment. However, after weighing the matter and after receiving many thousands of letters which have been sent to me recently demanding economy, and since a tax bill that fastens its fangs deeply in my State, I think if I receive ten times as much as others I should be ten times more guilty than the rest-if I should vote for this "pork barrel" bill at this particular time. [Applause.]

I well know it takes months and even years to pick a site for a post-office building, have the title searched, and the building actually begun, so that it could not be an emergency measure. Neither do I wish a so-called standardized building in each of my communities or land taken by eminent domain. I will trust to obtain the justly deserved projects by the longer and more orderly processes of careful planning at times when the country can afford it. Although this large amount of money is dangled before the eyes of the people I represent, and although many of the projects are very important to them, I can not believe any constituent will be fooled; and I repeat that I would indeed have a

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for the two minutes which I have been

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as a veteran, I rise to state to the House that the time for the bonus parade has been changed and the parade will be held to-night at 7 o'clock. The reason for the change, I understand, is that the veterans who are here in Washington do not want to associate themselves with the communists, who have arranged for a communist parade for to-morrow, the 8th, and demonstrations elsewhere in the United States.

Although I myself believe the veterans who are here are misguided and have been very badly advised in coming here, and that they are giving a black eye to the other veterans back home by attempting to browbeat and bulldoze Members of Congress into voting for the so-called $2,000,000,000 bonus bill in this economic crisis and national emergency, yet it is only fair to these veterans to say that over 90 per cent of them are loyal, faithful, patriotic Americans [applause], and that they are in no way associated with the communists and in no way uphold any form of communistic propaganda or activity here in Washington or anywhere in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the district I represent is allowed in this bill the sum of $7,500,000. The city of St. Louis would not be able with this large sum to give employment to more than 500 people. So we do not want it at this time, as it will not materially aid the unemployed, and we prefer to wait for this money until the country is in better financial condition.

Another provision in the bill is to lend money, under title 2, to States, municipalities, and subdivisions thereof. Under article 4, section 44, of the constitution of our State, it is impossible for this to be done, because it is absolutely prohibited by the constitution for the State to borrow money or for any subdivision of the State to borrow money. So we can not take advantage of this provision, and I hope Congress will find a way that we can in case of need.

So there is only one title left here that I have not mentioned, and that is the $100,000,000 for the President to expend in relief. So far the people of St. Louis have been able to take care of the unemployed of that city, but we will likely need to have help from the Federal Government if there is not an improvement soon. This assistance should be a loan though and not a gift. Otherwise it would not be fair to the taxpayers. So we do not want this legislation as written, and as one of their Representatives I am bound in honor to vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that unemployment is the most important question in this country now. Whatever means will put the greatest number of those who are now unemployed back on their jobs or give them their usual employment permanently will appeal to me most strongly. If that were the real question to be decided here. I fancy there would be little difference of opinion among us, but this is not the issue. It is not a proper function of the Government to support its citizens or furnish them with employment. The Government has no funds of its own and no means of collecting funds except by the strong arm of taxation, from the pockets of its citizens. It can not properly take more than is necessary to economically carry on the Government. It has no moral or constitutional right to take more than this from its citizens. Anything taken beyond this is an abuse of the taxing power.

The effect of the bill under consideration is to collect from the already heavily burdened taxpayer more than $2,000,000,000, and to expend it in the construction of unnecessary and unproductive public works such as buildings that are not needed and waterways that will never be used. If the expenditure of this huge sum would solve the unemployment problem something might be said in favor of it, but it will not even scratch the surface of the problem. Conservative estimates now place the number of the unemployed above ten millions. The most liberal estimate of the number of persons who would receive employment in the expenditure of the two billions would be a few hundred thousand-only a small fraction of the millions now unemployed. It would be only the proverbial drop in the bucket.

No amount of money that could be collected from the people by taxation would be sufficient to give employment to enough people to materially affect the unemployment situation. We must cease looking to the Government to furnish employment, and turn to the only real solution of the problem which is the restoration of normal business conditions. With the return of normal business activity will come normal employment, millions of jobs in lieu of the few thousands that might possibly come from wasting two billions of the taxpayers' money.

And how may we help to bring back normal business? Certainly not by taxing it to death, as we must do if we indulge in large expenditures such as are carried in this bill. Ever since this Congress convened business has been trembling in its boots, wondering what Congress would do. Everyone knew there must be additional taxes and everyone feared the burdensome levy, not knowing how it would be laid. Finally a bill was agreed upon almost as bad as any tax bill could be, but even the worst was better than failure to sustain the national credit, and with its passage the country breathed a sigh of relief. That was yesterday. At last we had passed a bill, bad as it is, that would balance the Budget. To-day we are confronted with a bill that, if enacted into law, would unbalance the Budget, and by that very fact do more to retard business recovery, to destroy confidence in our financial stability, and to postpone the return of normal employment than any other legislation we might enact. It would be a tragedy to follow the tax bill with the passage of a bill like this. It would again unsettle the financial situation and frighten business to an extent that would deprive more men of employment than all the jobs that would ever come from this bill could replace.

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Stokes].

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, a story is told of Doctor Trench, a famous English divine. He was an elderly gentleman and was very apprehensive of paralysis.

He was attending a fashionable dinner and was seated next to a very charming young lady, when suddenly he exclaimed in the midst of the meal, "O! it has come at last."

"What has come," asked the young lady.

"The paralysis. I have been pinching my leg and there is no feeling in it."

"Well," she said, "I can account for that. You have been pinching my leg." [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, when you attempt to vote away $1,000,000,000 you are pinching the wrong leg. You are barking up the wrong tree. This bill if passed may call for another salary reduction. We want to help the unemployed, but we want it to come through the States.

I come from the State of Pennsylvania, which has not borrowed any money for the past 10 years and has recently reported over $60,000,000 in bank deposits.

Why is it, therefore, necessary to vote unemployment relief to our State.

A bill of this kind if passed may tend to stifle individual charity and individual exertion. It is an approach at communism, which strikes at two of our most sacred blessingspersonal liberty and personal responsibility.

It will increase our taxation, which is already so heavy that we can not afford to carry any more.

One of the reasons of our past prosperity has been the lightness of taxation and public debt. It is rather our duty to reduce taxation and debt rather than to increase them.

One billion dollars carrying 41/2 per cent interest would mean an annual payment of $45,000,000, or $450,000,000 in 10 years. Two billion dollars would be twice that amount, or $90,000,000 a year, in interest charges.

The effect of such legislation on business and agriculture would be most unfortunate and would cause greater unemployment. In Pennsylvania we have already over 200,000 food gardens which have been started by individuals, by communities, and by industrial plants. From a moral and psychological standpoint, it is far better to encourage the unemployed to cultivate the land than to have them stand by and do nothing.

A statement of Mr. Huffington, of the Pennsylvania State

The Hanover Shoe Co., Hanover, Pa., prepared land for 167 employees to grow vegetables, alloting one-sixth of an acre to each family. Land fertilizing and soil preparation were done at the expense of the company. Seeds were sold to each family at wholesale by a local concern. Information from the Pennsylvania State College Extension Service on varieties, planting, etc., was expensed each gardener.

state College Factorision Service VI.

supplied each gardener.

Mr. Shepherd, of the company, is enthusiastic regarding the project, because his employees are enabled thereby to grow food to store for the winter in the 1½ days of each week they are unemployed.

The psychological effect of having men become more resourceful and to use greater individual initiative is as great as having the men grow vegetables to eat.

In a campaign this year in New York City the so-called block-aid system has raised over $1,000,000, mostly in small donations of 10 cents and upward.

Let us not forget that most of our troubles have come from chronic extravagance.

Having made the necessary savings in appropriations, let us adjourn, and business will improve and unemployment will grow less

New York Times of June 3 stated as follows:

New York needs no direct Federal aid. In the long run, any program which involved large Federal grants would hinder rather than help local efforts at relief.

If such a program is desired by other communities and ordered by Congress, this city will naturally claim its share of the outlay, but in the meantime, with the help of the State, it can continue to care for its own. If at any time it fails to do so, the place to lodge a protest is not at the Capitol but at city hall.

[Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the problem that confronts every Member of this House is to put the unemployment of the country back to work. This bill, as it is now written, constitutes only a gesture in that direction.

According to the best authority, there is not less than 10,000,000 unemployed in this country to-day. Everyone who knows anything about the situation fully realizes that if all of the projects incorporated in this bill could be put under way to-morrow, only a small proportion of those out of employment could or would be put back to work.

For the past 15 or 20 years in this country there has been a constant increase in the development of labor-displacing machinery. It is this that is more responsible than any other one thing for the unemployment and the resultant depression. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that we are not going to get out of this depression, and we are not going to keep out of future depressions, until we have so readjusted our economic affairs that all our people can work at least a reasonable part of every week.

If the bill before us should become a law, much of the projects contemplated therein will be constructed with labor-saving, labor-displacing machinery. Those who know state that not more than 200,000 can be employed at one time. Further, when labor is employed it will be on the old 6-day week, 8-hour day basis.

There ought to be a proviso in the bill, and I commend to the committee who, under the provisions of the worst gag rule that has ever been presented to this House, has exclusive and complete control of every amendment that can be offered to the bill, an amendment that will prohibit the employment of any individual on any of these projects for more than four days in any one week and more than six hours in any one day. Such an amendment would provide employment for approximately twice as many as would be employed under the bill as it is now written.

In addition to this, Mr. Chairman, I recommend to the committee still another proviso and one that would prohibit the use of labor-displacing machinery on any publicworks project, where hand labor can be employed. This would insure the employment of thousands upon thousands of additional men. I would go farther yet. I would make the provisions I have mentioned permanent law, and in the future the money appropriated for public works would go much more largely into the pockets of those needing employment.

Millions were out of employment in 1928 and 1929 at a time when the country was most prosperous. The reason was mass production and labor-displacing machinery. We can never stabilize the economic machinery of the country until the people, and all of them who will, can find continuous employment the year around. To accomplish this there must be a reduction of the hours of labor per week to the point where such employment as is available is shared by all. This is an opportunity to put this plan into operation. We all should have in mind taking our people out of the bread lines at the earliest possible minute. This will do more to this end than anything yet proposed. Let this Government lead the way. Industry will quickly and gladly follow. The result will be a rapid return to normal conditions with accompanying benefits and blessings to all our people.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I received a telegram from one of the farm leaders in a county in my district. This is the way it reads:

It's a damned outrage for the Congress to consider spending $70,000 for a post office in our village.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this so-called relief measure for the reason that I am of opinion that any legislative measure for the relief of unemployment and distress which is based on the policy of taking more money out of the pockets of the overburdened taxpaying public to-day is unsound, and it will not carry out the program of relief for which the advocates of this bill are contending. One of the greatest questions we have in our country to-day is that of taxation, and I firmly believe that the oppressive burden of taxes now weighing so heavily on the backs of the American people is doing more to retard economic recovery than any other one thing in our country at this time. I come from what is probably one of the greatest industrial districts in the United States, and you gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House are making a mistake when you bring forth a relief measure in which you believe you are going to tax the people of that industrial district to carry out this public-building program which you have in this bill. You can not get taxes from an industry that is closed down.

I want to ask those Members supporting this measure where are you going to get the $2,200,000,000? You provide no way of securing this large amount of money except through taxation and the sale of Government bonds. After months of hard work and effort Congress has just passed a revenue bill which will balance the Budget for 1933. In this tax bill we imposed on the people the most severe taxation in all peace-time history for the express purpose of preserving the credit of the Federal Government and stimulating the economic recovery of business and industry.

Should this measure which the House is now considering become a law, it will destroy our 1933 balanced Budget, seriously impair the credit of our Goyernment, and postpone economic recovery of business and industry. The so-called

Garner relief bill before us at this time will not cure the unemployment situation. The bill provides for the construction of 2,600 post-office buildings in villages, towns, and cities throughout the United States. The Treasury Department stated during the hearings on the bill, that if all of the 2,600 projects were put under construction at once they would give employment to only 30,448 men, and for this purpose the bill we are now considering will impose a tax of $283,000,000 on the American people. I want to see the wheels of industry turning and men put to work. That is the all-important problem before us to-day, and the only way this can be accomplished is to balance our Budget, live within our income, and in every way possible relieve the people from the oppressive burden of taxation which they are confronted with at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hill].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, obviously it is impossible to comprehensively discuss this bill in six minutes. But I want to say right now that I am for any legislation that will bring relief to the people, and this Congress must not adjourn until provision is made to aid in caring for the destitute in this land. You have heard the charge of pork barrel this afternoon until it has become a slogan from the gentleman on my left. However, pork is much to be preferred to garbage which thousands of people in this country are eating because of unemployment. The issue here is not whether there are some features of this bill which would be objectionable in normal times, but the issue is humanity against dollars. It is a question of whether you are going to do something to help take the burden from the local people in caring for the great number of unemployed in this country. More than 10,000,000 of people are out of employment, and that means that at least 30,000,000 people are on charity in this country. The local communities have carried the load until they have reached a point of exhaustion so far as their resources are concerned; and why should not the Federal Government aid in caring for these jobless and hungry? Why should not the Federal Government contribute $100,000,000 to aid different States, cities, and counties in carrying this burden? Gentlemen on the other side fail to call attention to the fact that the second title of this bill furnishes a broad, comprehensive program through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid not only municipalities and States but to aid private industry in engaging in enterprises that will require employment of thousands of people. That is the principal remedy for relief of unemployment proposed in this bill. It also carries $100,000,000 to aid in direct relief to the millions of people in this country who are hungry and without shelter.

They say that it will impair the credit of the Government, but the credit of the Government is back of every debenture that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation issues, and if the issuance of bonds would impair the credit of the Government, then also would the placing of the Government back of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures impair the credit of the Government. I do not believe this is going to be the only remedy to bring the country back to prosperity. The fact is that the wheels of industry have stopped on a dead center and they require a force to remove them from that dead center, and this will help to start those wheels turning.

The hungry in this country must be fed. The National Government receives taxes from the people. It should bear its just portion of the burden in caring for all the people throughout the country. That certainly is true at this time, when the States and local communities have been carrying that load for the past two years, and it has become so burdensome that they can not well carry it longer alone. The people are taxed to death now in the States and something must be done to lower rather than increase local taxes. This legislation is not the solution of the unemployment problem. No one claims that it is. It merely pumps some oxygen into the lungs of industry. Other relief measures must follow. Legislation must be enacted to increase commodity prices and restore purchasing power to the 30,000,000 farmers of this country. We must have effective farm relief that will give the farmer a living price for what he has to sell

Until the farmer prospers no industry in this country can prosper, and that fact must be borne in mind at all times. It is within the power of this Congress, in cooperation with the President of the United States, to break this depression in a month's time if it has the courage to do it. It is within the power of the Federal reserve system to issue a sufficient volume of Federal reserve note currency on eligible security, which when placed in the channels of commerce, would raise commodity prices, thereby helping the farmer and giving to the country a purchasing power. If you do not do something of that kind, your Budget will not remain balanced, and when we come back next fall we will be confronted with the duty of again levying additional taxes if we expect to keep the Budget balanced. The sources of revenue are drying up, and they will continue to dry up until we get a greater volume of money in circulation. We have voted for everything in the President's program and it has helped to some extent, but it has not solved the question and it is not going to solve the question. It has not put a single man to work. We need emergency relief and must have it, whether as proposed in this bill or in some other form. You can not say that this is a dole and use that as an excuse for not voting for it. These hungry people are already on a dole from the local communities. You can not hide behind the excuse that it is a bad precedent for the country to issue relief direct to the people. The people of this country are not going to remain in this hungry, starved, clothesless, and shelterless position without rising up in arms against the Government that you expect them to support. Appeal has been made to patriotism in this discussion. What is patriotism? Patriotism on the part of the Members of this Congress is to take care of those people back home who need relief at this crucial time in American history.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I offer several amendments, which are at the desk.

"'Whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of its system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, as required by this act, said State, through its State highway department, by and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to increase the mileage of the primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems by additional mileage equal to not more than 1 per cent of said total mileage of such State, and thereafter to make like increases in the mileage of said systems whenever provision has been made for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of the mileage of said systems previously authorized in accordance herewith."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the amendment on page 17, line 20.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the rule provides that there shall be no points of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, by what right does the gentleman from Texas stand in the well of the House and attempt to take me from the floor?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the rule provided that there shall be no points of order made, and that all debate is closed, and that the point of order made in order to gain an opportunity to debate is out of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman has finished his speech, Mr. Chairman, my point of order goes to the question of the authority to offer the amendment, and that question is not covered by the rule prohibiting points of order.

I can not recall that in committee any action was taken upon the amendment referring to line 20, on page 17. I have all the notes with me. I have all the documents with me that we had in the committee. It is with reference to the Saginaw post office. It was not taken up in the com-

Mr. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that this bill is intended to carry post offices which have been recommended by the Post Office Department interdepartmental committees. We find there is no post office at West Saginaw, and this was a clerical error.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am right, however, in my contention that it was not actually taken up in the committee?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes. It is a clerical error. Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then I will waive the point of order. Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume the five minutes in debating the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is too

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I do not think so, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask for recognition on the amendments offered?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to five min-

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, I rise to inquire the reason for striking out the item relating to Milwaukee Harbor.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I might suggest to the gentleman that Milwaukee Harbor carried $125,000 in House Document No. 289, and that Secretary of War Hurley was before the committee and recommended that that be omitted from the list.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did he give any reason why it should be omitted?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. He said that the $125,000 was intended to be repayment to the city of Milwaukee of certain future dredging, at a cost not to exceed 10 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if there is any meritorious proposition in this bill, it is that relating to Milwaukee Harbor. [Laughter and applause.] It is known that Milwaukee Harbor has much larger tonnage than that of Chicago or Calumet. It is the only progressive harbor on Lake Michigan, within the progressive State of Wisconsin.

It is true that my progressive, insurgent friends from Wisconsin voted for the previous question on this rule, and I think they were under the impression that Milwaukee was to get some pork out of this bill. This is really a most worthy proposition, and the fact that Secretary Hurley recommended against it I do not think is warrant for having it stricken out. Secretary Hurley apparently does not know anything about the merits of Milwaukee Harbor. He has never visited that great city and seen the greatest harbor on Lake Michigan, if not on all the Great Lakes. Otherwise he certainly would not have recommended against it. The Chief of Engineers recommended the appropriation, and the Rivers and Harbors Committee has recently reported upon it favorably.

But whether this appropriation for Milwaukee's outer harbor is carried in the bill or not, I would be constrained to vote against saddling upon the taxpayers of the country the tremendous burden of many hundred millions for public buildings in small cities, villages, and hamlets, that can not be defended at any time, much more in these perilous times when the people everywhere are demanding economy in public expenditures.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the Committee on Ways and Means desire recognition in favor of the amendment? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I do this solely for the purpose of calling the attention of the House and the country to the fact that we have in this amendment one of the most progressive provisions ever considered by Congress, and that is providing for loans to limited-dividend corporations, engaged solely in housing. That in itself will bring relief to every city in the United States, and it is the first real constructive step to eliminate the slums from the cities, which are a disgrace to our boasted progress.

It is possible to commence right here in Washington, the Capital of the United States, where people are living in alleys, in unsanitary shacks and hovels, paying high rents, and construct model, cheerful, sanitary homes at low rents.

Under the provision contained in this amendment loans may be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to limited-dividend corporations engaged solely in erecting and operating such buildings and renting them at low rentals. The profits to the corporation are limited, thereby permitting payment of all maintenance costs, amortization of capital, and surplus being given to tenants in the form of reduced rents. It provides proper homes for wage earners; it creates taxpaying buildings in place of worthless fire traps or shacks. It is conducive to health and the community in every way gains by such modern system of housing. England, Germany, and other countries have such a system of housing and have carried on with great success.

The bill makes it possible for such a limited-dividend corporation to borrow, giving its bonds as security. Any corporation having title to the land and making the proper showing to the Finance Corporation could qualify. This plan not only creates the opportunity for immediate employment and demand for building material—the real purpose of this bill—but is a continued social benefit by reason of its very purpose in providing proper kind of homes within the means of the average wage earner. It is a direct benefit to the tenants themselves in that it prevents landlord profiteering. In New York we have had some instances of successful operation of such enterprises. The money market has made it impossible to continue along such lines. It is sincerely to be hoped that this provision in the bill will be sympathetically administered by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schaffer) there were—ayes 163, noes 105.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee rises. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cooper of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, and in accordance with the provisions of the resolution (H. Res. 251) he reported the same back to the House with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recom-

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill? Mr. HAWLEY. I am.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hawley moves to recommit the bill H. R. 12445 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report back forthwith, striking out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact this amendment has been printed in bill form and also in the report of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with and the matter printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized until June 30, 1933, to make loans or advances in accordance with the provisions of this act in sums not exceeding in the aggregate $300.000.000.

SEC. 2. (a) The corporation may make emergency loans to any State for relief of distress arising from unemployment in such State, upon a showing to the satisfaction of the corporation as to the necessity for funds for such purpose and that all reaconable means of otherwise obtaining such funds have been exhausted. The corporation may make such loans by the purchase or underwriting of bonds of such States or in such manner and in such amounts, for periods not exceeding five years, upon such terms as to repayment of the principal thereof and interest thereon, and subject to such other conditions, as the corporation may determine. No such loan shall be made except upon the application of the chief executive of the State pursuant to appropriate authorization of its legislature, or by referendum or initiative by the people of any State, and upon the direct and unconditional obligation of such State to repay such loan with interest thereon in accordance with its terms.

(b) If at any time the corporation shall find that any State has defaulted in the performance of the terms or conditions of any loan made to it under this section, and if such default shall have continued for a period of 60 days after written notice thereof by the corporation to the chief executive of such State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the corporation, shall withhold annually thereafter from such State such sum or sums, not exceeding one-fifth of the unpaid indebtedness of such State hereunder, as the corporation shall deem requisite for its protection from apportionments made to such State of Federal grants in aid of States or out of any moneys due or payable by the United States to or for the use of such State, until such default has been remedied or the indebtedness has been paid. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon request of the corporation, pay the amount so withheld, or any part thereof which it may specify, to the corporation to be applied upon such indebtedness. If prior to any such payment the corporation shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury that such default has been remedied or the indebtedness paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall release the sum or sums so withheld.

SEC. 3. (a) The corporation may also make emergency advances for relief of distress arising from unemployment in any State upon a showing to the satisfaction of the corporation as to the necessity for funds for such purpose, that such State, by reason of its constitution, is unable to provide funds needed for the purpose, and that all reasonable means of otherwise obtaining such funds have been exhausted. In such case the corporation may make advances in such manner and amounts and under such condi-tions as the corporation may determine upon the assurance of the chief executive that he will recommend the necessary legistions as the corporation may determine upon the assurance of the chief executive that he will recommend the necessary legislative action under which advances made under this section may be funded into loans under section 2, and that every reasonable effort will be made to provide for the repayment to the corporation of all such advances with the interest thereon within a period not exceeding five years, in accordance with the conditions determined by the corporation.

(b) If prior to the expiration of 18 months from the enactment of this act any advance under this section has not been funded into a loan under section 2, together with any unpaid interest thereon, in accordance with the conditions determined by the corporation, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the corporation, shall withhold annually thereafter from such State such sum or sums, not exceeding one-fifth of the advances and the interest thereon, as the corporation shall deem requisite for its protection from apportionments made to such State of Federal grants in aid of States or out of any moneys due or payable by the United States to or for the use of such State, until such advances and interest have been paid. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon request of the corporation, pay the amount so withheld, or any part thereof which it may specify, to the corporation to be applied in repayment of such advances and interest.

SEC. 4. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by adding after section 5a the following new sections:

"SEC. 5b. The corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any State or political subdivision thereof, or to any agency constituted pursuant to the authority of such State, or to any

"SEC. 5b. The corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any State or political subdivision thereof, or to any agency constituted pursuant to the authority of such State, or to any corporation organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for its undertaking, for the purposes of enabling them to finance the construction, replacement, or reconstruction of economically sound and useful projects, the construction, replacement, or reconstruction of which will provide employment at an early date for a substantial number of persons, subject to the limitations of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the periods within which the corporation may make loans and the amounts thereof. The corporation may make such loans in such manner and amounts, for such periods not in excess of five years, upon such terms as to repayment of principal thereof and interest thereon, and subject to such other conditions as the corporation may determine. Each such loan shall be fully and adequately secured, and shall be made only upon a showing to the satisfaction of the board that the State, political subdivision, agency, or corporation applying for the loan is unable to obtain sufficient funds for the purpose upon reasonable terms through banking channels or from the sale of its bonds or other securities to the general public, and that the operation of the project when compelled will yield sufficient income to bonds or other securities to the general public, and that the operation of the project when completed will yield sufficient income to be self-sustaining, including the repayment of the loan made hereunder with the interest thereon in accordance with its terms hereunder with the interest thereon in accordance with its terms and conditions.

"Sec. 5c. The corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to bona fide financial institutions, organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and having resources adequate for their undertakings, for the purpose of enabling them to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of staple commodities produced in the United States. The corporation may make any such loan in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as it may determine subject to the limitations of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the periods within which it may make loans and the amounts and maturities thereof, and all such loans shall be fully and adequately secured.

"Sec. 5d. The corporation is authorized and directed until June 30, 1933, to allocate and make available to the Federal Farm Board such sums not exceeding in the aggregate $50,000,000 as the Federal Farm Board shall request from time to time to enable it to make additional loans to cooperative associations and stabilization corporations pursuant to the authority conferred upon said board by the agricultural marketing act of June 15, 1929, as amended.

"Sec. 5e. The corporation is authorized and directed until June 30, 1933, to allocate and make available to the Secretary of Agriculture such sums, not exceeding in the aggregate $50,000,000, as the Secretary of Agriculture may request from time to time for financing the exportation of agricultural commodities produced in the United States. The exercise of the authority hereby conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture shall be subject to the limitation of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act as to the periods within which loans may be made and the maturities thereof. The amounts which may be allocated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act shall be reduced by the aggregate of the secretary of Agriculture und thereof. The amounts which may be allocated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act shall be reduced by the aggregate of the sums made available to him under this section."

the sums made available to him under this section."

Sec. 5. The third paragraph of section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by striking out the second sentence thereof, which reads as follows: "Except as provided in section 5a hereof, no loan or advancement shall be made by the corporation for the purpose of initiating, setting on foot, or financing any enterprise not initiated, set on foot, or undertaken prior to the adoption of this act: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to loans made to agricultural or livestock credit corporations, or Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, or Federal intermediate credit banks, nor to loans made to banks for the purpose of financing agricultural operations."

SEC. 6. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to have outstanding at any one time is increased to an aggregate of six times its subscribed capital stock.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. On motion of Mr. RAINEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-GENERAL RELIEF BILL

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the word "bonus" means literally "good." Ordinarily, it means something paid in addition to the strict contract price. I am for the bonus legislation to pay to the former soldiers something in addition to the dollar a day that they received while serving, because it is not only a good thing for the former service man, but especially, and more particularly because it is a good thing for the people of the whole country at this particular time.

We have not the money in the Treasury to pay the bonus and we can not levy enough taxes to pay it at this time. But the plan proposed of issuing Federal reserve notes, backed by Government bonds and having adequate gold reserve to guarantee the same, will be highly beneficial to this distressed country. Our people are suffering from a paralysis of the circulatory system of business. That paralysis comes about because of a paralysis of credit. The value of credit was destroyed through the gigantic gambling game carried on in New York, ordinarily called speculation on the bull market.

Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the relief bill that bears your name, and I supported the bill to set up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I will support the measure to set up the home-loan board, to assist building and loan associations to help people build new homes or to buy homes already built. That means work for laborers. But these plans will involve the borrowing of money from some-body.

On December 8, 1931, I introduced a bill to set up a national emergency board, with some powers very similar to the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but in some other respects far broader and with more teeth. That bill proposed to sell bonds to the limit of $2,000,000,000 and the proceeds to be used for relief, so that no man, woman, or child in America shall suffer. I proposed to give to the board adequate powers for carrying on relief. That would involve the power to commandeer property or to commandeer the use of property. When people are starving or freezing to death that is no time to dicker and haggle about prices. That is the time to act. So my bill would give the national emergency board power to commandeer a train and to commandeer the output of a coal mine or all the output of a flour mill or all the output of a lumber mill and to send trainload after trainload of coal or flour or lumber to some place where it might be needed to prevent starving and freezing.

I coserve with much interest that the President now proposes that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be empowered to lend States and municipalities $300,000,000 to assist them in relief work among their own people. That same proposition was incorporated in my bill of December 8, 1931.

But, Mr. Speaker, the bill that bears your name, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and every proposition or measure that implies borrowing money is only a temporary makeshift at best. We can not borrow ourselves out of debt and we can not bring about prosperity by mortgaging the future. All these billions of dollars that we propose to borrow must be borrowed from the very people who already have a mortgage on everything in America and on everybody in America to the third and fourth generations. The Nation, the States, and the municipalities, combined with the corporations and individuals in this Nation, owe to a small percentage of the population, probably not over 4 per cent of the people, the enormous aggregate of about $150,000,000,000. Every billion of dollars that we borrow is borrowed from the same general group and is added to the same debt.

So. Mr. Speaker, it is necessary that we figure some way to start getting out of debt. Every dollar borrowed thereby enhances proportionately the relative value of a dollar. All the measures now before the Congress contemplate appreciating and adding to the purchasing power of a gold dollar. The result is that those of us who borrowed a dollar 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, or 10 years ago, when cotton was 20 cents a pound, when wheat was $1 a bushel, when cats were 50 cents a bushel, and when meat was 10 cents a pound on the hoof, now find that in terms of commodities it takes two, three, and even four times as much produce to pay the debt as it did when we borrowed it. The effect of this enhancement in the purchasing power of the dollar has been to double, triple, and quadruple our debts. That means that those who hold these mortgages on our property and on our earning power have been relatively enriched and have had their assets multiplied. Now, something must be done about this phase of the matter, or the relief measures that we are now putting on the statute books will eventually help to accomplish our own

So, Mr. Speaker, these fundamental considerations, almost axiomatic in their self-evident truth, are the reasons why I am for issuing Federal reserve notes to pay the $2,200,000,000 to the former service men. It means that this money will be divided among about four and one-half million former service men, scattered in proportion to population all over the Nation. This new money will not be hoarded by these veterans. Maybe some of them will squander it unwisely; but that is their right and privilege. We can not put them into a strait-jacket and compel them to use the money in the best possible place. But the number who will foolishly waste their money must be relatively few. The great masses of them have learned their lesson well. They will spend the money for the necessities of life for themselves and their families. The money thus spent will be paid for food and clothing, for medical attention, and for the hundreds of other necessities, comforts, and conveniences of life. The money thus paid out will pass from one hand to anotherfirst into the bank and then out of the bank, and in less than one year it is probable that every dollar thus paid out will pay $10 worth of debts. Thus, $2,200,000,000 of new money will pay $22,000,000,000 of debts. The money thus used to buy goods will justify the merchant in ordering more goods, and it will justify the manufacturer in making more goods, and thus the paralysis of business will be gradually overcome.

Business is now on a dead center. It can not start without some new stimulus. The people have no confidence in the banks and the banks have no confidence in the people. The people will not deposit in the banks and the banks will not lend to the people. When the wheels of business begin to turn again, as this bonus money would compel them to turn, the banker would see that the business of the merchant would justify a loan to the merchant, and that the new orders of the manufacturer would justify a loan to the manufacturer, and thus once more credit would slowly but surely be reestablished.

It is true that only a small part of the business of the Nation is done with actual money, but under the present conditions of lost confidence it is money alone that counts. People will not accept checks in payment of bills unless the checks are certified. But $2,400,000,000 of new money turning over ten times in a year will certainly start business going. When business is fully recovered it will be easy enough to retire this new money. It can then be retired by selling Government bonds which the investing public will then be glad to buy.

So, Mr. Speaker, what many regard as an unfortunate obligation to pay the balance of the adjusted compensation to the former soldiers at this time will under the existing economic conditions prove an actual blessing.

It is idle to try to frighten the country by saying that this issue of currency will lead to extreme and destructive inflation. Many of those who oppose the bonus admit that we have the gold and the resources ample to justify additional currency of $2,200,000,000. They say that it would | be all right if we could only stop there. But they argue that we would not stop at that point. They argue that if we once start to issuing paper money to inflate the currency and to raise commodity prices, that we can not stop the issue, and that we will continue until we go to the foolish and suicidal extreme that Germany did. That such argument is not justified is proven by the experience of France, of Italy, and lately of England. To argue that if we issue this new paper money and found that business was reviving that we would thereupon pass laws authorizing the issue of more and more money is an unjustifiable argument. It would be just as reasonable to argue that if a physician is called to a sick man whose heart action is so weak that he is about to die, and if the physician gives him one dose of nitroglycerin, and if he finds that his patient is recuperating that he will immediately give to the patient a double dose of nitroglycerin and kill him.

Mr. Speaker, the heart action of American business is beating at a low and slow ebb. The pulse is so faint and infrequent as to be hardly discernible. Now is the time for some heroic remedy. Now is the time to give an injection of nitroglycerin in the form of $2,400,000,000 of new money. Immediately the heart action will pick up and the sick business public of America will immediately brighten. The merchants will begin to sell goods, and the doctors, dentists, and lawyers will begin to collect fees, and the farmers will be able to sell their produce at fair prices, and the railroads will begin to carry goods, and the life-insurance companies will again collect premiums from the policyholders, and collect interest on their notes and mortgages. Every class, corner, and condition of American life will be immediately stimulated. It is necessary that we think in terms of an emergency. To do under ordinary conditions what is now proposed would be unreasonable and unjustifiable. It is unscientific and dangerous to give an injection of nitroglycerin to a well man. But business in America is sick. and many observing and thinking people fear that it is sick nigh unto death. Something must be done besides borrow more money. Something besides giving more mortgages against the earning power of our children and grandchildren must be done. We must do something to enable the people to pay back their debts in the terms of commodities at the prices prevailing when the debts were made.

When a farmer borrowed a thousand dollars on his farm a few years ago, 10 bales of cotton would pay that thousand dollars. To-day it will take 40 bales of cotton to pay that debt. If the farmer could multiply his producing capacity by four, the effect on the market price of cotton would be to cut even the present price in half. The result would be that instead of being able to pay his thousand-dollar debt with 40 bales of cotton, he would have to raise 80 bales of cotton. Under existing conditions, the harder a man works and the longer he lives the more he gets into debt. We must shake ourselves free from the narrow thinking of the big banker man. Wisely, and properly, the banker is very conservative. But to assume that he knows all of the laws of economic life and that his conclusions about the broad principles governing business are all correct is unjustifiable and unwarranted.

The recent experience of the American public in buying stocks and bonds upon the recommendation of big New York bankers is proof positive that the banker is weak and shortsighted, and often selfish like the rest of us. These New York bankers loaded billions of practically worthless foreign bonds upon the investing public of America. They advised the purchasing of American securities at three and four and even five times their real value. The trouble is that too many bankers in America let the New York bankers do their thinking. It is very much like the Army. the general thinks, all the colonels and all the majors and all the captains think. Those New York bankers have demonstrated their incapacity to advise the public in a broad way, and we must free ourselves from their selfish and narrow point of view. These New York investment bankers represent the views of the 3 or 4 per cent of the American population who have a mortgage on the property and the earning power of the other 96 or 97 per cent of the American people. How long will this 96 or 97 per cent permit the insignificant minority of 3 or 4 per cent to dictate the financial policy of the Nation? How long will this minority fix to their own advantage the yardstick of value for American commodities and for American labor? Here is the fundamental economic problem confronting the American people. This is the source of our trouble.

When we ascertain our freedom from the selfish thinking of those who have a selfish interest in multiplying the value of a dollar and in decreasing the value of a commodity and of labor, then just so long will the conditions from which we now suffer continue to sap the life of our people.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am following you in part, but I hope that the Congress, before it adjourns, will see that the fundamental problem is the money problem; that the yard-stick of all value is the dollar; that those who control the dollar control the labor of the men who produce commodities; that those who control the dollar naturally enlarge its buying power and thereby shrink the value of commodities. It is just as unwise and as unfair to allow the small minority to control the yardstick of value as it would be to allow cloth merchants to fix the length of a yardstick or to allow grocery merchants to fix the weight of a pound. Merchants generally are certainly honest, but the power of selfishness is well known to all mankind. Undoubtedly the yardstick would shrink and the pound would shrivel.

So it is with the minority that controls money, which is the life blood of business. They use that money, and credit which comes from the use of money, to multiply the fortunes they already have, and they can not multiply their own fortunes without subtracting from the wealth of those whose labor produces the things that man must have to eat and to wear. Here is the heart of the problem—prices of cotton and wheat, meat, and milk must rise. We can do this if we increase the volume of money and credit.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the statement of my colleague [Mr. Dyer] that Missouri and St. Louis do not want a relief bill passed. This measure, far from being perfect, will result in a relief bill being enacted before this Congress adjourns. Just a few moments ago the head of the legal division of St. Louis, Mr. Muench, and Mr. E. J. Steger and Mr. Meyers, leaders among those who have been handling relief funds in St. Louis, talked with us in the corridor. They came to Washington to get relief or to get the bill so worded that Missouri and St. Louis can participate if it is found necessary. So far we have met the situation, which is becoming more desperate daily. I hope we will not need it, but certainly provisions should be made to enable States and municipalities as well as counties to secure aid if it becomes necessary to apply for it.

There are provisions of this measure with which I am not in accord, but I feel confident that in the end a relief bill will be brought before the House in the form of a conference report that every Member, including the Republicans who are now in opposition, will approve and will vote for.

The political speeches made here to-day were uncalled for. Some one had to start the movement for a relief bill, and this bill was introduced for that purpose. As usual, when a movement is started, the President let his views be known. It matters not to me what kind of a bill is brought forward, or who is the author of the bill, just so it is sound and will afford relief, provided it becomes necessary to apply, I will support it.

Mr. Speaker, it would be a fatal mistake for this Congress to adjourn without placing money at the disposal of the President, or some other Government agency, to be used in the event of necessity.

Mr. LARRABEE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of government is to protect and defend the weak and the oppressed and to suppress, if necessary, the strong, that equal rights may prevail under our Constitution for all people.

In times of panic such as this, when hardship and want are the rule and not the exception, it becomes mandatory on the Federal Government to act for the protection of the weak

I have said since Congress convened that I would support and vote for any measure that offered any prospect of relief for those who are no longer able to provide for themselves. While I would not oppose a so-called "dole" if it were to prevent hardship and suffering, I have maintained that a constructive program to put men back to work is far better than extending the arm of direct charity.

Speaker Garner has offered the first plan of any sort that will bring immediate relief to the suffering people. His plan has been wisely prepared. He proposes to alleviate hunger and starvation and distress immediately and to open the doors of construction to labor that men may again be provided with jobs that will enable them to earn daily bread for themselves and families.

Much has been said by the factions opposing Mr. Garner's plan—and their opposition is purely political—about their plan, but those who oppose the Garner plan have failed to bring forth anything that will bring relief in any way.

They gave us a moratorium, with promises that it would restore confidence throughout the world and revive business, industry, and commerce. It has failed entirely. They gave us a Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with promises that it would thaw frozen assets, prevent bank failures, and open credit to the Nation, thus bringing about restoration of confidence and a revival of business and industry.

While there undoubtedly have been some benefits to big business, unemployment, farm failures and bankruptcy, hunger, hardship, and starvation have increased. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has failed to reach the people that the Government is intended to protect and defend.

Mr. Garner and his party have generously supported measures proposed by the opposition, desiring to aid and not to block any legislation that might be of benefit, and have given the opposition full measure of cooperation.

In the face of this, when Mr. Garner and his party bring forth the only measure that has been offered to provide relief, he has met with immediate opposition from the White House down to the political cohorts of the President in Congress. Cooperation was a fine thing while those on the majority side of the House were extending it, but when it came time for the minority side to do their part, as expected by the people of the entire Nation, no cooperation was forthcoming.

Playing politics with human misery, poverty, want, and starvation that their candidate for the Nation's highest gift might not be embarrassed by seeing the opposing party succeed in passing a measure of relief for the people in need became an actuality.

Charges of "pork-barrel" legislation were hurled in an effort to befuddle the people; but I say to you, it is better to give the people generously of "pork" than hot air when the people are starving.

But this is not a "pork-barrel" measure. It is sane, positive legislation to give relief, both immediately by the extension of aid to the distressed and by providing work that the unemployed may earn their own living.

Charges have also been hurled that this measure will further unbalance the Budget that has just been balanced. Nothing could more fully fill the definition for "propaganda." Mr. Garner, in his wisdom, provided in his bill the means for raising the money to finance the program of construction.

A tax so small that it would hardly be noticed has been levied on gasoline, and means of funding the program over a period of years have been set up.

In his recent message to Congress Mr. Hoover remarked that it remained to be seen "whether or not the American people had the courage to tax themselves to prosperity," but when the Democratic House brought out its program to relieve suffering and revive business, industry, and commerce the President and his cohorts set up a great cry against the very suggestion he had made a few days before.

The Hoover plans have been tried, with Democratic support to make possible their enactment, and have been found sorely wanting. If the Republicans are sincere in their reputed desire to relieve distress, let them now lay aside party prejudice and their political guns and join with the Democrats in Congress to actually provide the relief that is needed. Let them reciprocate in the matter of cooperation.

Our duty, as representatives of the people in Federal Government, is plain. We must act, and at once, to defend those who are no longer able to protect themselves from misery and want. If we do not, then there is no use for us to continue here, for we have failed in our duty, and I sincerely believe that the people will take it upon themselves to see to it that any Member of Congress, and any Senator, who attempts to block this measure of relief will end his period of misrepresentation on March 4 next.

While the specter of disaster and catastrophy stalks the land, we have it in our power to put an end to all this, and once again make this a land of liberty, hope, and promise.

It would be unjust, however, for me to close my remarks without calling attention to the fact that there are in the ranks of the Republican Members of the House some men with sufficient courage and vision and sufficient interest in the welfare of the common people who have joined with us in passing this bill through the House.

They are men who realize the true purpose of constituted government—and who know their duty as their brothers' keepers.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if high-sounding titles had the power of the magic wand, the above should at once set the country on its way to a speedy and happy solution of its many distressing problems. Two days ago, after six months of arduous, nerve-racking toil, we succeeded in sending a Budget balancing bill to the President.

The success of this bill is contingent upon the most drastic economies in Government expenditures-economies which will mean sharp reduction in salaries, reduction in personnel, and the elimination of a considerable number of Government activities. For months we have been striving to maintain the financial integrity of the Government, protect its securities, and to reestablish confidence. Until confidence is restored, I can see small chance of getting industry back on its feet. Without industrial activity there can be no work for labor; without work for labor there can be no purchasing power; without purchasing power there can be no recovery of farm-commodity prices; and without the recovery of agriculture prosperity can not be restored. It is shocking to have such a bill as this brought in at the very moment when, through the most rigid economy and the greatest sacrifice in the way of heavy tax levies there was prospect of a balanced Budget, a restoration of confidence, and a rising hope for the revival of business. How can industry revive if we are to continue to pile up public expenditures, debts, and ever-mounting taxes?

Already tens of thousands of farms have gone into public ownership by the tax-deed route. More are going. Not content with heaping additional loads upon the farmer by an unconscionable tax on lumber, lubricating oil, gasoline, and checks, this bill adds insult to injury by piling still higher the tax on gasoline, of which the farmer is of necessity a heavy user.

How can prosperity be enticed back by spending hundreds of millions for so-called improvements and construction not needed? At best the proposed extravagant expenditures for additional river and harbor improvement, public roads, and innumerable new post-office buildings will furnish employment to but a small part of the unemployed. How can unemployment be remedied by such a method? Who is going to pay the bill? The taxpayer, of course. But where is he going to get the money? It is said that from eight to ten millions of persons are unemployed. Upon the most liberal estimate not to exceed 400,000 to 500,000 persons can be put to work if the entire program could at once be inaugurated. In all probability the number would be much less. It would take months to get the work started.

Even so, such a program is of necessity of short duration. What then? Manifestly the only solution is to get the wheels of industry going. The President's program gives some promise of doing this. The Garner proposal does not, but will farther mire us down with a hopeless burden of taxes and a billion dollars more of debt. Already our Federal bonds are selling at a heavy discount. What rate of interest, Mr. Speaker, do you suppose we will have to pay to sell such an issue of long-term bonds?

In order to get support for the measure, the Speaker has dangled before our eyes no less than 2,766 new post-office buildings and 85 other structures. Small towns would get buildings costing from $55,000 to $125,000. Not only are these not needed but they represent shocking extravagance at any time, not to say at a time like this. In many instances interest on the investment at 4 per cent per annum, 2 per cent for depreciation, and janitor services would multiply the present operating expense of these offices from 300 to 500 per cent. We already have 3-cent postage. What is it going to be when these new offices are built?

To accomplish this ruin, our Democratic friends have not only bound their membership in this House hand and foot by an ironclad caucus decree compelling support of the measure but have brought in here the most drastic gag rule in the history of the House. Only three hours of debate is allowed on a $2,200,000,000 bill. No amendments whatever are allowed from the floor. The bill was not read in the committee reporting it, and the reading of the bill is denied in the House. If ever there was parliamentary tyranny, this is it. What has become of the boasted liberty of action and freedom of Members to prefer amendments, of which we have heard so much from our Democratic friends in the past? They have out-Cannonized Cannon. That reputed czar would never have dared force such procedure.

If this bill should become law, South Dakota would get $690,000 in post-office construction, and presumably something for roads. It is fair to assume that we shall have to pay approximately our share upon a per capita basis. A little computation will show that this bill will cost us in the neighborhood of $12,000,000.

Human need must be cared for; but surely some way can be found where more of the money spent would get into the hands of those who need it. A mere fraction of the amount proposed to be expended, if used for thinning where needed and replanting burned-over areas in our national forests, would not only give employment to tens of thousands of men but would repay the expenditure in course of time in greatly augmented production of a product that is being rapidly depleted in our country. Thirty-five States, Alaska, and Puerto Rico have national forests that need attention, so that the work would be widespread and easily within the reach of those in need of employment.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the heat of debate on this measure, and among the fumes of pork and cheese, together with vision of the marble walls of post offices and public buildings either needed or not needed, the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives, in my opinion, did as I feared they would, lost their perspective and lost sight of the real issue involved in their vote on this measure.

For the last two months the Congress has been busily engaged in trying to balance the Budget, taxes have been increased to staggering proportions, ruinous in many cases, I fear, by reason of the failure to pass the manufacturers' excise tax, and drastic cuts in Government appropriations and expenses have been made, all for the purpose of balancing the Budget. For the last two months, and up until yesterday, the unanimous opinion of the Members of Congress, regardless of party, seems to have been that it was absolutely necessary to balance the Budget. If not, why the untiring effort to increase taxes by one billion and a quarter dollars, and a reduction in operating costs of two hundred and fifty millions?

I recall how enthusiastically the House as one man recently rose and cheered in response to the Speaker's appeal to assist in balancing the Budget. I took this seriously, I thought it important, even essential to our national wellbeing, to balance the Budget; and if the letters I have been receiving recently from my home, as well as from all over the country, and the editorial comments I have read mean anything, the country thinks it important and the country took it seriously.

Naturally I am confused to see the leaders of the Democratic Party—men for whom I have sincere respect and for whose views I have a high regard, leaders in the great fight to balance the Budget—the very next day after the bill was passed balancing the Budget vote to a man to unbalance it by supporting a public works bill which would place a direct burden of $1,000,000,000 on the United States Treasury, withdraw from it the very billion dollars that has been imposed upon the already overburdened taxpayers of the country after so much effort and discussion by the new tax bill, and leaving the Treasury just where it was when we started, unbalanced by a billion dollars.

Surely the President thought it was necessary to balance it, otherwise he would not have taken the almost unprecedented course of suddenly appearing in person in the Senate and pleading for a balanced Budget.

Surely the Senate thought it necessary, for it stayed in session that day until far into the night and balanced it.

Surely the nations in Europe took it seriously as evidenced by their rapid withdrawal of gold from this country for fear that we would not, and certainly American business and industry took it seriously as evidenced by the rapid decline in all stocks and bonds, and their immediate rise, as if heaving a sigh of relief as soon as the task was performed.

Yet, from the almost solid Democratic vote to-day it would appear that all of this labor and fear at home and abroad were unnecessary. What I can not understand is, Why was it so necessary last week and last month and the month before—and to-day it is utterly immaterial as compared with the construction of innumerable post offices and public buildings, many of which have been protested against by the very people in whose communities they are to be built?

This is a mystery which I hope our friends on the Democratic side will explain to the country. I admit that I am greatly confused.

But they say this was to create work—work for the unemployed—but will it? The land has not been bought nor the plans prepared, and it would require a year to even start on this vast scheme. Assuming everything were ready and all could start at once, possibly two or three hundred thousand would be temporarily put to work, a number which would be hardly noticed in the vast army of unemployed throughout the country; but the loss of jobs by the chaos which would be caused by our failure to balance the Budget would be infinitely greater than the numbers employed in this nonessential Government work program, and we would end with an additional billion-dollar burden on the tax-payers, more men out of work, and an even more difficult task of balancing the Budget.

The problem of the unemployed is the greatest problem facing this Congress. I would gladly stay in Washington all summer to see it solved and hope we will not leave until it is. However, I do not believe it is the proper function of the National Government to assume the burden of individual employment until every State and city has exhausted every remedy. The same power of taxation is given to the States and cities as is given to the Federal Government; they have even a broader basis of taxation, and the tax falls on the same people whether imposed by the Federal Government or by the States and cities. I believe in State rights and I also believe in State responsibilities, and no better occasion was ever offered for them to assume both than now. But, assuming that the States and cities have exhausted every means and failed to provide, then the Federal Government should come to their aid if there are any sources of revenue left-but where will this be?

We have borrowed ourselves into this difficulty; we can not borrow ourselves out. We can not bring prosperity by taxing an already overburdened people to provide temporary non-revenue-producing and unessential work for a comparatively few of the unemployed.

The President's plan, in my opinion, offers the only safe solution. It provides loans for work of a necessary, revenue-producing, labor-employing character, without laying an additional burden of taxes on the country.

It relieves the country of the fear of additional taxation; it restores confidence and hope and courage in American industry, and this once established, business and industry will take care of the unemployment in a vastly greater way than the Government could possibly do.

For the immediate future, inasmuch as we are waging war—a war on depression—I think the Army could render invaluable aid, and I would suggest that the Secretary of War be authorized and empowered to secure from the Federal Farm Board as much wheat as required and to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation sufficient funds to establish camps throughout the country, use its tents and field kitchens and personnel to provide for those who actually need food and shelter, until a return of normal conditions. This would take a heavy burden from the cities and would cost less than any other way.

A 5-day week and a 6-hour day in Government and private work at the earliest possible moment would, in my opinion, aid materially in absorbing a vast number of the unemployed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Federal postoffice building in the district which I represent, in a town of 2,500 people, concerning which I have checked up the records of expenditure for the year 1931. There has been no waste of public funds in connection with the upkeep of the building, but I find the total expenditures for that year for heat, light, water, repairs, and janitor service amount to the total sum of $2,724.24.

In another town in the district, a county-seat town slated for a new post-office building under the bill now under consideration, the total expenditure for rent, light, heat, and all other housing expense was $756 for the same year. In other words, by a comparison of the annual expenditures for housing the post office in these two towns of substantially the same size and receipts, it will be seen that the expense to the Federal Government where the Government owns the building is more than three times as great as where the building is rented. And this does not take into consideration the capital expenditures and interest on bonds necessary to construct the building. It is not alone the original cost of this proposition, but it is the upkeep which will recur year after year from now on.

In this time of high taxes and financial distress our people do not approve of this Congress entering upon a program of erecting post-office buildings which can not be justified economically and which are clearly unsound from a business standpoint because of the enormous total annual increase in operating expense.

When the newspapers carried the story of the so-called Garner public-building program for Iowa, letters were written me by constituents from several of the towns proposed to be benefited, substantially as follows:

"Our citizens note with surprise that this town is listed to have—should this bill become law—a post-office building to cost $70,000, and other towns near by also to be so favored. Ye gods; $70,000 would buy our entire main street. This town does not need a post-office building in times like these." And the same may be said of the other towns listed.

Certainly we can not reduce public expenditures by an enormous increase of the annual costs of the upkeep of public buildings. This increased cost comes from the taxpayers. We have just imposed upon the people additional taxes, many of which can not be justified, to balance the Budget, and to my mind it is inconsistent to support a program which means continuously additional expenditures for maintenance. I am opposed to the unsound and uneconomic policy of the construction of public buildings in any section of the country in times like these when our people are overburdened with taxes and are themselves in financial distress.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I attended the caucus of my party, and gladly bound myself and my colleagues to vote for H. R. 12445, a bill reported out by the Ways and Means Committee to relieve destitution and succor the needy by broadening the loaning powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to decrease the number of idle in this country by creating employment through the authorization and expedition of a public-works program, and to provide a method of financing such a program.

The bill divides itself into three parts: Title I provides for authorizing the appropriation of the sum of $100,000,000, to be available to the President of the United States until July 1, 1933, to be disbursed by him, either in the form of loans of money or of supplies or in the form of gifts.

Title II expands the facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It now lends to banks, mortgage companies, surety companies, and other bona fide finance companies. Under this bill it is authorized to make loans to persons or corporations—either public corporations, quasipublic corporations, or private corporations. For this purpose the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is given increased authority to issue bonds and debentures from three times the amount of its subscribed stock, which is $500,000,000, to five times that amount. So that, whereas the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was heretofore enabled to issue $1,500,000,000 in debentures, it now has the right to issue $2,500,000,000 in debentures, or an increase of $1,000,000,000.

Title III is a comprehensive public-works-construction program, providing for the prosecution of river and harbor improvements as recommended by the War Department, the building of roads, the prosecution of existing projects of flood control on the Mississippi River, the Sacramento River, and other streams, the erection of post-office and various other public buildings. It is hoped that by the carrying out of this public-works-construction program thousands upon thousands of idle hands will become busy, purchasing power will increase, consumption demand will increase, and to a great extent the wheels of industry ought to again revolve.

Relative to Title I, providing for the sum of $100,000,000 at the disposal of the President, I would say that this is a bill of rescue and mercy. We have not as yet plumbed the depths of misery and suffering brought on by unemployment. If we can not give the poor but able-bodied men jobs, we must at least give them food and clothing. To the opponents of this bill I would say, these poor and needy ones ask for bread, and you on the Republican side of the aisle would give them a stone. Under ordinary conditions I would not wish to place such tremendous power in the hands of the President.

During the World War we gave our President huge powers. We are now engaged in war—a war against need and suffering. Powers commensurate with the responsibilities brought on by this economic war must again be granted to the President. Private charity is unavailing. The coffers of private organizations are empty. All private means have become exhausted. The Emergency Unemployment Relief Committee, namely, in New York, is near the end of its rope. Even the so-called rich in New York City are unable to help; they can not give further.

There is plenty of precedent for us to approve this measure. We gave many millions to the starving Russians, Germans, and Austrians. Some weeks ago we donated 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to the needy of this land through the American Red Cross. This morning I am informed that the Committee on Agriculture has voted out another bill for an additional 40,000,000 bushels of wheat and 500,000 bales of cotton to clothe and feed unfortunate people through the instrumentality of the American Red Cross.

It is not only a question of getting jobs for the poor. From 10 to 20 per cent of our population are outside of such help and can not be relieved by jobs; they can not work. There are the great masses of aged and decrepit people, helpless women and children, and, in short, the halt, the lame, and the feeble. The only benefit to them of jobs is the small amount of relief that trickles down to them from those near and dear to them who are possessed of jobs. But getting jobs is not enough. They need direct relief, and must have it.

Unless we help those in need of charity, I shudder to consider the dreadful consequences—starvation and ruin visited upon thousands. There would be uprisings and upheavals, the repercussions of which would be felt for decades to come. We can not remain indifferent in the face of such impending calamity.

Title II of the act really puts the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into the banking business. It provides that private individuals and private corporations may receive loans upon good security, as are now available to banks, railroads, and so forth. While banks are no longer failing in the same proportion as last year, and while we might say that bank failures have been practically arrested, nevertheless many people in this land still lack proper confidence in our banking system; they are still hoarding their money instead of putting it into these banks. There is ever present in the minds of the bankers the fear of sudden runs and sudden demands for the withdrawal of deposits. This makes bankers timid; they must remain "liquid"; as a consequence, they do not lend their money.

Many bankers state that there is little or no demand for money on the part of good and solvent concerns. Since the banks can not, will not, or dare not make loans, some other instrumentality must be set up to make loans to private enterprises. This the bill permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to do. At first I viewed with fear and trepidation the encroachment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the field of the banks, but I have spoken to several bankers of prominence in New York, and am informed that they see no harm in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation entering the banking field as a temporary measure.

This is a temporary measure. The War Finance Corporation during the World War made loans directly to private business. It suffered no losses and did great good. In this emergency the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may duplicate the splendid work performed by the War Finance Corporation during the war.

The huge sums of money now piled up in the banks are sterile, useless, nonproductive, and offer no credit base. Last week the surplus bank reserves in New York City on the part of the larger banks amounted to $150,000,000. means $150,000,000 over legal surplus requirements. That surplus bank reserve has no useful purpose. In fact, it is dangerous; it is proof positive that the member banks are not loaning any money, are not extending additional commercial credit.

In a certain sense banking credit is not responding to the needs of trade. No credit means no business, no construction, no initiative, no enterprise, with business stagnant, no work, no jobs. Private banking being unwilling or unable to supply the needed credit to industry, public banking must. Therefore we empower the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to enter the field of private banking and do, temporarily at least, what the private bankers can not or will not do.

Title III really embodies Hoover projects. It is difficult to understand the Republican objections at this time. It simply provides for regulated construction and the setting up of the machinery that will make possible thousands of jobs. President Hoover has advocated again and again public-works construction. He has promised and promised. The Democrats now perform. Mealy-mouthed Republicans have used words and words and more words along this line; the Democrats now say it with pickax and shovel.

It is interesting to note chronologically the various times President Hoover has advocated in principle the items covered under Title III of this bill. That which the President and the Republicans have clamored for for the past decade should not be wrong.

For some mysterious reason the President now turns his back on all these words, and does not want public-works construction. He says not enough jobs will be made available. In this connection, let me give you an extract from an editorial appearing in one of the New York magazines concerning the number of jobs that will be available and indicating how President Hoover has underestimated the actual number of positions that will be created:

In speaking of road construction, Mr. Hoover asserted that giving $132,000,000 to the States for highway construction would directly employ only 35,000 men and indirectly 20,000 more. Last winter, Col. F. S. Greene, the superintendent of public works of the State of New York, got out a table for the benefit of the legislature which proved that $132,000,000 would build 3,300 miles of road and would employ 148,500 men. To-day prices have changed so that, as shown by bids, this sum would build 3,770 miles of road and employ 169,450 persons. But what is a little difference of 114,450 men to a President when he wants to make a point?

If this bill passes within 70 or 90 days, according to the word of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, work on a large scale can be started and the dirt will fly at once. Furthermore, the question of the condemnation of property for the acquisition of sites for the erection of public buildings is greatly simplified by this bill. Under the present law you must first procure a site and then build. The acquisition often takes a year or more. Under the provisions of this bill you do not buy a site; you take it—that is, you condemn it—and subsequently payment is made therefor. Much time is thus saved.

Under the provisions of Title III there would not be expended more than $400,000,000 during the next fiscal year, with an economically sound building program. If more is allotted, more than one year would be covered. Bonds would be issued to this extent. These bonds could be amortized at the rate of 21/2 per cent per annum, making the bonds 40 years in duration. The interest on the $400,000,000. including sinking fund provision, as financed by the issuance of Treasury bills and would be $2,500,000. However and whatever the cost, relief would be direct, employment could be had directly or indirectly in the mills, the factories, the quarries, the looms, on the farms, and so forth.

The bill has been drawn, and this is the essential point: to enable the country to put men at work as rapidly as possible; and that work be provided in every nook and cranny of the United States. It must be realized that wages turn over fifteen times a year. Thus there would be a purchasing power of fifteen times the number of dollars expended. This should be sufficient to start us well out of the rut of depression.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the present Democratic relief plan. It is not my idea of a real relief measure. It is, though, better than nothing and better than some of the other plans, which would give no relief whatever to some sections of the country.

FAIR DIVISION

This bill will give at least a modicum of relief to every congressional district.

FEDERAL COURT BUILDING FOR WAYCROSS

Waycross would get a Federal court building, which is very much needed and which will be built in the near future. Why not make this improvement now and give this aid to the good people of this community.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING FOR BAXLEY

Under this bill the splendid little city of Baxley will get a post-office building at the cost of $60,000. This city for some time has had over $10,000 annual postal receipts and is entitled to a Federal post-office building under the old law and would soon get a building even under the present law. Baxley is the only city in my district with $10,000 annual postal receipts without a post-office building. It is entitled to a building under the $10,000 annual postal receipt law. Why not do this work now and give this incident relief?

LOWER ANNUAL POSTAL-RECEIPT REQUIREMENT

For several years I have fought for post-office buildings in towns with less than $10,000 annual postal receipts. I have done this because there are many splendid small cities in my district and elsewhere which have less than $10,000 annual postal receipts but have over $5,000 annual receipts.

FAVORS $5,000 ANNUAL POSTAL-RECEIPT LIMIT

For the last several years I have introduced a bill at each session making the limit for post-office buildings only $5,000 annual postal receipts instead of the $10,000 annual-receipt limit. This bill is a partial recognition of the principle for which I have been contending. The annual postal-receipt limit under this bill is placed at $8,000.

POST-OFFICE BUILDINGS FOR JESUP AND BLACKSHEAR

This lowering of the limit would give Jesup and Blackshear each a $60,000 Federal post-office building, as provided in this bill.

OLD POST OFFICE BUILDING LAW

Under the law of force until several years after the World War, post-office buildings, so far as possible, were distributed equally among the various congressional districts, with the $10,000 annual postal-receipt requirement given recognition as fully as possible.

UNDER NEW SCHEME

Now, the postal-receipt requirement is followed much more strictly, if not altogether.

NO FAVORITISM NOW

One good feature of present plan is that postal receipts determine the matter entirely. There are several good cities in my district, though, which never will get post-office buildings unless their annual receipts increase or unless the annual receipt limit can be lowered.

FUTILITY OF POST OFFICE BUILDING BILLS

Most new Members of Congress introduce many post office building bills. They soon learn the futility of this course. Many older Members introduce these bills upon request. The fact remains that the city now must come within the limit by an increase of postal receipts or the limit must be lowered so as to include the particular city.

MANY MISLED

I wish this law was fully known to all the people. Many criticize Members of Congress for not getting post-office buildings in cities where the postal receipts are entirely too low to at all secure a public building, and many candidates make promises to secure public buildings where at this time there is no chance at all.

VALDOSTA POST-OFFICE BUILDING

This bill also carries a liberal amount for the improvement of the Federal building at Valdosta.

FOR AID TO SMALL CITIES

I find growing sentiment in favor of my plan to build small post-office buildings in cities of $5,000 or more annual postal receipts. Beautiful sites could be secured at a very reasonable cost and small, beautiful buildings could be built at $30,000 in the $5,000 annual postal-receipt city as against a $60,000 building in a $10,000 annual postal-receipt city.

HELP FOR SMALL COMMUNITY

We spend too much money for large cities and not enough for the smaller cities. All are Americans, and the very best of the best are in the smaller cities and the country.

LITTLE REAL RELIEF

This bill will give very little real relief, either, to the unemployed and practically none to the farmer. I wish we would shut off all construction of public buildings, which gives only a little relief to contractors and their employees, and pass some legislation giving aid to the farmers and giving permanent employment at reasonable pay to the now unemployed.

TEMPORARY

The relief under this bill is not permanent, is very limited, and largely at the expenses of the very people that it is claimed will be helped.

NOT ENTHUSIASTIC

I am not at all strong for the measure, even though it is heralded as a Democratic measure.

REPUBLICAN PLAN WORSE

The proposals for relief sponsored by Republican leaders are much worse, as they give much less aid to small cities and the mass of citizens.

FAIR TREATMENT

Both plans are bad, but if such a building plan is to be put over I want, demand, and must have my share of public buildings for my people.

BONDS

Why issue bonds to build public buildings everywhere when we can get along a year or two more without them? Why not use these bonds to pay the soldiers' bonus and to reduce taxes rather than be engaged in increasing tax levies? Why not use these bonds to stop mortgage foreclosures and return farm lands to original owners, rather than to raise money for public buildings.

AWFUL TRUTH

None of the legislation passed and to be passed at this session of Congress will bring real relief and much of it will do real harm and put additional burdens on those that should be helped.

PROMISES INSTEAD OF PERFORMANCES

There is already an overproduction of promises by the very people who have failed to keep promises made in the past and by those who will gladly promise anything on earth to get elected.

EVIL OF THIS MEASURE

This Democratic so-called relief plan has some bad provisions along with the good. I shall not discuss these in detail at this time.

GOOD PROVISIONS

The bill provides for some reasonable direct relief to the starving people of our Nation. I wish it went farther in this respect. It also provides for a little, very much belated, modification of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. I tried to secure this liberalization of this act by several amendments when this law was first up for consideration and was blocked by some of those now sponsoring these provisions. Of course, I favor even the present very tardy proposal to do very feebly and very incompletely what should have been done fully and vigorously in the beginning. It may be that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act will be made a fairly good act by the time practically all the funds handled under this act are safely in the hands of the big corporations and the common people are being severely taxed to pay the bill.

As is usual the common people will probably get the shell and the big corporations get the substance; the farmers and laborers get the promise and the multimillionaires get the performance; the private, independent citizen and business man get a fairly good bill after the big corporations get practically all the money.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the so-called Garner "pork-barrel bill" which is now before the House. I have made a detailed study of the bill Speaker Garner projected in the great name of unemployment relief, and demand the elimination of some of its absurd provisions, if not its absolute abandonment. I was very much interested in the statement contained in the New York Tribune last week, as to the idea of feeding marble post offices to hungry men out of work. There is an excellent description of Mr. Garner and his method of relief in the Sermon on the Mount. It reads:

Or what man is there of you who if his son asks bread will he give him a stone.

Congress has been laboring for six months to balance the Budget; and hardly before the signature of President Hoover is dry upon the revenue law, the Democratic Party presents this "pork barrel bill," called together a caucus of Democrats, and compelled everyone to vote for this iniquitous measure. When we have had proposals to put money in the Treasury there was no caucus, but when it was to take money out of the Treasury the Democrats then had a conference and bound all their Members, but in spite of this 20 Democrats voted with Republicans. Even the watchdog of the Treasury, the distinguished Representative from Texas, Mr. Blanton, arose and meekly said, "I am a Democrat and I am in favor of this bill." That is not the kind of speech which Mr. Blanton makes when he is really speaking for a righteous cause.

To give my constituents a slight idea of what was contained in this bill, they gave the twenty-fifth congressional district 22 post offices the cost of which is almost $3,000,000. Most of them were not needed, and the worst evidence of extravagance was giving five communities each a $70,000 post office whose postal receipts were about $10,000 and whose population was from 1,500 to 2,900 persons. Since December last I had almost weekly taken up with the interdepartmental group the matter of obtaining from them post offices which were most necessary, based upon expiration of leases, postal receipts, and population, and I would have been entitled to four post offices if the Nation had not been in such financial distress, but when I pick up the Ganner "pork barrel bill" I find that Santa Claus has given me 22 post offices at a cost of almost $3,000,000.

I received yesterday the following telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of New Rochelle:

The New Rochelle Chamber of Commerce through its board of directors urgently wishes to impress upon you that it deems it imperative for the financial integrity of the Federal Government that New Rochelle and for that matter all cities to forego at this time any appropriations for a new post office for this city, no matter how badly needed, and until such time as the Federal Government finances are restored to a truly favorable condition.

I also received many letters from citizens in every part of my congressional district protesting against this disgraceful bill and protesting against the outrageous bond issue which would necessarily follow after its passage providing for so-called public works and to give employment at the expense of the country at a time when saving rather than spending is our only hope for permanent recovery. The Garner bill would instead issue bonds for projects not self-sustaining. It would unbalance the Budget in the eyes of every industry and decrease the value of Government securities. The time to halt the "pork-barrel procession" is now—before it has begun.

To take the place of this Garner bill the administration through Congressman Hawley, of Oregon, presented H. R. 12409 and H. R. 12410. These bills provided for the lending of money to the municipalities and groups which would bring back to the Government in time the principal with interest so that as between a spending bill and a lending bill I am for the lending bill. I believe the time has come when Representatives will be valued by their constituents not for the size of appropriations they get for their districts but rather the amount of money they help to save for the taxpayers of the United States of America. A former Republican President of the United States after the Spanish War, William McKinley, said that a nation could not be restored to permanent prosperity by adding additional tax burdens on the people. The Republican program does not place any additional burden upon the taxpayers of the country while the Democratic program provides for a huge expenditure on Federal post offices immediately, which will necessitate very heavy additional taxes.

As between the Garner plan and the Hoover plan I know I am representing the people of the twenty-fifth district when I again back the President of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I arise in opposition to this legislation which began as an emergency relief measure and has since grown into such proportions that it has achieved the high distinction of being called the Garner pork-barrel bill. How it is possible for Members of this Congress, knowing conditions as they have been presented to us day after day during the past winter, to consent to the passage of a bill of this kind is beyond my powers to comprehend.

At the beginning of the World War this country suddenly came to the realization that through 150 years of thrift, of common-sense business methods, we had grown to be the richest country in the world. Intoxicated by the realization of this fact, and through the excitement incident to the war, we began to scatter our wealth like the proverbial drunken sailor on a spree. We drew checks for millions of dollars and gave them to every person who came for help. This orgy of spending continued after the war was closed, and in my opinion did much to excite the people of the Nation, and led them into an era of speculation and high living such as the world has never known. Two years ago this period of high living came suddenly to a crash, and untold suffering has been the result. Private individuals and business concerns have courageously endeavored to balance up their accounts and start over again. And they have called upon the Congress of the United States to straighten out the affairs of the Federal Government, cut down its expenses, balance the Budget, and start over again upon the old kind of common-sense basis. In order that this might be accomplished the citizens of the United States have unanimously agreed to stand for a war-time revenue bill in time of peace, although it is going to tax their pocketbooks in order to pay. They have made this agreement with Congress in the implied confidence that when this Budget has been balanced there will be no more extravagance in the Federal Government affairs, and that business will then be allowed to carry on its affairs without this enormous drain. Pass this pork barrel bill, and you will have betrayed every citizen that has placed confidence in you, and you will have broken his very faith in the stability of his Government. When you do that you take away hope itself.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government has no right and should have no purpose, in seeking to carry on public works when it has no money to pay for them. Make possible the reduction of taxes, engender confidence in the stability of the Federal Government, and business will revive as by magic, and that is the only way that unemployment can be relieved throughout the length and breadth of the land. The mill will never grind with the water that has passed. Industry will never thrive upon the money that has been drained out of its resources in taxes never to return again. This proposed pork barrel bill calls for the expenditure of over three billions of dollars, and Mr. Speaker, some day that three billions of dollars will have to be paid, camouflage it as you will. And the farmer, the laboring man, the factory, the bank, and the store will have to pay.

Mr. Speaker, this session of Congress has accomplished its mission. We have passed the appropriation bills; we have balanced the Budget. It is time to pack up and go home

Mr. KARCH. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that a measure of this character designed to relieve the unemployment situation throughout the land, and to stimulate production, and to rekindle industrial activity, was not presented earlier in the session. This measure comes to us in these closing days of the session when the psychology of Congress is not well suited to consider and determine a measure of such momentous and far-reaching consequence.

A measure of this character really should be framed and developed by an economist. At least, we should have an expression of economists on whether or not this or any other proposed plan to revive industry and reemploy the idle millions is economically or scientifically sound and feasible. Under the very limited opportunity of the Members to examine the provisions of this bill, it is largely a matter of conjecture or, as some speakers have said, a gamble, as to whether or not the expenditure of this vast sum of money proposed to be appropriated in this bill will actually accomplish these purposes to any appreciable extent.

While I have always been committed to a program of public works and the expenditure of vast sums of money by the Government to rehabilitate industry and relieve unemployment, I have always had hesitancy to commit myself to any plan which did not in advance demonstrate accurately and definitely the number of persons who would become reemployed, and the period of time for which they would be employed.

More particularly I should desire to be convinced by some one who has the knowledge to determine, to what extent the use of machinery in the works that we contemplate under this bill can be dispensed with; and whether the use of these gigantic sums of money hereby devoted to this construction movement could be made, or are, under the terms of this bill, contingent upon a 6-hour day, 5-day week system.

I shall, of course, support this bill because it is the only measure that has been offered in this Congress of its kind and in good faith. I wish to predict that unless the industry of this country, either voluntarily or under compulsion, will adopt the "short day" and "short working week," even in times of highest prosperity, there will always be a large number of unemployed in this country, and forever a tendency to disarrange our economic standards, and pulling toward industrial depression, unemployment, panic, and everything which we are witnessing to-day.

THE WAR OF THE ROBOTS

The time has arrived, Mr. Speaker, in the affairs of this great Nation when we can no longer temporize with conditions, and, while shutting our eyes to the right policy to follow, continue to indulge in the incantations of political and financial voodooism. It must be apparent to every thinking man and woman that we can not tax this Nation and its people into prosperity, happiness, and contentment. It must be equally apparent to every thinking person that we can not inflate this Nation into prosperity by transferring the burden of financial mistakes, speculation, greed, and selfishness from the realm of high finance where those mistakes were made, to the realm of the needy masses. It must be apparent to every thinking person that we can not continue to give to them who have most of everything now by taking more from those who have too little of what they need. And, finally, it must be perfectly clear to every thinking person that we can not continue to penalize the poor by reducing their wages, their income, and thereby expect to make the masses more prosperous, more contented, more loyal to government.

For 30 years we have been following the fallacious policy of centralizing more and more the possession and control of industry, money, and power in the hands of the few, and more and more depriving the people at large of their control of Government. And now, much to our surprise, we find that, with the ownership and control of the wealth, the money, the power of this country concentrated in the hands of a dozen men, and the ownership confined to a very small percentage of our people, our Government is no longer a government of, for, and by the people, but has become a government of, for, and by the wealthy. Whether we like to face that fact or not, that seems to be the situation. And, with the situation as it is, we must now face squarely the question of whether we are going to submit to what has proved to be the unwise rule of the few to whom we have entrusted this ownership and power of control or whether we are going to force the American people to act for themselves without calm consideration and leadership. This is the question which to-day faces the wealthy few who hold and who control this Nation's wealth and resources.

It was natural in human affairs that there must come a time when such a policy as we have been following for the past 30 years in this country must result in a very few of our citizens assuming control of all the resources and power of this Government and its people. That time has arrived. Having arrived, the inevitable struggle must take place between the need and the good of the masses, on the one side, and the seeming greed and unwisdom of the classes on the other. It is within the power of this Congress to decide whether that struggle shall take place in a lawful and an orderly readjustment of power in this country, or whether we shall drift on soothing ourselves with platitudes, hoping for some miracle to intervene, until the people, driven by hunger, hardship, and a burning sense of injustice, shall spontaneously rise and act for themselves. I seriously doubt if there is a member of this body who, if he has pondered the tenor of the floods of letters which have been pouring into this Capitol from the people, has not asked himself, "How long will the people stand the way things are going?" And I seriously doubt if there has been a Member who has asked himself that question who has not found himself wondering how the people have stood conditions so long and so peaceably.

When, as is the case in this country to-day, a very small and very favored class of citizens finally have acquired what they seem to think is control of all the national resources, the vastly greater part of the wealth, and the whole credit structure, unless that small class of citizens is very benevolent and very wise, trouble is sure to result. While it is with deep regret that I say it, it would seem that the very small class of special-privilege citizens in this country have seemed to be neither benevolent nor wise. Instead of realizing that the money, the power, are given into their hands for wise and benevolent and unselfish trusteeship, they have seemed to regard their possession of this power as an instrument to be used for furthering their own personal aggrandizement, for oppression, for depriving their fellow men of the necessities of life, of the right to earn an honest living-and yet those few powerful citizens seem not to realize that such conditions must inevitably make for a social convulsion in the righting of wrong conditions. They seem to forget that there is always one last natural resource which can not be taken from the masses—and that is the right to demand and take the food, clothing, and shelter necessary.

If right gave wealth and power the privilege of life and death over men, then wealth might exercise that right. But right does not confer such might-and throughout all history those who were so mistaken as to attempt to exercise such prerogatives have met with disaster. Mr. Speaker, it may sound communistic or radical for me to make the assertion I am going to make, and if it does, make the most of it. I do not believe there is a Member of this august body of lawmakers who believes any individual or any small group of individuals-or any group of individuals at all-would have any moral or legal right to acquire possession of all the food, clothing, and housing of this great country and then, not needing that great hoard themselves, refuse, simply because they thought they had the power to do so, to permit anyone else to have any of that food, clothing, or shelter, thereby leaving the masses to perish, merely in order that the few might seem to indulge themselves in the exercise of a selfish and cruel power. On the same theory, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any small group of our citizens has the right to acquire possession of industry, of the wealth, the power of credit control, and then, sitting in the midst of that power, permit a third of our population to become destitute, needy, fearful, worried, discontented, because they are denied opportunity to labor for their food, their clothing, their shelter.

Let us for a moment consider if it is true that a few citizens seem to have acquired control of the financial and the productive resources of this country, and if it is true that those few citizens are failing to use that possession and power wisely.

Three holding companies control all of our electricity.

One corporation owns more than one-half of all our iron resources.

One corporation controls more than 90 per cent of the world's nickel resources.

Four concerns control the greater part of our copper supply.

Eight closely allied railroads own about 80 per cent of the Nation's coal supply.

Two corporations control over one-half of our steel.

Two concerns own and control more than half of our meat-packing industry.

One per cent-think of it-1 per cent of our banks control 99 per cent of our banking resources. That means our credit resources. And more than 95 per cent of our medium of exchange, our money, is bank credits. Therefore, 1 per cent of our banks control 99 per cent of 95 per cent of our entire supply of money-medium of exchange.

That power of control of the medium of exchange means the ability of 1 per cent of our banks to manipulate the purchasing power of the dollar upward or downward as much as 50 per cent in one year, if that 1 per cent of bankers choose to do so. That small group of financial masters can, whenever they desire, render your material possessions and mine worth one-half less or one-half more in any one year by their mere desire to do it.

Since I desire to direct my remarks to a specific condition in this Nation to-day, I shall not go into a mass of statistics which are utterly astounding in their conclusions, showing that about 12 men really appear to control this country through an overlordship that seems for the moment to transcend the very forces of the Government itself. But I would commend to the Members of this body a solemn and careful perusal of figures quoted in a speech on March 4 in the Senate by Senator HUEY LONG, of Louisiana. They will make you think.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this Nation are now engaged in a war more relentless than the great world madness which swept this globe from 1914 to 1918.

This war has been going on for more than 50 years, and for more than 10 years it has been inexpressibly bitter. Unless it is stopped, this conflict will result in the utter material ruin not alone of this Nation, but of the world.

It is a war, if you please, which already counts its victims in the millions. In the toll of useless misery and tears it has wrought in the lives of millions of despairing men, women, and helpless children, it has approached the wanton cruelty of the world conflict at arms.

It is a war none the less terrible because it is silent; no roar of guns; no waving of flags; no blare of bands; but more deadly will it be in its results to this Nation than the worst conflict in history unless it is checked. And it will be checked.

It is war none the less horrible because on one side, seemingly guided by senseless greed, is an army of machine menrobots we call them-spawned in the workshops and laboratories of enthusiastic scientists and inventors, loosed in battle by the czars of finance and the emperors of industry, and on the other side a routed, fleeing, discouraged, and sickened army of unemployed toilers.

In this army of robots, insensate, conscienceless, efficient, are to be found every sort of mechanical mercenary from the "machine with a brain," which calculates the rise and the fall of the tides a thousand years in the future, and the robot which stands guard at the reservoir of a great city, rings a telephone, speaks the gauge of the water, and shuts off or turns on the stream; to the typesetting machine, the telegraph-transmitting typewriter, the automatic tele-phone—thousands of metal warriors which have conquered their hundreds of thousands of helpless human workers, supplanting them in commerce and industry, and have sent these hopeless mortals forth jobless, to steal or to beg or to starve.

Picture, if you can, Mr. Speaker, the agony of human hearts when the husband and father who has spent his best years becoming an expert in his trade, trudges disconsolately into his home, sags in a chair, despair written on every lineament of his features.

Picture, if you can, Mr. Speaker, the cold horror which grips the heart of his helpmeet as he tells her, "Job gonemachines crowded out 500 of us at the factory. No place to find work, and me 44 years old!"

That wail of woe is ascending from the throats of tens of thousands of workers in this prosperous land of ours. That cold fear is gripping the hearts of tens of thousands of faithful wives in this land of plenty. And yet silently-almost were doing it. They are alive to suffering wherever they unnoticed—this relentless conquest of humans by robots goes on.

This is no overdrawn picture of this economic war which grips America in its strangling grasp, Mr. Speaker. This is no melodramatic fiction. It is a narrative of an appalling struggle between right and wrong. And right will win. Woven into this story are the tears, the heartaches, the hopelessness, and the fears of millions of American men and women and children who to-day face the future with naught but want in store.

The American workingman and the American working woman with their children are making their last desperate stand in this economic conflict as the man machines drive relentlessly forward, while a few wealthy individuals wallow in their gold and exult in their seeming power to a chorus of groans wrung from the hearts of America's unemployed. And the most tragic fact is this whole merciless

Mr. Speaker, this conflict, precipitated and kept in progress by greed, is that these very man machines would, if given the opportunity, be the very best friends and helpers of the workingmen and working women. Instead of driving the human worker from his job under the commands of greed and selfishness, these robots would, if directed by justice, be the aides and willing servants of the laboring men and women. They would add to the workers' hours of leisure-would these robots-if they were directed by justice instead of seemingly insatiable greed.

They would give the toilers greater opportunity for richer lives, more time for spiritual things, a more noble destinywould these robots-if human kindness, instead of human selfishness, were their motivating force. Invented and created to spend their tireless energy and their mechanical accuracy in the service of all the workers, these robots have been made the instruments of men who seem to lust incessantly for more money and more power. Blinded by greed, the czars of finance and the emperors of industry, with a stupidity incredible, in the last decade seem to have been completely oblivious to the perfectly apparent fact that while wage earners are dependent upon production volume and upon credit volume for employment, production agencies and credit agencies are no less dependent upon the wage earners-who compose the consuming power of this countryfor employment. Blinded by the glitter of gold and more gold, a few financiers and a few industrialists failed to see during that economically mad era of the 1920's that machines consume little except oil and repairs, while human workers require all the products of factory, field, and furnace.

They failed to see, did these financiers and these industrialists, that their profit-producing robots by replacing human workers were rapidly and surely killing the consuming power which makes production and credit operations profitable-until disaster overtook our whole economic structure. They failed to see, did these financiers and these industrialists, that if they did not spread the benefits of these labor-saving devices among the worker consumers in the form of shorter work days and work weeks and in the form of lower prices, which would encourage greater consumption, that these very robots employed to crush the worker would soon turn on the master and rend him, too. And that is exactly what the robot has done! No. Mr. Speaker, those financiers and those industrialists, blinded by an insatiable greed, must grab all of the profits to the exclusion of the worker and the consumer-until greed consumed itself and brought woe to the agencies which spawned it. And yet, Mr. Speaker, those men who seemed to do this evil thing are not wicked men. They were blind, it is true, to the awful effects of their efforts. They were blind, it is true, to the goal toward which they were headed. They seem still to be blind to the fearful aspects apparent to everybody else.

I know some of those men, Mr. Speaker. They are not men who would do willful murder. They are not men who would deliberately steal the bread of helpless men and women or the milk of prattling infants if they knew they see it. They give large sums to philanthropy. The great | difficulty is these men have not seen, and seemingly do not yet see, that they are doing these awful things unwittingly. And it is because I believe that, Mr. Speaker, that I am raising my voice to-day in these Chambers to cry a warning to these men, to try if possible to open their eyes to the fate they are preparing for themselves and their Government. How long is it going to take the financiers and the industrialists, statesmen and governments, in this boasted age of enlightenment to learn that finance and industry are simply the agencies through which factories, farms, railroads, and other productive means are provided the workers in which those workers may produce what they need or desire, and that profits, so called, are merely the wages of financiers and industrialists received by them for providing and managing these workshops in which the worker-consumers are enabled to produce what they require?

How long is it going to take these financiers and these industrialists to learn that as surely and as rapidly as they displace the human worker by the nonconsuming machine, the wages of finance and of industry will, through the destruction of the consuming market be cut and cut until the ruin and bankruptcy which have littered the last three years of our national life will be the inevitable result for all?

The 100 machines that now do the work previously done by 25,000 shoemakers were meant to decrease the working hours of the humans, giving them additional time for study, for recreation, for attaining the higher and finer things of life, instead of sending them jobless and hopeless into the morasses of human despair and starvation. What happened? The manufacturers of shoes cast thousands of human workers into the outer darkness of unemployment. The rest had to speed up—chained to the rhythm of tireless machineryand the employers pocketed in the form of swollen profits the major portion of the wages formerly earned by those displaced workers. That is the sordid side of this terrible warthe seemingly insatiable greed which appears to have prostituted this army of robots which were meant to be mankind's aides and servants into a scourge that has swept the ranks of the wage earners.

What a grim commentary on our thousands of years of boasted advancement in culture and civilization, Mr. Speaker, that in this land of plenty, this Nation, the most prosperous since that day when Christ Jesus enunciated his great golden rule of "Do ye unto others as ye would that others should do unto you," men, women, babes by the millions should seem to be in rags-because too much clothing has been produced; that men, women, little children by the millions should seem to be hungry to-day-because too much food is being produced; that men, women, and children should be crying in the highways and the byways of our Nation, Mr. Speaker, crying for bread, crying for a little of that brotherly love and justice the Savior came to preact, and to practice-crying for these things in this land where in every city, village, and hamlet rise the stately church spires-slender fingers pointing upward toward that ideal He preached of: "Love ye one another."

For grim, stark tragedy; for a heart-breaking picture of the specter of want in the midst of plenty; for sheer hopelessness; and for an exhibition of cold, unemotional, passionless, and cruel logic of greed, as opposed to warm, sympathetic love between fellow men, a reading of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on the Judiciary on the three unemployment bills proposed by Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, in the last Congress surpasses by far the most moving tale of human tragedy ever penned by the imaginative writers of human woe. Three causes are admitted to underlie the tide of seeming want and unemployment which is resurgent in the world, and particularly in America. They are: (1) Seasonal fluctuations of employment, (2) cyclical depressions, (3) technological unemployment.

Senator Wagner in his summing up before the House Judiciary Committee on his unemployment bills in the last Congress very ably defined the situation when he said:

The technological subject is, I think, the important branch in this unemployment study. Where are these men who are losing their places? Why are they losing their places? What can be done to readjust them and keep them more nearly up to the standard of living to which they have been accustomed? Why should these men, may I ask you, gentlemen, be sacrificed upon the altar of progress, because, after some years of pursuit of a particular trade they have overnight been deprived of their craft and thrown into the gutter, hungry, the family disrupted, and eventually child labor—whatever I say has been the result of whatever investigation has been made and shown to be the fact—family disrupted, character lowered, discontent with the Government. Bound to come! And this opposition to these bills to-day affected me to this extent: There was not a throbbing of the heart in one of them (the opponents) for the plight, the tragedy of the man without employment and with a family to support.

Seasonal unemployment, by the very nature of its occurrence, can be and is largely provided against by those engaged in it. They save when they earn and tide themselves over the lean months. But latterly the great depression brought about by causes which I shall analyze further on has so reduced the seasonal work that many of those engaged in seasonal occupations have joined the ranks of the unemployed. But, generally speaking, seasonal unemployment may be provided against by a system of public works initiated at those times when such unemployment is at high tide. Added to this, if industry will lend its intelligence to its own economic salvation and will have an altruistic regard for humans, regularization of employment can be brought about; the 12 months' work can be so arranged as to be spread over all the year instead of having some months crowded with production and others without any production at all. That would do much to smooth out the seasonal unemployment curve.

And, too, cyclical unemployment can be avoided when we will leave greed long enough to learn that the greatest fallacy of financial voodooism is that a period of depression and hardship must surely follow a period of prosperity and happiness. Why, Mr. Speaker, that theory is as foolish as it is to believe that because a man is healthy for a period he must become ill in order to become healthy again! A study of conditions surrounding the growth and development of the installment business-which was, in fact, merely the expression of a campaign on the part of capital and industry to "crowd their market" by persuading the masses to pawn their future under the installment plan-shows clearly that capital and industry have brought upon this country the depression from which we are suffering; an insatiable greed combined with a shortsightedness of which American financiers and industrialists with their boasted "Yankee shrewdness" should forever be ashamed, has brought us where we are to-day in this country.

The financiers and the industrialists must have known they were glutting their markets under the installment system. They must have known that they were pawning the people's future at ruinous financial rates and that pay day must sometime come. Yet the cry of the financiers, the slogan of the industrialists was. "Let's get ours now!" And get theirs they did-to the undoing of this whole country. There has been much learned chatter by economists and industrial engineers about the reasons for the cyclical depressions resulting in the present unemployment. Every reason from sun spots to the wrath of God has been advanced to account for the cycle of depression which is said to follow every cycle of prosperity. Yet any student of the question who is willing to be honest with himself and with the public must unhesitatingly admit that the reason for cyclical depressions is gluttonous greed for gold resulting in overproduction of credit and manufacturing in times of prosperity.

Men made mad by lust for social place and power to be gained, as they believe, through the control of enormous fortunes, rush headlong into production without heeding the natural economic limits of consumption—with the result that a few pile up tremendous gains, the country is flooded with more stocks, bonds, goods than it can pay for or consume; extravagance is encouraged and preached in every newspaper advertisement; on every bill board, by every means and method the people are urged, persuaded—literally driven into mortgaging their future to buy two radios, two telephones, two automobiles, pianos, phonographs, clothes, furniture, expensive homes—an infinite number of luxuries | one paragraph, just so the displacement of these millions by they can not afford to buy and many of which they do not need at all.

"You don't need money, your credit is good," has been the lure which drew hundreds of thousands of American families into the toils of debt-all in order that finance and industry, not content with moderate profits, not content to spread the process of profit taking out over the years, might fatten fast upon the foolishness of their fellow men in their greed to "get ours now!" And when the day of reckoning came, when a combination of seasonal, cyclical, technological, and educational unemployment overwhelmed us, the industrialist, himself with plenty of money, at the behest of his banker-who also had plenty of money-cut down his forces, turned his workers adrift, held his head in his hands and groaned about business being "rotten."

How, Mr. Speaker, is this war of the robots carried on? Into the railroad yards the automatic "car retarders' marched. Ahead of them fled thousands of railroad workers-out into the great morass of the unemployed. Into the glass factories marched the compressed-air machines for blowing bottles and fruit jars-and out into the night of desolation and hunger retreated thousands of defeated and discouraged hand blowers. Into the steel industry marched the ruthless robots-and out of the ranks of earners fled thousands of steel workers. Into the brickmaking industry clanked the automatic machines-and out into idleness went other thousands of men. Into the incandescent-bulb manufactories crept the robots-and out into hunger and want filed thousands of displaced humans. More than 20,000 musicians, skilled men and women, who have spent their lives and thousands of dollars each in mastering the most beautiful of the arts with which to soothe the emotions of mankind are to-day jobless because the talking-picture robot defeated them.

In the field of news transportation and telegraphic-message transmission the simplex and the multiplex robots met and defeated the trained human telegraphers-and sent them scurrying in rout into the great cold world of the unemployed. In the printing trades typesetting robots now threaten to make possible the setting of type in innumerable offices as much as 500 miles away by the manipulation of keys in a central plant. More than 8,000,000 more railroad cars were unloaded in 1929 than in 1922-with 250,000 fewer employees. The unloading robots drove out this army of men with no more thought for the future of these displaced humans than a chair gives to the one who sits in it to weep.

In the pig iron and steel industry 10 men now do with the aid of machinery as much work as 230 men used to do. On the trans-Atlantic liner an average of 120 stokers used to feed the boilers. Now three men do the same work by turning on valves. A robot even steers the craft. The New York Edison Co. installed an automatic mechanism that is operating an electric-distributing station which is supplying sufficient power to light 300,000 homes without one human being in the plant. One operator, 3 miles away, handles the switch which motivates the robot that drove hundreds of workers from their posts.

A mechanical device known as "the business brain" will do the work of nine-tenths of the office men employed in large institutions. Another machine will simultaneously do the work of a cash register, the bookkeeper, the calculator, and, in another part of the building, make a complete record of the sale-robots that have driven hundreds of men and women from honest employment into the streets. took 49 coal shovelers to feed one of the plants of the International Paper Co., three men now do the work by feeding crude oil to the boilers. In 1915 one man in a razor factory honed 500 blades a day. Now one man daily hones 38,000. With relentless strides machines drove human razor honers into the ranks of the unemployed.

The whole dreadful story of this robot army driving from bench and desk the human workers could be carried on until the very significance is lost in the recital. Just as, in peace times, a railroad wreck in which a score of lives are lost becomes first-page news, while during the Great War the annihilation of an entire regiment of men shrunk into this merciless army of machinemen loses its very significance by the vastness of its ruin.

It has been truly said that "a dollar has no conscience" and that gold is attracted only by accretion. So, while the struggle goes on between the human worker and the conscienceless robots, the masters of gold, with eye single to gain, demand of the industries they finance more and more efficiency, greater profits, and lower production costs; and so, motivated by these seeming selfish emotions, the great and increasing army of robots drives relentlessly onward. both the machines and, apparently, their masters insensible to the human agony entailed, the injury to society wrought, the danger to the Nation involved, the menace to the markets intermingled in this cruel warfare, so unequal in its combats between mortals and machines, men and women, and tireless

And now, Mr. Speaker, we must consider the whys and the wherefores of this situation, just what its economic results are bound to be, just what steps shall be taken to alleviate and to prevent a recurrence of this condition, just what functions the Government and finance and industry have to exercise in the process. If a government of the people, by the people, and for the people is anything more than an empty phrase, if it has any more living significance than the sounding of cymbals and the crashing of brass, then it must seem that the chief function of our Government-aye, the very purpose of its existence-is to-

* * Establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity—

In the words of the Constitution. The former Secretary of Labor, the Hon. James J. Davis, now a Member of the Senate, has well said that-

After all a nation should exist not to make a few men rich but to make life rich for all the people.

Can we, searching conditions to-day, say, then, that this Government is fulfilling its functions of spreading prosperity over the whole people and of making life richer for all? I think the answer to this question was well made in a speech made in the last Congress by the honorable Member from Ohio [ROBERT CROSSER]. He showed that the area of the United States to-day is more than four times greater than it was at the birth of the Nation; the wealth of our country is more than 650 times as much as when this Government was established. The wealth-producing power of man has increased as if by a miracle. Notwithstanding all of this, however, the great mass of the people are wearied and worried with the effort to make a comfortable living. In 1790, just after our Constitution was adopted, the average person's proportion or percentage of the total wealth of this country was 50 times greater than the average person's proportion or percentage of the wealth in the country to-day. It is a fact, also, that the average person to-day produces many times as much wealth as was produced by the average person at the time this Government was established.

How are we to answer those facts presented by my honorable colleague? Why is it, as he asked, that with the fabulous increase in the country's wealth, with the power of men to produce wealth so greatly increased, we see to-day millions of people in want and almost everyone haunted by a needless fear of want?

Mr. Speaker, if we are to accept these conditions as true. if we are to accept them as a reality which we can not change, then the contributing causes of our plight to-day, the underlying reasons for this relentless warfare of the robots against the human workers, the seasonal depressions, the cyclical depressions, the educational overproduction in trained workers-all of these constitute a ghastly maelstrom in which we are helpless; men, women, and children are caught up, whirled out of their places in commerce, industry, homes, and tossed broken, hungry, hopeless, and dangerous on the shores of want. We know such a fate is shadow. It is not, can not be true, for if it were, there would be no government, there would be no order, civilization would not have survived, humanity would have destroyed itself long ago. So there is a way out of this seeming vicious circle. There is an answer to these questions. There is relief for our people. There is enough richness of life and experience for all. There is enough in this world of everything needful to each one of us. It must be so, or else the whole of life becomes a phantasmagoria of hopeless fear and suffering, of chance, of evil, of might being right, of oppression, hopelessness, futility.

We know such phantasies of imaginative speculation are not true. There is justice for every man, woman, and child. There is right for every individual. There is a proper balance, a perfect level of prosperity, of economic welfare; and, Mr. Speaker, if we are to save civilization, if this Nation is to stand, this Congress has got to find that balance. We have got to find the means of restoring it. If we do not do this-and soon-this Congress will not mean anything; for there will be no country, no Government, nothing but chaos. That is unthinkable, preposterous, untrue. It is lamentable that we have so wasted the years in shutting our eyes to the signs of the times, and have stopped our ears to the warnings of those who were reading those signs aright, that now we have but a little time left in which to do this. Nearly a third of our wage earners are now unemployed. Nearly a third of our population is without any income. We can not starve that third to death. And if we did, or if we adopted the more merciful method of peaceful destruction by anæsthesia for them, what would it profit the rest?

As unemployment increases, purchasing power decreases. As purchasing power decreases, more workers must be displaced, until further unemployment adds further to the loss of purchasing power-and so on in that vicious downward spiral until ruin covers all and only a so-called fortunate few remain to revel in the golden stream flowing to them out of the misery of the masses. And then what? William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, voiced the answer better perhaps than he knew during the hearing on the Wagner bills, when he said frankly that "either revolution or the dole must result." We can not starve our unemployed population. Men can not be expected to starve and to see their loved ones starve supinely while some of their more favored fellows revel in more wealth than any human being possibly could need or could use. The final answer, then, is catastrophe to the wealthy ones. Mob rule, riots, bloodshed, looting, destruction. That shall not be. It is unnecessary. There is an answer, Mr. Speaker, and it is not mob rule, riots, bloodshed, looting, destruction. It is to spread the available work over the whole working population, in order that all may live instead of letting some suffer and die while others revel in luxury.

It may be, Mr. Speaker, that a few deluded ones may think for the moment that by continuing this condition of want and fear they can reduce this Congress and this people to a state of economic servitude. If so, they are foolish beyond words. Why, sir, if workers were but beasts. a few masters could not keep millions of them in continual hunger, want, fear, anger, resentment, and control them. Mere beasts would turn on such masters and rend them. Therefore, how can reasoning, thinking men and women be reduced to such a servitude by the power of money? Absurd, regardless of who thinks such a thing-and nobody believes it if he but stops to think. It is inconceivable that in this, the richest nation on the globe, this land of plenty, home of the free, cradle of higher education, we should have millions of our men and women and children workless, desolate, hungry, ragged, while we find within our ranks the most of the world's greatest billionaires, millionaires, the greatest aggregations of capital, billions of which have been sent abroad for investment. Ugly as it sounds, the answer to the problem, unless prompt and intelligent action is taken, is revolution or the dole.

We must arouse ourselves from this economic phantasmagoria and work in realities if we are to face the future with any assurance of safety and happiness for our people

Are we to stop the invention and use of labor-saving devices? It seems to me the best answer to that was voiced by Mr. Crosser when he said that—

To prevent the use of machinery would mean that it would be useless for men to try to discover and to try to understand the principles which govern the universe so they may be used to provide for the convenience and to increase the comfort of the human race; for if people were not allowed to use machines, there would be no reason for making them. If it were useless to make machines, then there would be no incentive, no desire, to discover, and to understand the principles governing the universe, for men will not strive for that which they know in advance will not be of benefit. Men patiently search for and try to understand principles because they desire to put them into practice for the benefits which would result. If, however, men were to stop trying to discover and trying to understand the principles governing the universe, they would stop thinking, and then they would begin to sink in the scale of intelligence toward the level of the brute, for to fail to know principles is to fail to know the truth—the true nature of existence.

The purpose of life, however, is to know and to realize the truth—that is, the true nature of the universe, including man.

What, then, Mr. Speaker, is the answer? If it is right that labor-saving devices should be discovered, invented, used, is it right that men and women should be driven from lucrative and honest employment by these robots and forced into beggary, theft, misery, and starvation? No; that is not right. Is it right that a few men having the capital, the facilities, shall use these machines, these robots, drive their fellow men from the condition of self-sustenance into the conditions of the present? No; that is not right. Then the right answer must be and is that the beneficent effects of laborsaving devices, of these robots, must be for the workers, for all the people, in the reduction of their hours of labor and the increase of their opportunities for contemplation, study, the spiritual things of life-and no power of human will can change that fact. Therefore, the final answer to our situation is the shorter work day, shorter work week, or both. To spread the available employment over the whole mass of workers. How is that to be done? It can not be done by legislation without a constitutional amendment. And such a constitutional amendment would not, could not, be accomplished in time now to save this Nation. What then?

The administration, the Government should have moved three years ago to call together the leaders of finance, industry, and labor, and to have worked out the plan whereby the available labor would have been spread over the whole of the workers. The delay to do this has been of incalculable cost to us in crime, tears, fears, and distress. If the administration will not do this—and it seems that it does not intend to do so-then this Congress must move to create a commission working under the Congress and under the Congress alone to call such a conference, work out the plans, put them into effect, and that at once, or else we will next session be considering ways and means of confiscating part of the wealth of the few to feed millions of hungry, dangerous, angry citizens who believe their Government owes them the right to make an honest living if it demands the right to force them to defend it in time of war. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that a congressional commission to bring about this general conference is the necessity. Somebody must move to end this deplorable and dangerous condition. Capital has not so moved. Industry has not so moved. The Government has not so moved. Congress must-and will.

CONSUL GENERAL HALSTEAD

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Consul General Halstead, of London, and to insert a short newspaper clipping.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following newspaper clipping on the subject of Consul General Halstead, of London:

An unfortunate effect of a wise law is that on September 30 next the official career of Albert Halstead will close with his retirement from the post of United States consul general in London.

The law says that having reached his sixty-fifth birthday, he becomes what the customs people call an artistic antiquity.

Though Consul General Albert Halstead may be approaching the age when the law says his usefulness is at an end, those of us who have seen him in action recently are reminded of John Paul Jones's defiant "I haven't begun to fight."

The old vigor he showed when he represented the old Brooklyn Standard Union in Washington in 1892–1896 and 1900–1906 is still there. Incidentally, he was editor of the Springfield Union during the three and a half years' absence from Washington—and before he was 30 at that.

NAMED BY ROOSEVELT

General Halstead gave up newspaper work in 1906 when the late President Roosevelt sent him to Birmingham as United States consul and as successor to his brother, who held that post for over eight years. He stayed in Birmingham until 1915. Then, and this is characteristic of Halstead, he resigned because the British Government insisted on assessing an income tax.

He refused, as some one correctly put it, "to pay a tax to the British Government for the privilege of representing his country in England."

in England.'

SENT TO VIENNA

But before the resignation could reach Washington, the late President Wilson had nominated him as consul general in Vienna and the State Department urged him to withdraw the resignation. In Vienna, where he stayed until the United States declared war on Austria, he had in addition to his regular duties, which were increased tenfold by the war, the responsibility of caring for hundreds of British subjects interned in Austria.

After leaving Vienna his services were used in Washington for nearly a year, where he helped make regulations to keep out enemy aliens, which later developed into the immigration quota act.

EFFECTIVE WAR ON SPIES

Then he went as consul general to Stockholm. That city was jumping-off place for spies and enemy guests. His job was to stop them. General Halstead did.

After the armistice he went to Vienna as commissioner for the peace conference.

His work there was of such a highly delicate and confidential nature that the whole story can never be written. But he is remembered in Austria as a representative of an enemy country, who made it his business to help save the people from starvation; who did his best, and with no little success, to prevent the taking away of Austrian territory inhabited by Austrians.

General Halstead's advice was instrumental in keeping Austria from going bolshevik. Those who remember the state of mind and nerves of Europe in the post-war period will appreciate what a job he had.

After Vienna came eight years in Montreal. Probably that assignment was intended to give him a period of well-earned rest after the strain of war and post-war service.

WON OUT IN COURT

But while he was there the policy of restricting immigration by quotas was started, and Montreal became the center of every conceivable form of attack on those restrictions. General Halstead bore the brunt of that and enforced the law without fear or favor. It was in that period that he was three times sued in the State and Federal courts by groups trying to break down the immigration laws. The courts sustained him on every point, and his friend from boyhood, Chief Justice Taft, handed down an opinion of the Supreme Court which not only upheld his action, but of the Supreme Court which not only upheld his action, but established a new principle in law.

After Montreal came London, the premier post in the Consular

HOPE FOR WRITINGS

His departure from London will be a loss to the Government service, but we hope a gain to newspaper readers. For with retirement will come an end of the official ban on public utterance.

And when that dam breaks, maybe the thoughts and views on public questions, stored up for 26 years, will pour forth through the columns of the daily press.

Some more Halstead despatches and editorials, enriched by the years of service in important posts, would not be a bad thing.

Legions of friends of Consul General Albert Halstead in Brooklyn, all over the country and abroad, hope this thought will be realized.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram from the Governor of the State of California and resolutions adopted by the Associated Charities of the State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the gentleman's own remarks or the telegram from the Governor of the State of California, but I do object to all these

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Hon. James M. Curley, mayor of Boston, at the mayors' conference held in the Speaker's office this morning.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did not the Speaker put that in the RECORD to-day?

The SPEAKER. This is a statement made by Mayor Curley at the conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether any other distinguished mayors made speeches at this conference?

Mr. RAINEY. They did. The mayor of Detroit made a splendid speech, but, unfortunately, I do not have a copy

Mr. ESTEP. Was this speech of the mayor of Boston on the subject covered by the bill to-day?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. ESTEP. I object.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who objected to my request now withdraws it, so far as the telegram from the Governor of California is concerned, and I renew my request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including the telegram of the Governor of the State of California.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if they are not going to let a short statement from the mayor of Boston go into the RECORD, why should we let go in the RECORD a telegram from the Governor of California?

Mr. O'CONNOR. And the mayor is a former Member of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. This was a short talk by this prominent mayor who used to be a Member of the House, made in the Speaker's office on an important subject—the present situation. Why should not that go into the RECORD?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is not important enough to go in the RECORD, I shall object to all the other similar requests. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, in reply to the question of whether the speech made by the mayor of Boston was on this bill, I said yes. It was not. The bill was not mentioned. The mayor simply discussed the problem of unemployment in the cities as it is to-day, and I therefore renew my request.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that statement indicate that the city of Boston is bankrupt and expects to feed its hungry by turning additional millions from the Boston taxpayers into other parts of the country?

Mr. RAINEY. It states the very opposite. It states that Boston does not need one cent and is not asking for anything and that Boston is getting along all right.

Mr. ESTEP. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the request on the statement it covered the matter of this bill. Inasmuch as that is not the fact, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following speech of Hon. James M. Curley, mayor of Boston, at the mayors' conference held in the Speaker's office this morning:

A conference of mayors of American cities was held at Detroit on June 1 for the consideration of a program for immediate relief for the cities and towns of the United States. The conference was presided over by Mayor Frank Murphy, of Detroit, Mich., and a program to be presented to President Herbert Hoover and the Congress of the United States was agreed upon.

Briefly, this program favored Federal construction in the sum of $500,000,000 and an additional expenditure in the sum of $500,000,000 for the refunding of maturing obligations of cities, counties, and towns, with a further proviso for direct aid to cities and towns and counties in the sum of $300,000,000.

It was the consensus of opinion of those in attendance that all three measures of relief were necessary to meet the extraordinary conditions resulting from industrial depression, now entering the fourth year. In the opinion of all present the lapse of time between the approval of a construction program and actual work would be such as to make necessary the supplemental measures of relief, provided starvation is to be averted in the Nation.

It was estimated that the number of unemployed at the present time in the United States is in the vicinity of 10,000,000 adult male workers, and that the number is increasing rather than diminishing, due to the long-continued period of unemployment, the closing of savings banks in which the money of the workers had been deposited, and the failure of either the Federal Government or the States to embark upon a construction program render the or the States to embark upon a construction program render the prospects for the winter of 1932-33 exceedingly ominous.

Notwithstanding the funds that have been made available to banking institutions, many cities and towns in the United States have either been required to pay an extremely high rate of interest for money or have been unable to finance their maturing obligations at any interest rate.

tions at any interest rate.

It is common knowledge that social agencies are either extremely low in funds or without funds, and as a consequence the burden imposed upon cities and towns is far in excess of their ability to meet the same. Economies have been inaugurated by a majority of the counties, cities, and towns to such an extent as to result in the abandonment in many cities of important and essential municipal activities.

Fear of the loss of employment by those fortunate enough to be at work has resulted in a system of hoarding or the purchasing of only the barest of necessities, with the result that general or only the barest of necessities, with the result that general stagnation is in evidence everywhere.

In the opinion of the conference of mayors, courageous and constructive action upon a major program by the Federal Government to furnish the necessary impetus for the restoration of industrial activity should prove the important initial step for recovery. Unless immediate aid is provided, there is every indication of a complete collected and in the result in the conference of a complete collected and in the conference of a complete collected and in the conference of the collected and the conference of the conference recovery. Unless immediate aid is provided, there is every indication of a complete collapse.

In a major number of the American municipalities there has been an abandonment of even the meager welfare programs that up to the present have safeguarded the American people from actual starvation. The list of homes acquired by municipalities and by banking institutions due to failure to pay taxes or interest overdue upon mortgages is appalling. That there is every indication that unless relief is immediate thousands of farm and home owners in America will not only suffer the loss of property created by a lifetime of toil but will become objects of charity with no means of securing relief.

Under the circumstances, we believe we are justified in submitting our case, firm in the belief that the relief requested will be furnished.

PURCHASE OF LAND IN NEW YORK CITY FOR POST OFFICE AND GOVERNMENTAL PURPOSES

Mr. O'CONNOR presented the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 257

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12360, a bill "To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract to purchase the parcel of land and the building known as the Grand Central Station Post Office and Office Building, No. 452 Lexington Avenue, in the city, county, and State of New York, for post office and other governmental purposes, and to pay the purchase price therefor on or prior to June 30, 1937."

That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF AMERICAN LEGION AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute, explanatory of a unanimous-consent request that I want to submit following my statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to submit a unanimous-consent request to pass the bill (S. 3765) which would authorize the Secretary of War to lend certain equipment to the American Legion for its annual convention at Portland, Oreg., represented by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN], which is in conformity with the invariable practice for the last 12 years.

A similar bill has been favorably reported by the House committee, and, Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

8 3765

An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Fourteenth National Convention of the American Legion at Portland, Oreg., during the month of September, 1932

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to lend at his discretion, to the Oregon national convention commission of the American Legion, for use at the Fourteenth National Convention of the American Legion to be held at Portland, Oreg., in the month of September, 1932, 20,000 cots, 40,000 blankets, 40,000 bed sheets, 20,000 pillows, 20,000 pillowcases, and 20,000 mattresses or bed sacks: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of the said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the Oregon national convention commission of the American Legion, through the executive vice president of the Oregon national convention commission of the American Legion, Ben F. Dorris: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said property, shall take from the said Oregon national convention commission of the American Legion a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman include a provision directing the Secretary of War to make available some tents of the War Department equipment for the veterans of the World War who are sleeping in the city of Washington out in the open?

Mr. McSWAIN. It is regrettable that that can not be inserted. This is a Senate bill and reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman is chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, I suggest that it would be well to take some war equipment and furnish these veterans who went through hell, and are sleeping now in the city of Washington out in the open. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Douglas of Arizona, for three days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. Bacon, for two days, on account of illness in the

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein two addresses, one by Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, and Mr. W. Jett Lauck, consulting economist, delivered at a meeting of Members of the House on May 26, 1932.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to the request as far as including the addresses are concerned.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what the program is to-morrow?

Mr. RAINEY. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday, and the Committee on Labor has the call. When the Labor Committee gets through, and it probably will not occupy the whole day, the rest of the day will be occupied with speeches, if anybody wants to make a speech for the good of the order. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. What will be the program on Thursday?

Mr. RAINEY. The second deficiency bill will be taken up; and if that does not occupy all the day, and probably it will not, we expect to use the remainder of the time on District business.

Mr. SNELL. When in the program is it probable that the home loan bank bill will be taken up?

Mr. RAINEY. The program does not provide for that yet. The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that there are five or six different rules reported from the Rules Committee for the consideration of various bills. The Chair understands that the program on Thursday will be for the Appropriations Committee to finish the deficiency bill and then take up bills under rules from the Rules Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. It is rumored that as soon as Congress adjourns the President is going to withdraw all United States employment officers. Has the gentleman from New York heard anything of that?

Mr. SNELL. I have not.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought the gentleman was so near the President that he might know about it.

Mr. SNELL. When I want to give any information about the President I will give it.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1932

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., LL. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, who art the unfailing Guardian of the smoking flax, the absolute Guarantor of every holy aspiration; divert our gaze, we humbly beseech Thee, from the shuddering depths that yawn beneath the surface of conventional well-doing, and accustom us in this sacred hour to the holy service of the inner temple, in the midst of which are fountains of living water for our cleansing, that we may learn to live above all time and

Give to us the wisdom of directness, the simplicity of loving intention manifest in those whose soul is fixed on Thee, that we may meet every righteous demand with an unalterable purpose, pledging ourselves in fidelity and courage to do and dare, to suffer and endure all that is involved in the challenge of this fateful hour to render perfect service unto Thee and our beloved land.

> "Rise up, O men of God; Have done with lesser things. Give heart and mind and soul and strength, To serve the King of Kings."

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of yesterday, when, on request of Mr. McNary and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent as a member of the Geneva conference and that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] is necessarily absent from the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RALPH E. WILLIAMSON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2458) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan bond issue for public works; | the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917, passed by the Senate on June 1, 1932.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill heretofore passed this body and was sent to the House of Representatives. On the same day that the Senate passed the bill the House passed an identical bill. When the House bill came to the Senate I asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, which was granted, and the bill passed. Then I asked that this bill be recalled from the House. The bill has now been recalled, and in order to dispose of the matter I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill passed this body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be entered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Woodhaven and vicinity, Long Island, N. Y., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Thirteenth Annual Convention of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of New York State, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Loggia S. Nicola di Bari, No. 314, Order of the Sons of Italy, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, so as to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by White Plains Post, No. 135, American Legion, of White Plains, N. Y. favoring the resubmission of the prohibition amendment of the Constitution to the several States of the Union, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Niagara Falls Central Labor Union, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., indorsing Senate bill 3768, known as the Dill bill, proposing to permit checking accounts in postal savings banks for small depositors, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for retrenchment in governmental expenditures and increased efficiency through the elimination of unnecessary activities of the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the council of administration of the Department of the District of Columbia, United Spanish War Veterans, protesting against inclusion in the pending legislative appropriation bill of provisions affecting the rights of veterans, with the exception of the provision creating a joint congressional committee to formulate a veterans' policy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Massena (N. Y.) Republican Club, favoring retrenchment in governmental expenditures as proposed by the President of the United States, and also the prompt balancing of the Budget, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce, of Staten Island, and the Stony Brook Business and Improvement Association, of Stony Brook, Long Island, both in the State of New York, favoring retrenchment in governmental expenditures as proposed by the President of the United States, and protesting against the passage of legislation increasing the financial obligations of the Government at this time, and also legislation that might impair the stability of the currency, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of organizations of New York City and vicinity, New York, praying for inclusion in the Army appropriation bill of the necessary funds for the proper housing and equipping of the Army, so that full training may be continued for the National Guard, and also to "carry out in full the recommendations laid down by the Morrow Board already approved by Congress, in the 5-year plan for military aviation," which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from Frederic S. Snyder, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and sundry other citizens, being presidents and chairmen of business, banking, educational, and other institutions of Boston and vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the prompt balancing of the Budget, enlargement of the capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the passage of legislation creating a capital fund which may be used to protect conservative mortgages upon homes, and the direction of "financial legislation and policies with all possible vigor toward facilitating release of present capital, the thawing of frozen credits, the opening of present reservoirs of credit, to the end that the courage and initiative of our people may be released for constructive action." which was ordered to lie on the table.

GRASSHOPPER SITUATION IN THE NORTHWEST

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a wire from the chairman of the Minneapolis Industrial Committee with reference to the grasshopper situation in Minnesota.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS. MINN.

Senator Thomas D. Schall,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The grasshopper situation in the Northwest is serious. Immediate congressional action in passing agricultural appropriation bill carrying appropriation for poison bait to combat grasshopper plague is necessary. This matter is of such importance to the Northwest as to warrant your best efforts toward immediate passage of bill

A. R. Rogers, Chairman Minneapolis Industrial Committee.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a letter from George P. Curley, Esq., of Pipestone, Minn.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PIPESTONE, MINN., June 4, 1932.

Hon. THOMAS SCHALL,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHALL: As you may recall from my letters on other occasions, I take a good deal of interest in the question MY DEAR SENATOR SCHALL: As you may recall from my letters on other occasions, I take a good deal of interest in the question of national defense. For many years I served on the State Department committee of the American Legion, dealing with national defense, most of the time as chairman. I still hold a commission as lieutenant colonel in the infantry section of the Officers' Reserve Corps. I followed with much interest the situation that developed in the House regarding the Army appropriation bill. While I, as a taxpayer, appreciate fully the need for retrenchment along all lines, it is my firm conviction that so far as the Army is concerned, we have reached the minimum consistent with reasonable safety. I believe that the retirement of so large a group of the Regular Army officers as 2,000 is unwise, and the loss to the national defense altogether too great for the relatively small saving. I feel that a reduction of a much smaller number might well get rid of some dead timber, but that the number proposed in the House bill is altogether too large. To my mind, however, the proposals in the bill brought in by Mr. Collins's subcommittee were far more dangerous which proposed to do away with active duty training for Reserve officers, summer camps for for Reserve Officers' Training Corps students and the Citizens' Military Training camps. While the proposal dealt with one year only, the loss of this year would be a tremendous backset to the success of the development of our civilian component of the Army and might well be the forerunner to the permanent destruction of the Reserves. I hope that you may be able to support appropriations for the three items last mentioned as they passed the House, without further reduction and that the Senate may cut down the number of forced retirements in the Regular Army.

With best personal regards, I am, yours very truly,

George P. Curley.

REDUCTION IN COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have published in the Record a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1932.

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
DEAR SIR: Notwithstanding the appeals which labor has made to preserve wage and living standards established through years of effort for Government employees, Congress now seems determined to reduce the income of Federal employees either through a horizontal reduction in wages or through the substitution of a furlough plan which includes a provision for the 5-day work week.

Labor firmly believes that the policy being pursued by Congress is economically unsound, because through a reduction in the earning power of thousands of Government employees the market for manufactured goods will be further reduced and most seriously curtailed. All of this, in my judgment, will tend to delay a return of normal conditions. I know there are millions of people who share this opinion with the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor.

Notwithstanding this fact, labor realizes that Congress is determined to pass an economy measure. Perhaps even at this late hour it would not be amiss if I would venture an opinion as to what, in my judgment, would be the lesser of the two evils. For this reason I am taking the liberty of sending you this communication.

It is my opinion that the 5-day work week furlough plan for Government employees, surrounded with such safeguards as labor's friends in Congress might be able to impose, would be more preferable and advantageous to Federal employees and to labor generally than a horizontal reduction in salaries and wages. I therefore suggest that Congress adopt the 5-day week furlough plan for Government employees as herein referred to as a substitute for the proposal that the wages and salaries of Government employees be reduced 10 per cent, as provided for by the pending economy bill. economy bill.

I sincerely hope the friends of labor in the Congress of the United States will share with me this expressed opinion and will find it possible to follow the suggestions which I have herein made.

With my highest personal regards, I beg to remain,
Sincerely yours,

WM. G

WM. GREEN, President American Federation of Labor.

REDUCTION IN COMPENSATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I also ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a wire to the secretary of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, and likewise a communication from the president of the Railway Mail Association, with attached statements.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 6, 1932.

THOMAS FLAHERTY.

THOMAS FLAHERTY,

Secretary National Federation of

Post Office Clerks, Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred substitute postal workers of Minneapolis want clause inserted in economy bill exempting substitute workers from all wage cutting provisions, including night differential. Working as underpaid substitutes for several years, now in dire distress due to falling off of mail. Further cuts would be a calamity.

W. O. PEIRCE.

The attached statements illustrate the effect of the provisions of the economy bill, now before the Senate, upon railway postal clerks. One statement illustrates the effect of the 10 per cent pay cut, plus the other deductions, and the other statement illustrates the effect of the proposed furlough system, plus other deductions.

From the viewpoint of the railway postal clerk, the furlough system is preferable, provided the annual vacation be not surrendered. It might be held that the annual vacation would not be rendered. It might be held that the annual vacation would not be a cash loss. If so, the net cash loss under the furlough system, plus other deductions would be less than under the 10 per cent deduction. We believe that the furlough proposition is preferable. However, we see no justification in penalizing railway postal clerks not only by reductions in salary, but by loss of night-differential pay, and the 33½ per cent deduction in traveling expenses. Even with full allowance under basic law for traveling expenses, the railway postal clerk only receives $3 per day, after the expiration of the first 10 hours that he is on duty. For the first 10 hours he does not receive any expense allowance. The pending bill proposes to reduce that allowance 33½ per cent, or to $2 per day, so that this employee would only have $2 allowed for expenses for the first 34 hours that he was away from his initial terminal. initial terminal.

The night differential is paid at the rate of 10 per cent of that of those working daytime, and that is certainly not excessive or unreasonable. The employee working nights should receive that little consideration.

We trust that you will consider these matters in connection with this pending bill.

Respectfully,

W. M. COLLINS,
President Railway Mail Association.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, an interesting and informatory letter was recently introduced in the RECORD from W. Cameron Forbes, former ambassador to Japan, Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and a student of the island peoples and their affairs.

Some erroneous constructions have been placed upon Mr. Forbes's letter. These are dispelled and his position made quite clear in a speech he delivered on the 2d of June before the Chamber of Commerce of New York.

As any information on this subject is valuable as Congress approaches a decision, I ask permission to insert the

It is my firm beltef, in which I have not wavered at all, that a political separation of the Philippine Islands from the United States, now or in the near future, will be disadvantageous to the United States, disastrous to the Philippine Islands, and helpful to nobody. We have developed a trade there the last 30 years which in good years reaches as high as $200,000,000 a year. The free access to the markets of the United States is of inestimable value to the Philippine Islands and puts the merchants and producers there in position to make reciprocal purchases in the United States which are of great value to our merchants here, and I should be sorry to see any action by Congress which would result in cutting off this important and growing business, fostered as it has been directly by our own governmental policies.

On the other hand, the act of Congress creating the structure of the present government in the Philippines declares in its preamble the intention of the United States to give the Filipinos independence when a stable government shall have been established. This has also been stated as the policy of the United States by successive Presidents, beginning with President Roosevelt, in such an authoritative way that the Filipinos look upon it as a direct promise to them. The platforms of both of their political parties favor independence.

it as a direct promise to them. The platforms of both of their political parties favor independence.

In my book telling the story of the American occupation of the islands, published about four years ago, I suggested as an alternative the creation of a supervised Philippine commonwealth, the supervision being exercised by a representative of the President on the ground with authority to intervene.

The House of Representatives in Washington, by an impressive majority, recently passed a bill creating just such a supervised commonwealth, but providing that the islands complete their political separation from the United States at the end of eight years. The Senate committee have approved a bill in which the period The Senate committee have approved a bill in which the period of this supervised commonwealth is set at 15 years, at the end of which time there will be held a plebiscite in the Philippine Islands to determine whether at that time they want complete separation or a continuation of their commonwealth status. Both these bills place limitations on the amount of sugar, cordage, coconut oil, and labor which can be imported into the United States, thus eliminating in large measure the hostility to the continuance of this relationship on the part of the elements to which these importations are competitive. Toward the end of this period of importations are competitive. Toward the end of this period of 15 years there is to be levied on all articles exported to the United States from the Philippine Islands an export tax, beginning at 5 per cent of that which other countries pay as customs at our ports and increasing progressively to 25 per cent of the amount other countries pay, which will give them a practical demonstration of how the imposition of a tariff would affect their business. I have always held, and I hold now, that it is contrary to the spirit of American institutions to hold an alien people permanently under our control against their will; that any arrangement not agreed to by both peoples must necessarily be a temporary one and a temporary arrangement is not satisfactory to capital. So that during this period, until the Philippine Islands and the United States get on a permanent relationship, agreed to by both peoples, there is sure to be a continuing hesitancy on the part of capital to risk moving into the islands and that has been in fact just what has occurred. We have now been in the Philippine of capital to risk moying into the islands and that has been in fact just what has occurred. We have now been in the Philippine Islands for 34 years. Under the terms of the Senate bill the sovereignty of the United States will continue over the islands for 15 years more, plus the time necessary to hold a constitutional convention to formulate their new commonwealth and vote on its acceptance, which will take a year or more, and also plus the time necessary to hold the plebescite at the end of the period. This will mean, if the Hawes-Cutting bill is passed, that the United States will have held the direct sovereignty over the Philippine Islands for something over 50 years before what I call the period of temporary status shall have passed. Although I have never previously said it, I am ready to say now that I think 50 years is long enough for the test period and that the Filipinos, in demanding a determination of their status, could very properly ask us to promise that a decision would be reached at the expiration of that time. that time.

I have recommended certain amendments to this Senate bill, strengthening the clauses that deal with the power of intervention of the United States in the interim, and I have said and I repeat that while I believe that the best interests of the Philippine Islands and the United States will be best served by a continuance of the present relationship, that if a change is to be made I can see advantages to accrue from the proposed Senate bill with the amendments I have suggested.

The advantages I speak of are as follows: First, it puts the United States in the position of having carried out its promise of giving the Filipinos a chance to vote on the matter of their political status with a reasonable time to prepare for it; second, it meets the objection of those who fear their industries will suffer by reason of the competition of low-priced oriental labor by placing a limitation on the amount of the more important competitive goods which can be brought in; third, it eliminates the fear held by labor organizations of a vast influex of orientals such as created great racial disturbances formerly and resulted in legislative acts speech of ex-Ambassador Forbes that it may be made part of the Record and lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

We have developed a trade there the last 30 years which in good years reaches as high as $200,000,000 a year. The free access to the markets of the United States is of inestimable rollies.

EXCLUDING Chinese and Japanese. This is done by the establishment of a quota, not effective in Hawaii, where laborers are needed. Fourth, it gives the Filipinos further opportunity to demonstrate their capacity in government, the United States retaining meanwhile a definite power of intervention, which, however, would undoubtedly only be used if needed. Fifth, it provides for the Philippines adequate protection by United States forces during their continuance as a commonwealth and makes provision for military and naval bases of the United States in the Orient.

This gives the Filipinos further opportunity to demonstrate their capacity in government, the United States retaining meanwhile a definite power of intervention, which, however, would undoubtedly only be used if needed. Fifth, it provides for the Philippines adequate protection by United States forces during their continuance as a commonwealth and makes provision for military and naval bases of the United States in the Orient.

This gives the Filipinos greater control of their domestic affairs and fulfills what they hold to be a promise the United States has made to them, it silences the main source of opposition to the present status on the part of industries and

American administration

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, my attention has lately been called to an authoritative article which the Harvard Business Review published some time ago on what might be called the profit and loss of our ownership and government of the Philippine Islands. The subject and the substance of the article are manifest in its title, which is, "A balance sheet of the Philippines." The writer is Rufus S. Tucker, formerly on the staff of the United States Department of Commerce.

Mr. Tucker demonstrates rather conclusively, I think, that the islands have cost us more than they have repaid us. Their annual cost to American taxpayers he estimates at not less than $26,000,000, not including interest on the $20,000,000 we paid Spain for them and on the vast sum expended in their conquest. Mr. Tucker rejects the view that the Philippines are necessary or advantageous to us as a "spearhead" of our commerce in the Far East. On that point he says:

"It was hoped when the United States first took the Philippines that they would be a valuable outpost for our trade with China and other far eastern countries. This hope," he declares, "has not materialized."

Mr. Tucker is equally outspoken about the military usefulness of the islands. In fact, he quotes with approval the statement made by Secretary of War Weeks in testimony he gave before the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs on March 1, 1924. Mr. Weeks, as you recall, declared:

I want to make this quite clear * * * that if I were going to view this question entirely from military or other benefits to the United States I would say, "Let the Philippines go."

By way of conclusion Mr. Tucker says:

The value of American occupation to the Filipinos is very great, very likely greater than the total cost to the American taxpayers, except the extra naval expenditure they occasion; but it is a question whether Americans desire to be taxed to benefit Filipinos and whether it is socially desirable or morally right that they should be.

And the final sentence of Mr. Tucker's article is this:

It seems obvious that so far as material advantages are concerned, not only is the present arrangement much more beneficial to the Philippines than to the United States, but also the cost to the United States far exceeds the commercial benefit derived or likely ever to be derived.

Because of its importance to a correct understanding of the Philippine problem and the bills now before the Senate, I ask that the article by Mr. Tucker be placed in the body of the RECORD and lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to lie upon the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BALANCE SHEET OF THE PHILIPPINES

By Rufus S. Tucker

As far as the writer is aware, no study of this question has ever been made from an economic point of view or with any attempt to check theories by statistics. Certain persons interested in their own welfare have emphasized some aspects of the problem, persons of an altrustic bent have emphasized others, and the ma-jority of comments made in the press or on the floors of Congress have been based on crude mercantilistic and imperialistic failacies.

In this study of the economic benefits, real or alleged, from the on this study of the economic benefits, real or alleged, from the possession of the Philippines have been set off against the costs direct and indirect, and the conclusion is reached that the costs far outweigh either present or prospective benefits. The economic benefits fall into four classes: (1) A market for exports; (2) a source of materials; (3) a center of distribution for trade with Asia; (4) a field for investment. The employment of American citizens in the islands involves an income of negligible proportions, and this is more than offset by the payment by United States of the salaries of 6,000 Philippine Scouts and of the expenses of Filipino cadets at West Point and Annapolis. The strategic value of the Philippines to the United States from the military point of view is a question which can not be ignored in any discussion of the relations between the Philippines and the United States.

MARKET FOR EXPORTS

Exports of merchandise from the United States to the Philippines in 1927 amounted to $69,522,000, including $128,000 of foreign goods reexported, on which American merchants made a middleman's profit. The value of goods carried in American vessels was $45,353,000, on which American shipowners earned the freights, which probably amounted to about 7 per cent of the value of the cargoes.

The net gain on these transactions is harder to state. How much should be deducted from the invoiced values on account of the cost of materials and labor? Going back a step, how much profit did the producers of the raw materials make, and how much wages did their laborers earn? Even more important, how much profit and wages would these manufacturers, laborers, and producers of raw materials have made if they had been compelled to find a market for their goods and services elsewhere than in the Philippines? The only difference, if any, between the profits actually made and the profits that might have been made elsewhere can properly be credited to the trade with the Philippines. Doubtless in some cases this difference was great, in others negligible. If the trade with the Philippines were wiped off the map to-morrow there would be only a slight readjustment of industry in the United States. A few concerns specializing in the Philippine trade might have to go out of business, but it is very likely that the persons involved might turn to other branches of industry, producing goods or services for domestic consumption or for sale to other countries, and make just as good profits and wages as they had been making when producing goods for the Philippines.

The theory of international trade now universally accepted by economists teaches that if other nations captured our trade with the Philippines our exports to other nations would increase or our imports from the Philippines and the rest of the world would decrease (using the terms "exports" and "imports" to include invisible items, such as services and investments as well as merchandise) or both these results would ensue, so that a balance would inevitably result. There would be an increased export of American goods to other countries than the Philippines and an unusual domestic production of some goods now imported. If, however, our trade with the Philippines disappeared not because of foreign competition but because of their inability to purchase, there would be no compensating increase in the rest of our trade. In view of the fact that our exports to the Philippines were in 1927 only 1.43 per cent of our total exports and that our total exports are usually reckoned to be less than one-eighth of our total production, it is obvious that the decrease in the Nation's profits and wages that might result from losing all of the trade of the Philippines would be infinitesimal, although some concerns now engaged in that trade would suffer serious inconvenience, and the slight loss to the Nation might be more than made up by corresponding gains.

Moreover, there is very little likelihood of our losing all of our market in the Philippines, even if there were a change of sovereignty, unless there should be a war between the Philippines and the United States or such unfriendly relations that the Filipinos would establish discriminating tariffs or refuse for patriotic reasons to buy our goods; and experience has shown that tariffs and patriotic boycotts are not as a rule effective for long against the appeal of superior goods at attractive prices. The justification for this statement is apparent to anyone who will study carefully the figures of our trade with foreign countries and with the Philippines. These statistics show that out of 109 foreign countries and colonies separately reported in our annual reports of foreign commerce in 1927, 15 foreign countries, and also Puerto Rico and Hawaii, each bought more goods from us than the Philippines did, and 35 foreign countries and every one of our own other overseas possessions bought more in proportion to their population. In the case of nine foreign countries and four United States colonies their imports from the United States formed a larger proportion of their total imports than was the case with the Philippines in the latest year for which comparative figures are available. Limiting the comparison to tropical and far eastern countries, we find that out of 63 such, 7 bought more United States goods than the Philippines and 20 bought more in proportion to their population, while in 8 of them the proportion of their total imports from the United States was greater than the Philippines. Moreover, a comparison of the 5-year period 1910–1914 and the 5-year period 1923–1927 shows that our exports to the Philippines have increased only 168 per cent in value, while our exports to the rest of Asia increased 373 per cent, to Oceania 277 per cent, to the West Indies 167 per cent, to South America 209 per cent, and Africa 248 per cent. During all this time products of the United States were admitted free of duty into Philippines, while goods from other countries were required to pay duties averaging about 20 per cent. Partly as a result of this discrimination the proportion of Philippine total imports from the United States rose from about 45 per cent to about 60 per cent. Before the tariff act of 1909 the greatest proportion of Philippine imports coming from the United States was 19 per cent; for three years immediately preceding this act the proportion was 17 per cent. Immediately after its passage the proportion doubled. Inasmuch as the Philippine tariff has not been changed since 1909, the later gains of American trade are probably due in large part to other causes, such as those which have enabled American exports to overcome foreign competition in other far eastern markets.

The tariff preference is not, however, of much consequence with respect to a large part of our trade with the Philippines, as is proved by the fact that we export to Japan much more of many kinds of goods without any tariff preference. Our exports to Japan in 1923–1927 were four times as valuable as our exports to the Philippines and four-fifths as great per capita. There are 327 classes of goods separately enumerated in the statistics of exports from the United States to Japan and only 291 classes of exports to the Philippines, in at least 112 of which we exported greater values to Japan than to the Philippines in both 1924 and 1925. These are the most recent years for which figures have been published in a form convenient for comparison. The value of the goods in these classes in 1925 was $15,049,000, or 22 per cent of the total exports of the United States to the Philippines, which plainly can compete with the products of any other nation on equal terms. To these may be added some 24 other groups which are freely sold at present in foreign markets in the Far East, and consequently need have little fear of foreign competition in the Philippines. These articles formed an additional 18 per cent of the United States exports to the Philippines in 1925. And, of course, the other classifications of the export statistics include many products which the United States can export against foreign competition. Consequently, it would be safe to assert that at least one-half of the United States products now sold in the Philippines do not depend on tariff preference for their market.

Allowing for the rise in wholesale prices the actual increase in the quantity of American goods consumed was only between 70 and 75 per cent in 13 years. The low consumption of American

Allowing for the rise in wholesale prices the actual increase in the quantity of American goods consumed was only between 70 and 75 per cent in 13 years. The low consumption of American goods (under $6 per capita) results from the low purchasing power of the natives, which is typical of the natives of tropical countries. Since there is, very little prospect of increasing their individual productivity to any great extent, their demand for United States goods in the future is not likely to increase much more rapidly than their numbers.

The population of the islands increased from 7,635,426 in 1903 to 10,350,730 in 1918, and it is believed to have been 11,921,600 in 1928. This means an annual growth of between 1.6 per cent and

The population of the islands increased from 7,635,426 in 1903 to 10,350,730 in 1918, and it is believed to have been 11,921,600 in 1928. This means an annual growth of between 1.6 per cent and 2 per cent, or a doubling in between 35 and 42 years, if continued. The density is now 104 per square mile, compared with 107 in the Dutch East Indies (exclusive of New Guinea), where climatic and racial conditions are similar. Allowing for both the increase in prices and the increase in population between 1910–1914 and 1923–1927, the per capita consumption of American goods increased about 55 per cent, partly as a result of increased individual purchasing power but mainly as a result of a developing preference for American goods, which was encouraged if not wholly caused by the tariff.

It is very likely that even if the Philippines became independent the United States would retain an important place in their markets. Trade that has been flowing in certain channels is not easily diverted; the Filipinos speak English more than any other language but their own and are accustomed to American fashions; their factories and plantations are equipped with American machinery, and their monetary and banking system is closely linked with ours. In the absence of specific discriminating legislation, which there is no reason to expect unless the Filipinos should gain their independence by force, American exporters could still carry on a good business. It is possible, although very unlikely, that the virtual subsidy which was given to them by the United States tariff act of August 5, 1909, would be repealed; under this act and subsequent tariff acts all goods exported to the Philippines are exempt from United States internal-revenue duties. This exemption amounted to about $1,677,000 in 1927. Since, however, a similar exemption is given to all exports to foreign countries it is unlikely that this would be repealed or seriously modified. Congress seems convinced that selling goods for export at a lower price than that charged at home is better than taking a chance of not selling them at all. In fact, the argument for such an exemption is stronger in the case of goods exported to foreign countries than in the case of goods exported to dependencies, since it is always more difficult to shift a tax onto foreigners, and the attempt to do so may result only in losing their trade, whereas in the case of domestic or subject consumers it is possible to deprive them of any alternative source of supply and thereby compel them to pay the tax.

The preceding considerations show that if the Philippines re-

The preceding considerations show that if the Philippines remained as prosperous after separation from the United States as they are now, our exports to them would in all likelihood be at least half as great as at present. Unfortunately it is almost certain that they would not be so prosperous, and their imports from all countries, including the United States, would decline on account of their lower purchasing power. The loss of their privileged position in our markets and the necessity of financing their own government unassisted would certainly reduce their ability to pay for imports. Consequently it is to be expected that independence would reduce their consumption of American goods even in the cases where American goods can compete successfully with foreign goods.

SOURCE OF TROPICAL MATERIALS

Imports of merchandise from the Philippines in 1927 amounted to $115,685,000 besides a very small amount of foreign goods transshipped in the Philippines. The value of goods carried in American vessels was $66,681,000, on which American shipowners earned the freight, probably amounting to less than 7 per cent. These imports were all admitted free of duty, unless they contained foreign materials to the value of more than 20 per cent, or were shipped via a third country. If they had come from a foreign country, the duties collectible would have been more than $45,350,000. How much, if anything, would be added to the retail price if duties were paid no one can tell. In other words, it is impossible to say how much this exemption benefits United States consumers or Filipino producers or how much the United States producers or consumers or the United States Treasury lose by it. ducers or consumers or the United States Treasury lose by it. In the case of sugar the cost to the American consumer is partly the case of sugar the cost to the American consumer is partly offset by a gain to the American producer, but the other tariffs affecting the Philippine trade represent an uncompensated loss of $22,000,000 to either the American consumer or the Government. It is certain that some of the goods would have gone elsewhere if the United States duty had been imposed. In 1927, 25 per cent of the exports of the Philippines did go to foreign countries, and there is nothing to prevent them from going wherever they can command the best price. It is also certain that in many cases they could not command a profitable price elsewhere.

Tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes sent to the United States pay the United States stamp duties but the total receipts on this account.

United States stamp duties, but the total receipts on this account ($366,000 in 1927) are handed over to the Philippine government. This is a gratuitous subsidy at the expense of United States smokers, exports from the United States to the Philippines being exempt from United States internal-revenue duties and the proceeds of Philippine internal-revenue duties levied on them being retained by the Philippine government.

It seems obvious that self-interest would cause the Filipinos to attempt to continue sending their goods to the United States unless we raised our tariff against them or unless communication was interrupted during a war. However, communication is probably more apt to be interrupted if the islands remain under our flag than if they are independent—in the first case any enemy possessing bases in the Far East would be certain to attack Manila, while in the second he might find it expedient to observe Philipwhile in the second he might find it expedient to observe Philippine neutrality. In either case it would be unwise to count on drawing any supplies from the Philippines during a war in the Pacific, since the distance from Manila to San Francisco is over twice as long as the distance from New York to Liverpool, and the western third of the route is wholly within striking distance of Japan or Japanese possessions. Even if the war were with some other power than Japan such a long line of communication would be hard to maintain. Prudence would dictate building up sources of supply nearer home. of supply nearer home

A large part of the Philippine exports to the United States would be unable to bear the duties imposed on foreign goods by the United States tariff. It seems certain that of the total of $115,-685,000 that came to the United States in 1927 the following would have come in very much smaller quantities, if at all:

Coconut oil	$24, 284, 000
Coconut meat	2, 841, 000
Sugar	47, 887, 000
Embroideries	3, 853, 000
Tobacco and cigars	4, 029, 000

Of the foregoing, the coconut oil might be replaced by an increased import of copra, but the loss of a protected market for the other articles would mean a direct reduction in exports to the United States, which, because of the comparatively high cost of production in the Philippines, could not wholly or even largely be made up by sales to other countries. This would be a loss to the Philippines, but not to the United States; adequate supplies of these goods could easily be obtained elsewhere, and if necessary the American tariff could be reduced to attract such supplies. The only loss to the United States would be in the reduced purchasing the American tariff could be reduced to attract such supplies. The only loss to the United States would be in the reduced purchasing power of Filipinos, which would affect exports to the Philippines, but this loss would be less than the gain from customs duties or, if the tariff were reduced, the saving to American consumers.

Before the tariff act of 1909 was passed, only 40 per cent of the exports from the Philippines came to the United States; recently the proportion has been about 70 per cent. These ratios may indicate what would happen if all tariff privileges were abolished, but they are not conclusive for the reason that even before 1909. but they are not conclusive, for the reason that even before 1909 the American tariff gave Philippine goods a 25 per cent preference. In 1927 the principal Philippine exports that were not almost wholly dependent on the United States market were manila hemp, tobacco products, maguey, lumber, copra cake, copra meal, and

In 1927 our imports from the Philippines were 1.85 per cent of our total imports of merchandise. In that year we imported more, respectively, from China, Japan, India, British Malaya, Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, and four other countries. In the latest year for which comparative figures are available there were seven foreign countries that sent to the United States a larger proportion of their total exports than the Philippines, viz, Guatemala, Hondard Marken, and Marken, M their total exports than the Philippines, viz, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Colombia, Cuba, and Mexico; likewise Puerto Rico and Hawaii. During the past decade (comparing five years, 1910–1914 with 1923–1927) imports from the Philippines have increased 421 per cent, from British Malaya 939 per cent, Dutch East Indies 811 per cent, Hong Kong 427 per cent, Kwangtung 3,300 per cent, Japan 341 per cent. These figures show that the foreign trade of countries and colonies is affected much more by their geographical and economic conditions than by their allegiance. On account of their propinquity it is more economical and prudent for us to develop sources of tropical products in Mexico, the West Indies, and Central and South America—even in West Africa—than to attempt to build up a source over 6,000 miles away, unless that can be done as a business proposition without subsidies, protective tariffs, or preferential freight rates.

There are a few materials for which we depend mainly on the Philippines as a source of supply. They are shown in the following table, with the ratio which imports from the Philippines bore to total imports of each class of goods in 1926 and the alternative sources if any. sources, if any:

All of these except oil cake and meal, copra, and manila are protected by the United States tariff; if this protection were removed it is likely that other countries would furnish a larger part moved it is likely that other countries would furnish a larger part of the supply except in the case of manila, of which the Philippines have a natural monopoly. It is possible that an independent Philippine government might impose an export tax on manila, but we could injure them so severely by tariff retailations and by using substitutes that it is unlikely that they would make it very high, and it is even less likely that they would discriminate against the United States.

It was widely suggested that the recent British attempt at a monopoly of rubber could be fought by developing rubber plantations in Mindanao. This would not, however, require American sovereignty in Mindanao. Besides, those American interests that have looked into this matter have found other more attractive and available places, such as Liberia, Mexico, Brazil, and the Dutch has recently been stated in the press that the War Department believes that for strategic reasons development of rubber sources in Central America, Puerto Rico, South America, and West Africa is preferable to development in the Philippines. The few existing plantations are small and all raise either coconuts or hemp besides the rubber; the largest area devoted to rubber is hemp besides the rubber; the largest area devoted to rubber is 1,825 acres. A recent American Government commission reported that there were 1,500,000 acres of possible rubber land in the Philippines, but labor enough to develop only 500,000 acres. The Philippine government is now attempting to encourage rubber growing by small farmers, as in the Dutch East Indies where small growers produce most of the crops. As soon as the recent American investments in Liberia, Mexico, Yucatan, and the Dutch East Indies result in bearing trees there will be no more danger of a rubber monopoly. The recent downward course of rubber prices bears out this statement,

DISTRIBUTION CENTER FOR ASIATIC TRADE

It was hoped, when the United States first took the Philippines, that they would be a valuable trading outpost for our trade with China and other Far Eastern countries. This hope has not with China and other Far Eastern countries. This hope has not materialized. Although the amount of United States goods sent to China, etc., via the Philippines is not separately stated in either the United States or Philippine statistics of foreign trade, it is possible by a process of comparison to be certain that the total value of United States goods sent to all Asiatic countries from the Philippines did not exceed $581,000 in 1924, $1,000,000 in 1923, and $1,420,000 in 1922. There is no reason to believe that the actual amounts anywhere nearly approached these maximum sums. As a matter of fact, since the steamship service from the United States to Japan and China is better than that to the Philippines, or from the Philippines to those countries, there is no advantage in routing goods via Manila.

Hong Kong and Shanghai have a great advantage over Manila in the trade with China in that it is possible to transfer goods directly from the transoceanic steamers to small coasting or river vessels or to land vehicles in which they can be carried to their destination, whereas Manila is over 600 miles away across a stormy destination, whereas Manila is over 600 miles away across a stormy sea. Hong Kong and Shanghai also have easier access to sources of fuel. In recent years there have been more Americans engaged in business in Shanghai than in Manila

An important fact not generally realized is that by the shortest route Manila is 172 miles farther from San Francisco than is Hong Kong and 834 miles farther than Shanghai; Manila is 243 miles farther from Seattle than Hong Kong and 921 miles farther than Shanghai. Even on the southern route, via Honolulu, the than Shanghai. Even on the southern route, via Honorulu, the distance to Manila is only 90 miles less than to Hong Kong and is 437 miles greater than to Shanghai. The commonly used Mercator maps give a very false impression of relative distances. Manila is, however, fairly well situated for trade with the Dutch East Indies and French Indo-China in the case of goods that can be transshipped without too great cost. Possibilities for trade of this sort seem to be slight and are at present diminishing. In recent years the ports of Cebu, Iloilo, Jolo, and Zamboanga have been increasing in importance in foreign trade, for the reason that it is cheaper in many cases to ship goods directly to and from them instead of via Manila. In fact, exports of Philippine products are shipped directly from some 20 smaller ports, not ports of entry, for the same reason. This indicates that transshipment at Manila has disadvantages even for trade with near-by islands and presumably still greater disadvantages for trade with foreign countries and possessions. If the United States coast-wise laws were extended to the Philippines, as has been so often proposed, all hope of developing a transshipment trade to foreign countries and colonies would, of course, be destroyed. The further suggestion has been made that factories or mills

The further suggestion has been made that factories or mills established under American auspices could produce goods in the Philippines for export to near-by countries. Insofar as these factories might make up native raw materials this is a reasonable proposition; but if they are to use United States or other foreign materials, it is hard to see how they can compete with China or Japan, where labor is either cheaper or more skillful and where coal is available and the climate better adapted to industry. In any case, if they succeeded in producing, say, cheap textiles, they would by that much cut down the market for the same goods produced in the United States and now sold in the Far East, so that the benefit to the United States would be hard to see.

that the benefit to the United States and now sold in the Far East, so that the benefit to the United States would be hard to see.

It is said that if Japan got control of the Philippines the United States would be cut off from China. This, of course, would be true in time of war; it would be equally true even if Japan did not possess the Philippines, because there is a perfect screen of Japanese islands at present extending from Japan to the equator.

FIELD FOR INVESTMENT

The Philippines have attracted considerable American capital and may do so in the future. The present status is unsatisfactory, United States investors not caring to undertake the risks of an insurrection or of sabotage. The fact that the islands were independent or under a foreign flag would not necessarily deter American investors. At the present time there is no less than $12,555,000,000 of United States capital invested in industries in foreign lands, including over $1,000,000,000 in Asia and $4,652,000,000 in Latin America. It is not the sovereignty that counts but the prospects of profit combined with reasonable safety. Of course, a country disturbed by riots or in which foreigners are arbitrarily taxed is discouraging to investors; and if it is certain that the Philippines can not maintain a stable government or will discriminate against Americans, American capital ernment or will discriminate against Americans, American capital will not go in. However, the world is wide, and good investments can be found elsewhere, as, for example, Pirestone's recent acquisitions in Liberia and Yucatan. But there is no reason to believe that an independent Philippine government would discriminate against American capital, since to do so would be contrary to their own economic interest.

The finance and investment division of the Department of Commerce prepared four or five years ago an estimate of American investments in the Philippines which has been partly revised by the Bureau of Insular Affairs. It is as follows:

Philippine government bonds	$61, 294, 000
Municipal bonds
Manila Railroad bonds	15, 500, 000
Philippine Railway Co	8, 549, 000
Manila Electric Corporation	18,000,000
Philippine Islands Telephone & Telegraph Co	1, 500, 000
Sugar, hemp, tobacco, copra	25, 000, 000
Trading concerns	5, 000, 000
Miscellaneous	10,000,000

The income from these investments is probably around $7,000.000 The income from these investments is probably around $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. No one can say how much more or less the same amount of capital would have yielded if invested elsewhere or how investment would be affected by independence. The tax-exempt feature of the municipal and insular bonds makes them worth more to the holder, but this gain is at the expense of the United States Treasury, while the benefit accrues to the Philippine treasury. This is another concealed subsidy and amounts to over $300,000 per annum. In addition to the value of the tax-exempt feature it is, of course, certain that the Philippine government would have to pay a high rate of interest to attract American would have to pay a high rate of interest to attract American investors if they were a foreign country. In fact, their bonds are practically guaranteed by the United States Government. By virtue of these circumstances the Philippine people save about $3,000,000 a year in interest on their bonds, while the United States assumes a contingent liability which can not be expressed

If the United States withdrew from the Philippines, there would If the United States withdrew from the Philippines, there would be a moral obligation to continue this guarantee on outstanding government and municipal bonds, so that the greater part of these investments would be safe. Investments in purely local enterprises, especially sugar, tobacco, and copra, would be severely injured and might become worthless. It is not thought, however, that this fact imposes any obligation on the United States, since these investments were in no way guaranteed; the case is analogous to tariff reductions affecting the so-called "vested interests."

STRATEGIC VALUE

The strategic value of the Philippines in case of a war with Japan has been much stressed by some persons. There is a difference of opinion among military men on two points: First, could the Philippines be held against attack? Second, could they be of assistance to the United States in the defense of Hawaii and the Pacific coast? The first point is of purely academic interest.

Conceding that the Philippines could be made impregnable by providing proper armament and garrisons, it is yet a practical certainty that Congress would not authorize the necessary expenditures or that, if one Congress should do so, subsequent Congresses would allow the garrison and equipment to run down. Moreover, the naval limitation treaty of 1921 forbids us to increase our fortifications or establish new bases on the islands at least until 1936. In their present state few military or naval men would maintain that they could be long defended, although some would maintain that they could be long defended, although some believe that Corregidor could be held until relief arrived. In discussing this point I do not wish to argue that there is any real reason to expect such a war. It would be disastrous to both nations, no matter which won. But it is obvious that the possibility of such a war's occurring would be much less if the United States did not possess a colony so near Japan as the Philippines, since there would be less possibility for jingoes in either nation to stir un felse alerge. stir up false alarms.

As to the second point, it is not ordinarily considered good strategy to establish an outpost behind the enemy base, but that is exactly the position of Manila with respect to Japan. The shortest route to Manila passes within 150 miles of Yokohama, and every other feasible route passes within 150 links of a Japanese colony or mandate. Many of these Japanese possessions contain harbors that could be used by submarines or airplane carriers.

In his evidence before the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions on March 1, 1924, Secretary of War Weeks states, "I want to make this quite clear * * * that if I were going to view this question entirely from military or other benefits to the United States I would say, 'let the Philippines go.'" He believed, however, that the United States should maintain a base for naval and commercial operations in the Far East. According to the testimony of General MacIntyre and Admiral Jones, the to the testimony of General MacIntyre and Admiral Jones, the maintenance of such a base, even if compatible with Philippine independence, would cost as much as or more than the present status. Such a base might be convenient for military operations in China. It is doubtful whether it would be of any value to the United States trade or important to United States prestige. Our trade with Europe and the southern part of South America, as well as our prestige in those regions, is very satisfactory, although we have never had naval bases there. Moreover, we maintained gunboats in China before we ever owned the Philippines. In case of intervention in China the large volume of our trade with that country would give us ample ground on which to insist on being allowed to participate, even if we had no territory nearer than Alaska and Hawali; and if other countries maintain guards in Peiping and Shanghai, we can do so as well.

SUMMARY OF COSTS OF OCCUPATION

The cost of our occupation of the Philippines is very hard to reckon, since a large part of the expenditures of the Army there would be required even if the Army were located in the United States and also because some expenses are incurred in the United States which would not be necessary if the Philippines were not under our flag. Another very important consideration is the amount of revenue lost by the United States Government and the amount of revenue lost by the United States Covernment and the amount of Philippine taxes paid by United States citizens by reason of the privileges granted to the Philippines in our customs and internal revenue laws. Still another question is whether the purchase price and the cost of subduing the insurrection should be included and whether interest should be reckoned on these expenditures. According to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, annual disbursements of the Army and Navy in the Philippines in recent years have been around $12,000.000, but only the cost of the Philippine Scouts ($2,000.000) was properly chargeable to our possession of the islands, since the other items would continue even if the United States withdrew. To this sum he added pensions, retirement pay, etc., of Philippine citizens and the amount of United States internal revenue duties turned over to the Philippine treasury. He stated, however, that "if we should retain in the islands a naval and commercial base there would probably be no saving."

The average annual appropriations by Congress on account of the Philippines in recent years have been as follows:

1914-1919	2,	181,	476.	50
1924-1929	1,	827,	351.	50

These amounts do not include appropriations for "insular possessions" in general, of which a large part was available for the Philippines, nor the ordinary expenses of Army and Navy forces stationed in the islands. However, the expenses of the Bureau of Insular Affairs are included so far as they are covered by specific appropriations, since the greater part of the work of this bureau has to do with the Philippines.

To these appropriations must be added the sums annually paid to the Philippine treasury, representing the proceeds of United States internal revenue stamps on tobacco imported from the Philippines. These sums ranged from $258,097.63 in 1916 to $1.425,283.67 in 1920 and have averaged annually, since the latter date, $705,678.

Customs duties on goods imported from the Philippines are date, $705,678.

Customs duties on goods imported from the Philippines are turned over to the Philippine government. Since 1909 they have been unimportant—about $60,000 in 15 years. They amounted to a total of $3,650,000 in the eight years 1902–1909, to which must be added the benefit received by Filipino exporters from the fact that their products were taxed 25 per cent less than competing foreign products. This is incapable of exact measurement, but did not exceed $1,200,000 and may not have been even that much of a burden to American consumers. Since 1909 Philippine goods have paid no duty, with the theoretical exception of rice, which has been exempt since 1913, and goods made of foreign materials.

The duty imposed on the same quantity of similar goods from foreign countries in 1927 would have been over $45,350,000, which may be regarded as partly a subsidy to Filipino producers, partly a relief of taxes to the American consumer, and partly a with-drawal of protection from the American producer. It seems likely that the increased cost to the American consumer of Philippine products which are not produced in the United States was about $22,000,000 in 1927. $22,000,000 in 1927.

Philippine government and municipal bonds are wholly exempt from United States income tax. The value of this exemption to the Philippines is over $300,000 a year; the loss of revenue to the United States may be less, but it is probably more than that. In addition to the direct value of the tax exemption the Philippine addition to the direct value of the tax exemption the Philippine people save at least $3,000,000 in interest because of their improved credit derived from being under the United States flag.

Exports to the Philippines are exempt from the United States internal revenue duties. This exemption amounted to about $1,677,000 in 1927. Possibly it should not be regarded as a cost of possessing the Philippines, most exports being similarly exempt when sent to foreign countries. It does, however, put the Filippinos in a favored position when compared with American citizens, since the proceeds of the only taxes they pay go wholly to the support of their local government, while American citizens have to contribute to their States and to the Federal Government in addition.

have to contribute to their States and to the Federal Government in addition.

It is evident at any rate that the annual cost of the Philippines to the American taxpayer is at least $26,000,000, not including interest on the purchase price and cost of conquest. The Bureau of Insular Affairs has stated that the total cost to the United States Treasury up to 1924 was about $505,000,000, on $19,000,000 a year, again excluding interest and making no allowance for tariff preferences, but, of course, the expenditures during the insurrection were higher than now. How much should be added to cover the increased military and naval establishment required by the colonial policy and the consequent hostility of foreign nations no one can say. It must be enormous as is plainly shown by two considerations: First, the chief pretext for ill-feeling with Japan is our possession of the Philippines; second, the chief reason for our disagreement with Great Britain concerning the tonnage of cruisers required for our defense is the necessity of having large enough bunker capacity to travel freely between Hawaii and the Philippines. There are also some extra expenses incurred by our consular and diplomatic services because of the necessity of protecting Filipino interests abroad. If accounts were drawn up on a strictly business basis, the United States Government would have to charge the Philippines annually with about $800,000 as interest on the purchase price, and at least $10,000,000 as interest on the cost of conquest (after the end of the war, with Spain). These costs were met originally by bond issues in part, but can not be separated from the general debt.

SUMMARY OF GAINS TO THE UNITED STATES

The pecuniary benefits to the United States from control of the Philippines are briefly summarized in the following paragraphs. These are benefits to the United States citizens or corporations; the benefits to the United States Government and to citizens not directly interested in the Philippines can not be stated in money. The Government gets a small share (not over 10 per cent on the whole) of the increased income of its taxpayers, and each citizen benefits theoretically by the prosperity of his neighbors and those with whom he has business relations. Unfortunately the distribution of benefits is in no way correlated with the distribution of costs. The expenditures of the Government certainly exceed its tax receipts; and while some people profit by importing and exporting to the Philippines, other equally estimable citizens suffer from the competition of Philippine goods or have to pay more for their own purchases in order to protect the Philippines to the United States, aside from dubious strategic value, seems to be limited to the few persons who have direct connection with the Philippines. The pecuniary benefits to the United States from control of the Philippines

Commercial profits: The net profit on exports to the Philippines is somewhere between zero and $3,000,000, taking into account the profit which might have been made by selling these goods elsewhere. Similar calculations would disclose net profits on imports $2,000,000. Freight charges earned by American vessels certainly did not exceed $10,000,000, from which the usual deduction should be made for wages, interest, etc., and for possible earnings elsewhere.

Profits from investments: The total American capital invested in the Philippines is reckoned to be about $152,000,000, of which $68,000,000 are in tax-exempt Government bonds. There is nothing to prevent American investment in the islands if they were independent, although in that case the amount of tax exempts would decline, and on account of United States sovereignty the investors in bonds are content with much less interest that they would decline, and on account of United States sovereignty the investors in bonds are content with much less interest than they would otherwise require. Investors in sugar and other protected industries gain by access to the protected American market, but what they gain is at the expense of American consumers, producers, or taxpayers. Under the present tariff it is likely that their net gain from United States sovereignty does not exceed $2,000,000, assuming that their property would not be destroyed by an independent government and that anarchy would be avoided.

Profits from personal service: It was reckoned that the 484 Americans in government service and the three or four thousand other Americans receiving salaries in the Philippines did not average over $3,000 apiece. Doubtless if they were working at home they could earn at least $2,500 on the average. Some of them would still be employed under an independent government. Assume that 3,000 would leave and lose $500 apiece on the average, the total loss would be $1,500,000.

the total loss would be $1,500,000.

The total gain from United States sovereignty to all classes of United States citizens adds up to less than $10,000,000 a year, which represents all the economic gain susceptible of numerical expression, including some that is made at the expense of other Americans. The potential value of the Philippines as a source of rubber and the possible danger of interference with the supply of manila hemp, coconut products, and pearl buttons can not be even approximately expressed in dollars, depending as it does on so many hypothetical factors. On the whole it would seem that the occupation of the Philippines brings no additional income to the United States Treasury but subjects it to an annual charge of at least $4,000,000—nearer $15,000,000 if interest on the cost of acquisition is included—but the saving to the Treasury from letting the islands go would not exceed $4,000,000 and would be much less than that if a naval base were retained in Manila harbor. Manila harbor.

BENEFIT TO FILIPINOS

The citizens of the Philippines benefit much more than the Americans. They have a privileged position in our market, are relieved from all expense in connection with external matters, are exempt from our immigration laws, and many of them are on the United States pay roll. The value of these privileges is roughly as follows:

Tariff privileges $25,000,000-Pay and allowances of Philippine Scouts	$45,000,000 2,000,000
Other expenditures of Army or Navy in the Philippines	10,000,000
Other Filipinos in United States employ-pay and	The state of the state of allowances	2, 200, 000
Earnings of Filipinos in United States and Hawaii above what they could earn at home (56,000 at $100 each)	5, 600, 000
Proceeds from United States internal revenue	700,000
Value of exemptions from United States internal revenue	1,500,000
Value of exemption of bonds from income tax	300,000
Value of implied guarantee of bonds	3,000,000
Miscellaneous	700,000

The actual increase in the income of Filipino citizens because of tariff privileges and United States Government employment is, of course, impossible to ascertain exactly, but the lowest possible estimate of the total benefit received by them is $40,000,000, which is one and one-half times the total amount now raised by taxation in the Philippine Islands. About $17,000,000 of this is received in such form as to permit the Philippine government to avoid otherwise necessary increases in taxation; the remainder ($23,000,000 or more) is received by individuals or business concerns.

CONCLUSION

The value of American occupation to the Filipinos is very great, very likely greater than the total cost to the American taxpayers, except the extra naval expenditure they occasion, but it is a question whether Americans desire to be taxed to benefit Filipinos and whether it is socially desirable or morally right that they should be. It is at least certain that if the United States tariff should be. It is at least certain that if the United States tariff were applied to imports from the Philippines, the producers of embroideries, furniture, coconut oil, pearl buttons, sugar, and cigars would be very seriously injured; and, if the American Army were withdrawn, not only the natives enrolled in the Philippine Scouts but also a large number of merchants and others would lose their principal means of livelihood. On the other hand, withdrawal would mean an annual saving to the United States Government of at least $4,000,000 in addition to a sum many times as large saved from naval expenditures and a still further saving of approximately $22,000,000 annually to the American consumers of Philippine products other than sugar. It seems obvious that, so far as material advantages are concerned, not only is the present arrangement much more beneficial to the Philippines than to the United States, but also the cost to the United States far exceeds the commercial benefit derived or likely ever to be derived.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the gigantic proposal at the other end of the Capitol for countless new Federal buildings dotting every State in the Union includes handsome bounty for at least 28 cities and villages in Michigan. A few of these projects possess credentials of indisputable for the Congress which must pass upon this prospectus in synthetic prosperity. Therefore I ask to have an editorial and news article from the Grand Rapids Herald printed in the RECORD. They are particularly pertinent because this bonanza bill has now reached the Senate for what I hope may be decisive purging.

There being no objection, the editorial and news article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Editorial

This country is witnessing a spectacle without precedent in its history. The proposed beneficiaries of pork-barrel legislation are in rebellion against a measure in which they are expected to share. Heretofore always the crossroads hamlet selected for a new post office could be depended upon to absert leading and demand the total countries. office could be depended upon to cheer loudly and demand that the Representative in Congress of its district support the measure. But now the very towns which are named in the pending "relief" bill with its contemplated huge expenditure for post-office buildings are protesting and loudly announcing that they want no share in the pork.

Reaction in Michigan is typical. Up north of the Straits the Marquette Mining Journal declares frankly that Marquette needs the proposed new Federal building about as much as a farm wagon needs five wheels. The Benton Harbor News-Palladium, surveying communities in the district which it serves, gives forthright notice as follows: "New Federal post-office buildings are provided for in St. Joseph, Berrien Springs, Buchanan, Cassopolis, Watervliet, Saugatuck, Allegan, and Paw Paw. Outside of St. Joseph these communities need Federal buildings just about as much as a wairus needs a powder puff."

The Lansing State Journal, contemplating possibility of East Lansing as the recipient of an imposing Federal building, declares: "No one could begrudge East Lansing a fine new Government structure, if in due time funds are available out of the Nation's earnings and use justifies the expenditure. But who is there who can believe that putting up a $105,000 building at East Lansing will make any appreciable difference to the business in that place?"

And so it goes. The Herald last Sunday turned thumbs down

And so it goes. The Herald last Sunday turned thumbs down on an appropriation which Grand Rapids' postal authorities have believed needed, but which this city could accept only along with the general pork barrel. Other Michigan editors are no less outspoken. This showing of an aroused public opinion clearly indicates that the American people are beginning to realize that the Federal Treasury is not a bottomless grab bag.

[From the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald, June 6] (News article, June 6)

No "pork" is wanted by western Michigan cities and villages slated to share the contents of his gigantic "pork barrel," from which it is proposed to pass out 5,000 post offices, according to the mayors and presidents whose views have been asked by the Herald. "Wasteful," "vicious," "foolish," "unjustifiable," are some of the epithets applied by the heads of municipalities that would receive new buildings costing all the way from $55,000 to $315,000. The Greater Muskegon Chamber of Commerce recently voted disapproval of the proposed $315,000 Federal building, including a courtbouse disapproval of the proposed $315,000 Federal building, including a courthouse.

Officials of other communities are equally outspoken.

Rockford, for instance, is in the bill for a $100,000 post office, but Village President J. V. Smith is not enthusiastic about the proposal. "It would be a nice addition to the town," he said, "and of course we wouldn't turn it down if it were handed to us, but we're not so hot for the plan. The post office is now housed in a rented building, and we think it is adequate and satisfactory. As a means of relieving unemployment it isn't worth thinking about. It wouldn't help us enough to justify any considerable portion of the expense."

Allegan is listed for a $90,000 post office. Mayor Joseph F. Mosher, however, is opposed to it and believes that Allegan is not favorable to the proposal. "Our present post office will be good enough for the next 10 years," he said. "It won't accomplish any real unemployment relief, and we think the $90,000 would be foolishly spent in putting up a new post office here. Everybody says taxes are high enough; then why add this to them? If we could get something for nothing, we'd like it; but the bill would have to be paid by somebody."

"We're not crazy for it," said Mayor Wyman Bock, of Greenville, which is down for a $75,000 building. "We don't need it and it's all foolishness. If they open up the barrel, we might take our slice of pork, but we wouldn't think of asking for it as conditions now are."

Both Portland and Sparta are included in the list of Michigan now are."

Both Portland and Sparta are included in the list of Michigan villages to receive $55,000 post offices under the Garner plan. President William H. Young, of Portland, said: "We certainly don't need a new post office very badly. We could use it, of course, but it would be a foolish move to build a new one now. It wouldn't be of any real value in reducing unemployment. Our present post-office quarters in a rented building are centrally located and, I think, perfectly satisfactory. If there's any need for better accommodations, it may be noted that when our two banks recently merged the offices of one was left vacant. That place can be rented and furnish as good a post office as we need."

President Earl E. Stritlin, of Sparta, declared that a new post office in his village would not justify the expense. "As a general thing," he said, "I'm in favor of any move to give employment and help business, but building a new post office would not justify the expenditure of $55,000 here."

Mayor William Verduin, of Grand Haven, said he had not looked into the plan to give his city a $50,000 building and would not comment on it.

into the plan to give his city a $50,000 building and would not comment on it.

Chief executives of other municipalities not included in the plan were equally outspoken. "It's immaterial whether we're on the list or not," said Mayor Nicodemus Bosch, of Holland. "Our people don't approve of the pork barrel. This is a very positive feeling over here, and it is not confined to any one class of people. We can see no real reason for such a program."

Mayor Felix H. H. Fiynn, of Cadillac, declared the "pork barrel" to be "a wasteful expenditure that might better be applied in direct and economical relief." Pointing out that it would be more economical to use the funds for necessary improvements, he added, "It is a vicious tendency at this time, and more likely to break down the economic structure than to help it."

Mayor A. E. Stebbins, of Ionia, declared that expenditure of huge sums for post offices now "would only defer the day of reckoning and lengthen the depression by keeping money out of business." He said he would favor any measure to relieve unemployment, but that he believed if this proposed construction were opened to contract it would not offer appreciable relief. "Ionia," he said, "tries to operate on a pay-as-you-go basis, and we believe that no bond should be issued that isn't an emergency bond."

Mayor Charles B. Wells, of Traverse City, another city that is not slated to benefit, pointed out that he is a Democratic mayor, when he was asked to comment, and indicated that personally he approved of the plan.

Not all the mayors and village presidents of communities slated when he was asked to comment, and indicated that personally he approved of the plan.

Not all the mayors and village presidents of communities slated to benefit under the proposed Garner bill have been asked for their opinions, but on the basis of those questioned the verdict in western Michigan is almost unanimously opposed to "pork," even at the sacrifice of new buildings to adorn their streets.

In some villages councils and civic organizations are preparing to take definite action on the question.

PRICES OF BREAD

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask permission to have read at the desk a telegram from the Indianapolis Retail Meat and Grocers' Association relative to the price of bread.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Indianapolis, Ind., June 7, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR ROBINSON,

Washington, D. C.:

Chain stores are selling sliced or unsliced pound-loaf bread at 4 cents loaf, while independent merchants are forced to sell pound-loaf sliced or unsliced at 7 cents loaf, due to increase in wholesale bread prices effective to-day. Independent prices were 5 cents per loaf until to-day. Please investigate.

Mr. WAGNER subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4860) to provide for loans to States for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. | 782) thereon.

ECONOMIC ACTION OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a joint resolution providing for a congressional inquiry into the economic action of the antitrust laws and, for the purpose of such inquiry, temporarily to permit supervised, cooperative agreements in industry.

I should like to say in this connection that for some months a group of citizens, economists and business men interested in this problem and representing conflicting points of view, have been studying the proposals for modifying the antitrust laws. It is apparent that no legislation on the general subject is possible during the present session, though committees have given hearings and consideration to various bills, among them bills presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NyE] and myself. The resolution I now present for an investigation of the subject has been very carefully prepared, and a great amount of study has been given to it; it seems to have the support of liberal groups as well as other groups interested in a review of these laws in the light of present economic conditions. By request, and without committing myself to its details, I submit the joint resolution and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and also, because of the public interest in this subject, that it be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) to provide for a congressional inquiry into the economic action of the antitrust laws, and for the purpose of such inquiry temporarily to permit supervised, cooperative agreements in industry, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as

Be it resolved, etc., That in the interpretation of this act and an determining the purpose and scope of the inquiry to be conducted under this act, the public policy of the United States is hereby declared as follows:

Monopolies are detrimental to the economic interest of the public, except in the case of those industries which by their nature are monopolistic and which, therefore, require governmental regulation.

(b) Competition is an inherent human characteristic, and all individuals naturally strive to excel and to improve their economic condition, but unfair methods of competition in trade and com-merce are illegal and were considered illegal even before the en-condition, but unfair methods of competition in trade and commerce are illegal and were considered illegal even before the enactment of the antitrust laws, and ruinous, destructive, and cutthroat competition in trade and commerce is obnoxious to the economic welfare of the public, because it tends to result in monopolistic practices, and the antitrust laws were enacted because of the predatory, ruinous, and destructive methods of competition used by ruthless competitors and monopolists.

(c) To restrain the growth of monopolies resulting from the extermination of weaker competitors through the ruinous, destructive, and cutthroat methods of competition used by unscrupulous competitors, it may be advantageous to the economic welfare of the public to permit cooperative agreements in industry, provided proper checks are placed upon such agreements to avoid monopolistic and extortionate practices.

(d) Labor is entitled to a fair and reasonable compensation, and has the right to associate and cooperate for the improvement of conditions of life; to avoid industrial inactivity and resulting unemployment, producers and distributors should receive a fair and reasonable compensation; consumers must be fairly and reasonably compensated for their productive efforts in order to be enabled to purchase their needs as consumers; selling prices should be based on all fair and reasonable items of cost plus a fair and reasonable profit, but extortionate prices should not be exacted from consumers.

(e) In his annual message to the Congress on December 8 reasonable profit, but extortionate prices should not be exacted from consumers.

(e) In his annual message to the Congress on December 8, 1931, the President said: "In my message of a year ago I commented on the necessity of congressional inquiry into the economic action of the antitrust laws. There is wide conviction that some change should be made, especially in the procedure under these laws. I do not favor their repeal. * * I again recommend the matter to the consideration of the Congress." The problem of the economic action of the antitrust laws and the question of whether, and the extent to which they should be modified or amended, requires careful study and inquiry not only by theoretical discussion but also by practical observation of experiments in the field of cooperative agreements in industry.

SECTION 1. Bipartisan joint congressional committee established: That there is hereby authorized the appointment of a joint congressional committee of six members of the House of Representatives to be designated by the Speaker, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and six Sentons to be designated by the President of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, which shall investigate the economic action of the antitrust acts and report to the Congress not later than April 1, 1934, its findings and recommendations as to whether and what legislation is required to conform the antitrust acts to economic conditions.

SEC. 2. Powers and organization of committee: For the purposes

SEC. 2. Powers and organization of committee: For the purposes of this act, the said committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings in the city of Washington or elsewhere in the United States, and to sit and act at such places at all times during the sessions and recesses of the Seventy-second and succeeding Congresses until its final report is submitted, to employ expert counsel and other experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpgan or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents as the committee may deem necessary to administer such oaths, to take such testimony and to books, papers, and documents as the committee may deem necessary, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable, so that the fullest investigation, report, and recommendations may be had. The committee may designate one of its number to be chairman and one to be vice chairman and may appoint, or may authorize its chairman or vice chairman to appoint such subcommittee or subcommittees as it may deem advisable and may designate a member of any such subcommittee to act as the chairman thereof. The committee may adopt rules for its procedures and may, from time to time, alter, amend, modify, or suspend any such rules.

SEC. 3. Vacancies: A vacancy or vacancies in the committee shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the committee. Any member of the committee whose powers of the committee. Any member of the committee whose term of office as Senator or as a Member of the House of Repreterm of office as Senator or as a Member of the House of Representatives shall expire on March 4, 1933, who shall fall of reelection at the general election to be held in November, 1932, shall cease to be a member of the committee on March 4, 1933, upon the expiration of his term of office as Senator or Member of the House of Representatives. A successor to any such retiring member of the committee shall be designated by the then chairman of the committee. A successor of any such retiring member of the committee shall be a Member of the same House of Congress and of the same political party as the retiring member.

SEC. 4. Filing cooperative agreements: For the purpose of enabling the committee fully to investigate the desirability and practical economic effect of cooperative agreements in trade and commerce, agreements in writing regulating competition in trade and commerce, which agreements might be considered prohibited by commerce, which agreements might be considered prohibited by the antitrust acts, may be voluntarily filed hereunder for the conthe antitrust acts, may be voluntarily filed hereunder for the consideration of the committee, by any person, by the filing not later than February 1, 1934, of 7 printed copies thereof with the Federal Trade Commission, 15 printed copies thereof with the committee, and 3 printed copies thereof with the Attorney General of the United States. Upon the filing thereof such copies shall be stamped with the date of filing by the respective offices in which the same are filed, and, upon request, each of said respective offices shall stamp an acknowledgment of the filing and the date thereof upon an additional printed copy of the agreement to be retained as evidence of such filing by the person filing the same. same.

SEC. 5. Excepted agreements shall not be filed: No agreement shall be filed hereunder which provides for the physical merger or consolidation of competing persons or interests, or which in any way seeks to effect any physical merger or consolidation, nor shall any agreement be filed hereunder which abridges or curtails any way seeks to effect any physical merger or consolidation, nor shall any agreement be filed hereunder which abridges or curtails in any manner or to any extent the right of any employee to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or the right of any employees to organize and to maintain their organizations and to negotiate wages and conditions of work collectively through chosen representatives.

SEC. 6. Power to investigate filed agreements: Full investigation of the proposed and actual operation and performance of said filed agreements being reasonably calculated to afford information, useful and material in framing legislation, the committee and the Federal Trade Commission shall each at all times after the filing of any such agreement and prior to June 30, 1934, have full and unlimited power to conduct any and all investigations of the business of any person or persons who may be or become parties to any such filed agreement so far as it relates to the proposed and actual operation and performance of such agreement, and during all of the said period to require and direct any said person or persons to file with the committee, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Attorney General any reports containing any information that the committee or the Federal Trade Commission may prescribe relating to the proposed and actual operation and performance of any such agreement, and the power of the Congress to conduct any such agreement, and the power of the Congress to conduct any such investigation and require operation and performance of any such agreement, and the power of the Congress to conduct any such investigation and require any such report is hereby expressly delegated to such committee and said Federal Trade Commission, respectively, for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 7. Complaints, hearings, approval, and disapproval: Any person in any way interested in the operation of any filed agreement, whether such person be a competitor of the parties thereto or a purchaser of the goods produced or distributed by any of said parties, or any member of the committee or the Attorney General may, at any time, after the filing of any such agreement, file with the Federal Trade Commission a complaint briefly setting forth the objections to the filed agreement. Copies of the complaint shall be filed by the complainant with the committee and the Attorney General. Upon the filing of such complaint the Federal Trade Commission shall give notice of hearing to the complainant, the committee, the Attorney General, and the parties to the filed agreement, fixing the day and place of hearing at least 15 days after the service of the notice, which may be in person or by mail, and after such hearing the Federal Trade Commission shall make a report in writing, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusions or decision, which shall be accompanied by an opinion in writing briefly setting forth the contentions of the parties, the nature of the evidence adduced at the hearing, and the reasons for the conclusions or decision. The hearing shall be conducted by the full Federal Trade Commission, or by any one or more of the Federal Trade Commissioners or by an examiner duly appointed by the Federal Trade Commission, and rules for the conduct of said hearings may be adopted by the Federal Trade Commission with the approval of the committee. If the Federal Trade Commission should decide that the filed agreement is a reasonable and necessary measure to prevent a agreement is a reasonable and necessary measure to prevent a continuance of destructive competition between the parties thereto, and does not result in a selling price of the goods or commodities covered thereby in excess of a fair and reasonable price based on all fair and reasonable items of cost plus a fair and reasonable profit, taking into consideration the necessity of a fair and reasonable compensation to producers and distributors of average ability and efficiency and to labor, then the Federal Trade Commission shall approve the filed agreement; but other-Trade Commission shall approve the filed agreement; but otherwise it shall disapprove the same, and in either case it shall serve copies of its report and opinion upon the complainant, the committee, the Attorney General, and the parties to the filed agreement. If a filed agreement shall have been approved, it may subsequently be disapproved upon evidence that the reasons for its approval no longer exist or no longer apply, based on a new complaint and a new hearing and decision, following the same procedure as above provided.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit an amendment to H. R. 11897, the War Department appropriation bill, and ask that it may be printed in the usual form, printed in the RECORD, and lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma is as follows:

On page 82, after line 20, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, save and except for real assistance and convenience to the enlisted men and troops in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided, That excess and surplus stocks of merchandise now on hand at any exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange may be disposed of and all goods on consignment shall be returned immediately: And provided further, That all branch exchanges and subexchanges located off of Government lands and outside of Government reservations, and operated by private contract or agreement on a commission basis, shall be closed and terminated as to such contract or agreement immediately: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall make a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate at the beginning of the next session of the Congress covering the several exchanges, branch exchanges, and subexchanges operated by or under the supervision of the War Department."

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9699, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

On page 60, lines 6 and 7, strike out the following: "including complete equipment and furniture for post offices in leased quarters."

LOANS TO STATES-AMENDMENT

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4755) to provide for grants and loans to the several States to aid in relieving unemployment, to facilitate the construction of self-liquidating projects, to provide for the construction of certain authorized Federal public-works projects, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HOUSE REPORT NO. 2290

Mr. GLENN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives con-curring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2290, Seventy-first Congress, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, and 3,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3765) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Fourteenth National Convention of the American Legion at Portland, Oreg., during the month of September, 1932.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) granting consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE RILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12445) to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RIGHT OF PEOPLE TO ACT ON EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Washington News, which I present, may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When the drys were fighting for prohibition, they appealed to Congress to let the people speak. For instance—

"Give the people of the separate States an opportunity to decide for themselves whether they desire this amendment." (Bishop James Cannon, jr., May, 1914.)

"We are simply asking Congress to submit to the people this amendment for ratification or rejection." (Dr. Edwin Dinwiddle, of the prohibition board of strategy, May, 1914.)

"The people have the right to be heard. All the people have never had a chance to be heard, and this proposed amendment will give them that chance." (Mrs. Ella Boole, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, April, 1914.)

"The Member of either branch of the American Congress who denies the power of amendment to the States, especially an amendment which vast numbers of the people desire the States to consider, violates the basic principles both of the Constitution and of popular government, repudiates the fundamental rights of the States, and overturns the two most sacred privileges the people possess—the privileges of referendum and petition." (Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, July, 1917.)

After 12 years of experiment this dry law has been challenged by "vast numbers of the people," by the organized veterains, organized lawyers, organized workers, by the President's own Wickersham Commission, by the voters in virtually every recent test. A poll by the Literary Digest reveals that now this country favors repeal by nearly 3 to 1.

Yet the Anti-Saloon League threatens that any Congressman by nearly 3 to 1.

Yet the Anti-Saloon League threatens that any Congressman who votes for resubmission will be opposed at the polls. Rights that were fundamental, privileges that were sacred 12 years ago now have become to the drys frivolous and profane.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES AND INTEREST PAID THEREON

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, during the debate on the revenue bill reference was repeatedly made to the volume and extent of tax-exempt securities and the interest paid on such securities, which bears little, if any, tax. I communicated with the Treasury Department at that time seeking to get more definite information. I have a letter which I ask to have printed in the RECORD giving that information, and I wish to quote an excerpt from the letter, as follows:

The interest payments of the Federal Government for the fiscal years 1930 and 1931 amounted to $659,347,613 and $611,559,704, respectively. The latest figure available for the interest payments of State governments refers to 1930 and is $101,431,000. The latest figure available for the interest payments of local governments is an estimate by the National Industrial Conference Board for the fiscal year 1929 and is $1,072,200,000.

I ask that the letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate. The great volume of incomes that escape taxation may be appreciated from the figures furnished by

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY, Washington.

Hon. David I. Walsh,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of May 29, 1932, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury and requesting statistics on the national wealth and on total dividend and interest payments, was not received at this department in time to comply with your request that the material reach you by noon of May 30.

The latest official estimate of the national wealth of the United

The latest official estimate of the national wealth of the United States is $320,800,000,000 (per capita $2,918) for 1922, by the Bureau of the Census, United States Department of Commerce. The latest estimate of which we have any knowledge is $329,700,000,000 (per capita $2,677) for 1930, by the National Industrial Conference Board, 247 Park Avenue, New York City. This is a figure for which the Treasury takes no responsibility.

The total corporation dividend and interest payments during the calendar years 1930 and 1931, according to data compiled by the New York Journal of Commerce, were $8,577,600,000 and $3,247,600,000, respectively. Dividend payments alone for the same years amounted to $4,203,100,000 and $3,694,800,000, respectively. Monthly figures on these payments are published in the Survey of Current Business issued by the United States Department of Commerce and in the Statistical Bulletin of the Standard Statistics Co., should you care to use monthly data or data for earlier Commerce and in the Statistical Bulletin of the Standard Statistics Co., should you care to use monthly data or data for earlier years. These figures do not include interest payments of the Federal, State, and local Governments. Very truly yours,

JAMES H. DOUGLAS, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

THE AGRICULTURAL OMNIBUS RELIEF BILL-ADDRESS BY EDWARD A. O'NEAL

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, on June 4 Edward A. O'Neal. president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System an address relating to pending agricultural measures, which, I think, clearly depicts the sentiment of the public to-day and its insistence for farm-relief legislation at this session. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My friends, the hour of accounting soon will be at hand—the hour when the elected representatives of the sovereign people must give an accounting of their stewardship to the electorate of this country. Less than 10 days from now the great political parties will meet for their quadrennial conventions and within five months the people will express themselves at the polls.

Four years ago solemn pledges were given to the American farmers by the Republican and Democratic Parties in their party platforms. Have these promises been fulfilled? I will let you be the judge. I quote the following promise from the 1928 Republican platform:

"The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success."

Now, I quote the following promise from the 1928 Democratic Producers of crops whose total volume exceeds the needs of the "Producers of crops whose total volume exceeds the needs of the domestic market must continue at a disadvantage until the Government shall intervene, as seriously and as effectively in behalf of the farmer, as it has intervened in behalf of labor and industry. * * We pledge the party to an earnest endeavor to solve this problem of the distribution of the cost of dealing with crop surpluses over the marketed units of the crop whose producers are benefited by such assistance."

Such were the solemn promises given to agriculture. Have those promises been redeemed? Has agriculture been given equality with other industries so as to insure its prosperity and success? I with other industries so as to insure its prosperity and success? I leave the answer to you farmers. Is there any equality when you have to sell your products for 56 per cent of the pre-war prices and pay 112 per cent of pre-war prices for what you buy?

According to a recent estimate by Senator Howell, of Nebraska, agriculture's buying power was 38 per cent below equality in 1931. Translated in terms of income, this means that agriculture last year was deprived of $3,615,000,000 in income through this inequality.

The inequality of agriculture is much worse now than it was in 1928 when these platform promises were made. Then the index level of farm prices was 139; now it is 56. Then the purchasing power of agriculture was 90; now it is 50, or nearly one-half of what it was in 1928. Agriculture is faced with ruin. Unless conditions are changed, our farmers will be serfs.

Yet what has been done to redeem those promises? These platform pledges did not stop with promising the enactment of one measure or any specified number of measures, but promised to continue efforts until the goal of equality and prosperity for agriculture was assured.

During that period but agriculture was assured.

During that period but one measure has been passed directed toward remedying this condition, namely, the agricultural marketing act. Although helpful, the marketing act has proven inadequate, as conditions have become rapidly worse despite the invoking of the most drastic powers permitted under the act. It prescribes a goal of equality for agriculture, but is shorn of the power to attain it. It is evident that the act must be amended to provide this power if the goal is to be attained.

The Republican platform promised not one measure, but promised the enactment of such measures as would achieve this result. It can not evade its responsibility for failure thus far result. It can not evade its responsibility for failure thus far to redeem this promise. If the Republican Party does not do something in this Congress to restore equality to agriculture, will any farmer believe that it has redeemed its pledge?

Neither can the Democratic Party evade its responsibility. Durate the city mention that the contract the results are the results and the results are the ing the six months which this Congress has been in session, the Democrats have had control of the House of Representatives and therefore could have initiated and carried forward measures through that body which would have redeemed the platform pledge made in 1928.

Thus far not a single fundamental measure to assure equality to agriculture has been enacted by either the Democratic House or the Republican Senate to fulfill these platform promises made in 1928; and this in spite of the fact that the farmers are in the most desperate plight in the memory of this generation, if not in the history of this country. Several miscellaneous measures which will be helpful to agriculture, particularly along credit lines, have been passed, but the fundamental things promised and asked have not been fulfilled. We are duly thankful for these legislative crumbs from the legislative table.

Nero fiddling while Rome burned pales into insignificance compared with this Congress procrastinating and dillydallying while agriculture sinks into ruin, imperiling the economic welfare of the entire Nation

Are these platform promises to be treated as mere scraps of paper, to be repudiated or forgotten at will, or are they solemn obligations to be conscientiously and fully redeemed? Are they nothing but sham and hypocrisy, or are they the expressions of sincerity and integrity? The events of the next few weeks will nothing but sham and hypocrisy, or are they the expressions of sincerity and integrity? The events of the next few weeks will disclose which they are.

I feel it my solemn duty as the leader of a great organization of farmers to speak out courageously and unequivocally, and without fear or favor, in this critical hour. If this Congress adjourns without acting upon some fundamental measures to restore the purchasing power of agriculture, agriculture can not do otherwise than brand these platform promises as nothing but hypocrisy and deceit. However, we are grateful for the promise given us by the Senate leaders that our farm relief bill will be voted on before adjournment.

on before adjournment.

The blame for failure to act can not be laid at the door of

on before adjournment.

The blame for failure to act can not be laid at the door of the farmers or their leaders. We were willing to try out the agricultural marketing act. To that end we cooperated to the fullest extent with the Federal Farm Board. Subsequent events have demonstrated exactly what farm leaders predicted, namely, that the marketing act as written, would not solve the surplus problem and that the equalization fee plan or some other plan for dealing with the surplus problem would have to be included before success would be achieved.

Convinced of the urgent necessity of doing something further to restore equality to agriculture, I called this to the attention of the country after assuming the presidency of the American Farm Bureau Federation about a year ago, and insisted on the enactment of the equalization fee. Then the farm price index was 91. To-day it is 56. Last December the voting delegates of the American Farm Bureau Federation in convention assembled reaffirmed their demand for the enactment of the equalization fee and other effective measures for the relief of agriculture. Other farm organizations likewise adopted resolutions demanding further legislation to bring equality to agriculture.

Just before Congress convened I came to Washington at the invitation of Senator McNary, chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee, and presented at that time a comprehensive program, including the equalization fee plan for surplus control, a plan for money stabilization and an honest dollar, a proposal for gram, including the equalization fee plan for surplus control, a plan for money stabilization and an honest dollar, a proposal for plan for money stabilization and an honest dollar, a proposal for regulating commodity exchanges and drastically controlling short selling, a comprehensive rural-credits program, and various other measures, for the aid of agriculture. Other farm leaders likewise presented suggestions. The farm price index had then dropped to 71, or 20 points lower than in the previous May.

The weeks dragged on and Congress recessed over the Christmas holiday, with no action taken for the relief of agriculture.

In January, at a historic conference in Washington of the representatives of the "Big Three" farm organizations, the A. F. B. F., the National Grange, and the Farmers' Union, a joint legislative program consisting of six proposals was formulated and agreed to. For the first time in the history of organized agriculture the farmers were united on a program of legislation.

This program was presented to the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture, and sent to every Member of the Senate and the House. The farm price index had then fallen to 63, a drop of 8 more points, but still Congress did nothing.

In February I was called to Washington again to present our recommendations to the Agricultural Committees of Congress. I called in Vice President Hearst, of Iowa, and several members of our legislative committee to assist, and we presented to the committees in detail our recommendations, fortified with a mass of statistical information showing how they would operate, and how they would yield enormous hearing the articulture for the committee of the committee o they would yield enormous benefits to agriculture in higher prices our crops

The farm price index had dropped to 60, a drop of 3 more points. But still Congress did nothing. The Agricultural Committees listened to our pleas and proceeded to do nothing about it. Still we persisted. In March we came to Washington again to press for action on these fundamental measures. We interviewed individual members of the committees and influential leaders in both the House and Senate, pleading for prompt and effective action to save agriculture from ruin. We were told to prepare a bill and submit it. submit it

To leave nothing unturned and no responsibility on our part undischarged, we conferred again with the leaders of other farm organizations and worked out the complete text of a composite bill. Late in April we submitted it to both committees. Meanwhile, the farm price index had dropped to 59 in April and to 56 in May.

Finally, on May 25, the Senate Agricultural Committee, headed by Senator McNary, stalwart champion of farm relief, reported out favorably the McNary bill embodying the composite bill we presented to it. But the House committee still pursues its course of inaction. The committee has been leisurely studying our recommendations but to the data has not apported a strong recommendations. ommendations but to this date has not reported a single measure to restore equality to agriculture. It seems all the time, under the control of its chairman, Marvin Jones of Texas, to be seeking something different from the bill as presented by the farm organizations at the request of the committee itself. The House committee is just fooling around with this serious proposition. committee is just fooling around with this serious proposition, playing with the farmers' troubles despite the valiant efforts of certain of our stanch friends on the committee. The session is nearly over before the committee gets into action.

I think it must be clear to any reasonable person that the responsibility for failure to act to restore equality to agriculture rests squarely upon the shoulders of Congress, which has the power to pass measures which will help achieve this result. This responsibility is very great when representatives of more than 2,000,000 farmers, after years of study, present recommendations to Congress to bring about the desired result.

What are some of these measures which will bring about equality to agriculture and prosperity to the country generally? There are at least three measures which this Congress should pass before it adjourns: First, the Goldsborough bill, providing an honest dollar; second, the McNary-Fulmer composite farm relief bill, amending the marketing act; and third, an emergency measure for financing the export of our surpluses of farm products.

I want to describe these measures briefly and tell you what I want to describe these measures briefly and tell you what benefits agriculture and the country generally may expect from them if enacted into law now.

The Goldsborough bill, which is the honest-dollar bill, sets forth a fundamental monetary policy for this Nation, namely, that all the powers now possessed by the Federal reserve system shall be directed to two ends: First, to restore the purchasing power of the dollar to the average for the period 1921 to 1929; and second, to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar as nearly as practicable at that level.

Our banks are bulging with money. We have more gold than any other Nation on the face of the globe. Our natural resources are enormous. Our factories are the most efficient in the world. Yet the farmers are faced with ruin and 10,000,000 unemployed walk the streets in search of work.

Eminent economists warn us that the worst has not been reached yet unless something is done to check the deflation. As the Right Hon. Winston Churchill said in an address on the world economic crisis, "The hideous processes of deflation have but to go on to isolate the nations and reduce them to the barbarian and barter of the Dark Ages." Unless something is done to check the forces of deflation they tell us that labor, city real estate, and all property values must inevitably come down to the level of commodity prices. This means that the wages of union labor will have to be cut in half, doctors and nurses 25 to 50 per cent less than they now receive, salaries of school-teachers and professors from 25 to 40 per cent less, dollar capitalization of industrial companies 25 to 40 per cent less, dollar capitalization of industrial companies from 60 to 65 per cent less, and so on, all along the line from the least to greatest. That is the dismal picture of what will happen if the rest of this country is brought down to a level with agri-

That means wholesale bankruptcies and liquidation on an unparalleled scale because of our high debt level. In 1929 our total debts, both public and private, in the United States totaled $203,000,000,000, or 56 per cent of our national wealth of $386,000,000,000, according to estimates of Warren and Pearson, of Cornell University. To-day they tell us the national wealth has shrunk until it is worth scarcely half that amount. Thus our debts now are equal to the value of our property.

Furthermore, our dollar has become so dear in exchange for the currencies of other countries and we have acquired so much of the world's store of gold at the expense of the stocks of other countries that other nations can not buy our products. How can we trade with other countries of the world when they have no gold. Our export trade has fallen off 54 per cent in value and 35 per cent in volume since 1929.

Unless our dollar is restored to a fair value, we will have to enact higher tariffs to protect us against the imports of commodities from countries with depreciated currencies. Already numerous industries are clamoring for such protection, and various bills are pending in Congress to bring this about. These higher tariffs will penalize all the consumers in the United

To avoid this terrifying prospect we must have an honest dollar. A dollar which purchases 64 cents, worth one year and $1.52 worth another year is dishonest. A dollar which makes the debtor to-day pay back $202 for each $100 borrowed in 1929 is dishonest. It ruins the debtors to enrich the creditors. The price level must be restored until the dollar is worth the same amount was when our debts were contracted. This is what the Goldsborough bill does.

The Democratic House of Representatives is to be complimented The Democratic House of Representatives is to be complimented on passing, with the aid of a goodly number of our Republican friends, the Goldsborough bill by the overwhelming majority of 289 to 60. But when it came to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee it was cast aside and the so-called Glass proposal, which is nothing but a mere makeshift, was substituted for it. The Glass proposal is just like all the other relief measures that have been proposed—just makeshifts which postpone the evil day and do not go to the root of the trouble. It provides no plan for restoring the price level or stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar. It fails to recognize the principle of an honest dollar. honest dollar.

It distresses me greatly to see Senator Glass from Virginia taking the lead against this measure as he is quoted in the New York Times of June 2 as stating that he did not believe this or any other legislative device was necessary for such an end at this time but that he had opposed the plan in order to stop the Goldsborough bill, which he opposes. I quote from the Senator's state-

'I distinctly disavow the belief that any of these legislative devices are necessary at this time. I simply offered the bill in question as a substitute for the Goldsborough bill which I regard with the utmost aversion."

It will be seen that the Virginia Senator is definitely opposed to any measure which will reestablish and then maintain a commodity price level which will permit farmers to live. On the other hand, his bill which plays us directly into the hands of the big bankers who can continue making a profit in issuing their notes as circulating medium of the Nation. I can not avoid telling you that Senator Glass is reputed to be the person who, when the Federal reserve act was being written years ago, struck out that provision which was identic in effects with the Golds-borough bill. This brings the Senator down to date after almost years in opposing the masses of our people who must have a dollar that is honest and in supporting the gigantic banking fraternity which already has us within its grasp.

Despite the position of the Senator from Virginia against this measure, let me inform you that the Goldsborough bill is the direct cause of the recent efforts of the Federal Reserve Board to use a temporary mild inflation and also the international conference on money stabilization in which our Government will be represented.

All the relief measures thus far passed have been drawn in the interest of the creditor class. The debtors are made the goats. The millions of debtors are sacrificed on the altar of greed for the

The millions of debtors are sacrificed on the attar of greed for the benefit of the creditors. The debtor and creditor have a mutual relationship. If you destroy one you destroy both, ultimately.

This grasping group of creditors is unwilling to restore the purchasing power of the dollar to an honest level, where the debts were contracted. They want the dollar to stay dear and commodities cheap. The little group of international bankers who gamble in international securities and currencies want our dollar to the want to the collar to the contract of th to be worth more in exchange for foreign currencies. And so they are horrified when we propose to make our dollar worth less and our commodities worth more.

But the masses of people—the farmers and other producers of commodities and the laboring people, who depend upon the pro-duction of commodities—want dollars cheap and commodities high. Laboring people in the cities can find employment at profitable wages when the factories get high prices for their prodprontable wages when the lactories get high prices for their prod-ucts. When money is plentiful and cheap everybody makes money and everybody is happy. Whose welfare is to be paramount in this country, the masses of our citizenship or a little clique of international bankers who gamble in international currencies? Congress has a terrific responsibility resting upon it if it pro-longs the depression by casting aside the Goldsborough bill and refuses to exercise its constitutional powers and fulfill its obligation to provide for a stable currency—to provide an honest dollar. The second measure which Congress should enact into law before adjournment likewise deals with fundamentals. Something must be done to restore the farm price level to a parity with other groups. The McNary-Fulmer bill now pending on the Senate Calendar goes to the heart of this problem by providing plans for getting rid of the farm surpluses which now pile up in our domestic markets, depriving our farmers of the benefits from the tariff on these products, by forcing domestic prices down to the level of the world prices.

The McNary-Fulmer bill amends the agricultural marketing act making it mandatory upon the Federal Farm Board to put into operation either the equalization-fee plan, the export-debenture operation either the equalization-fee plan, the export-debenture plan, or the domestic allotment plan, whenever the board finds certain conditions to exist. Whenever farm crops are selling below the cost of production, or whenever there is a seasonal or year's total surplus above domestic requirements, or above the requirements for orderly marketing, the board is required to put into effect one or all of these three plans.

All three plars are directed toward obtaining for farm products prices which will at least return the cost of production and as much more beyond that amount as supply and demand justify. All three provide an automatic check on overproduction. All three give the American farmer the benefit of the American market and give to him the control of his marketing system.

Each of these plans has been indorsed in principle by eminent economists. They have the approval of organized agriculture, The responsibility rests squarely upon Congress to apply the remedy.

The third measure which Congress should approve for the relief of agriculture before it adjourns is an emergency measure to get rid of the huge surpluses of farm products which have accumulated. There are markets abroad for these products if they could be sold on liberal credit terms, but the cooperatives and private traders are not financially able to supply such terms, and so the world goes hungry for our surpluses.

We ask the Congress to authorize the allocation of whatever funds are necessary from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the export of surpluses of wheat, cotton, tobacco, wool, mohair, and other farm products, and to distribute surplus wheat to the destitute and unemployed in such a manner as not to adversely affect the domestic market. This week we presented an relief bills to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and to the House Committee on Ways and Means.

This is an emergency measure. If we are to get rid of the sur-pluses immediately so that they will be out of the way when the new crops come on the market later in the year, we must have prompt action.

appeal for the inclusion of this proposal in the Wagner and Garn

There are other measures which might well be passed for the aid of agriculture, but I repeat that we must have at least these three if anything like parity and prosperity are to be restored to

We are told that what the country needs is confidence, that a restoration of confidence is all that is needed to stop the forces of depression and restore prosperity to this country. My friends, confidence can not be restored by talking about it. We must give the people something in which to have confidence.

How can the farmers have confidence when farm prices are going down, down, down, further and further below the cost of production? How can they have confidence when they are unable to pay their taxes and interest, and when they are losing their homes? How can they have confidence when a dishonest dollar forces them to pay back from three to five times as much as they borrowed in terms of commodities? How can they have confidence when the responsible leaders in government who are clothed with the power to act to bring them relief ignore their desperate condition and do nothing fundamental to bring them real relief?

when the leadership of this country does something to really inspire confidence, when it goes to the root of this problem and takes some fundamental steps to remove the causes of the depression, then, and then only, will confidence return to the people. We must get down to the grass roots and restore the prices of agricultural products. Nothing else will avail.

Agriculture's patience is well-nigh exhausted. She has been long-suffering, but she can not longer tolerate delay and inaction. You folks out there on the farms know why. It is because the present condition of agriculture is intolerable.

Congress and the President came to the rescue of foreign governments and granted them a moratorium on their war debts to us, involving billions of dollars of obligations. They came to the rescue of the railroads, the banks, and the industrial corporations by loans out of the Federal Treasury to the tune of $2,000,000,000. They came to the rescue of the banks by passing the Glass-Steagall bill to help them meet the demands upon them for gold and thaw out some of their frozen assets. But what benefits have trickled down through these so-called relief measures to the farmers in the country and to the working people in the cities and towns? Have country and to the working people in the cities and towns? Have they kept farm prices from going down? Have they checked the increasing number of forced sales of farms? Have they relieved unemployment or given people more work? What good is this great pile of gold—78 per cent back of our currency—if it is not put to work for humanity? What good is it? For humanity to worship as children of Israel worshiped the golden calf? If this condition is not relieved, it will destroy our people.

The answers are obvious—farm surpluses pile up; farm prices and purchasing power still decline; unemployment increases; wages decline; property values shrink; despair and dismay seize upon the people, and discontent rises with an ominous tide.

Agriculture and labor can not be made prosperous by relieving the banks, the railroads, and the great corporations alone. Agriculture and labor are not content with picking up the crumbs from Lazarus's table. The way to make the Nation prosperous is to restore the purchasing power of the farmers prosperous is to restore the purchasing power of the farmers prosperous is to restore the purchasing power of the farmers and the workers. All new wealth comes from the farms, the mines, or the forests. Agriculture is our basic industry. When you destroy it you destroy the Nation. The first step toward a new day for the Nation is to restore the buying power of agriculture, our basic industry, upon which the economic welfare of one-half of our population depends.

My friends, we have come to a critical point in the history of our great Nation. The future welfare of our country trembles in the balance. The very future of democratic government may be at stake.

We are in the midst of a great conflict—a conflict that is more bitter, more sinister, more far-reaching in many respects than an armed conflict. It is a struggle for the domination of this country, between the forces of entrenched greed and special privilege on the one hand and the masses of the people on the other hand. Powerful banking and industrial interests who have dominated our financial and economic policies for many years, are determined to maintain their strangle hold upon the economic life of this country and maintain their privileged position, and are unwilling to give agriculture and labor their fair share of the national income. national income national income.

They are the Bourbons of to-day that the masses should sweat and toil for their benefit. They are the ones who, if they continue in control, will destroy democracy and bring on revolution.

A great responsibility rests upon us all in these critical days. Our forefathers were true to the test; they braved the hardships and made the necessary sacrifices to win political freedom. We celebrate this year the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington, who led a brave and intrepid people in a successful battle against tyranny and oppression. A generation later, when this freedom was again imperiled, my grandfather was a close associate and comrade in arms of Gen. Andrew Jackson, the great champion of the people, in his valiant exploit at New Orleans to preserve the freedom so dearly bought.

To-day we also are in a battle for freedom, a battle for economic the freedom so dearly bought.

To-day we also are in a battle for freedom, a battle for economic freedom. That was a battle of principle fought by bullets; this is a battle of principle fought by ballots. That was a battle against political oppression; this is a battle against economic oppression. God has blessed us with the richest nation of the world, with the greatest people. Are we to fall in our stewardship?

Too long have we had faith, hope, and charity. Too long have we displayed these great virtues. At last we find that we must fight for our own and for our Nation to secure the adoption of the golden rule as the first principle of our economic life.

I appeal to you to help me in this great struggle for equality for agriculture. Write and write again to your Congressmen and Senators, demanding action on our three bills.

THE PRESENT CRISIS-ADDRESS BY DR. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, at the annual dinner of the National Industrial Conference Board in New York City, May 19, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler delivered a thoughtcompelling address on the Present Crisis. While I do not subscribe to all Doctor Butler's views, particularly his opposition to the eighteenth amendment, I do consider this address worthy of the careful reading and thoughtful consideration of the Senate and the country, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESENT CRISIS By Nicholas Murray Butler

Surely the time has fully come for perfectly plain speaking on the topic which you have assigned to me. The present crisis, which is much too apparent to require either further description or new emphasis, is threefold. It is economic. It is political. It is moral. To deal with it and to relieve it the various nations or new emphasis, is threefold. It is economic. It is political. It is moral. To deal with it and to relieve it the various nations of the earth are working each in its own way and more or less at haphazard and to a painfully limited extent through international conference and cooperation. The crisis itself is world-wide in all three of its aspects and is plainly international in origin, in manifestation, and in effect. It can only be dealt with and relieved by international action and by the formulation of constructive international policies—and that speedily before a state of complete collapse of our economic and political system is reached. The very best that any nation can do for itself, acting alone, will be pitifully ineffective to bring either quick or permanent relief.

At least five of the greater peoples of the earth have just now passed through or are about to pass through electoral contests upon the results of which hangs the control of government policy for some time to come. Great Britain, Japan, Germany, and France have all recorded their popular vote, and the people of the United States are in the earlier stages of that national political contest which will come to an end in November. With a few noteworthy and outstanding exceptions, chiefly in Great Britain and in Germany, the office-holding and office-seeking class in each one of these nations conduct themselves in substantially the same way while such contests are pending. They repeat sonorous platitudes and announce their undying faith in those unchallenged principles, which can mean nothing, since no one disputes them. Bring them face to face with a difficult and disputed question of public policy, however, which excites difference of opinion, intellectual or emotional, and immediately the office-holding and office-seeking class become shy and tacturn and purringly counsel that we should "wait and see." What wonder is it that the Fascism of Italy and tional, and immediately the office-holding and office-seeking class become shy and taciturn and purringly counsel that we should "wait and see." What wonder is it that the Fascism of Italy and the communism of Russia, with definite convictions and specific programs of public policy, not only smile but laugh aloud when they watch modern democracy in the western nations frightened and tempest-tossed on a stormy sea of political incompetence!

The British people have thus far conducted themselves in much the best fashion. They have been able to lay aside for the most part very old and very deep differences of political opinion and political policy and have done more to bring the conduct of their government to a truly nation-saving and nation-serving point of view than has been accomplished elsewhere. In Japan the ultranationalist and militarist sentiment is just now dominant, and until constructive liberalism regains its place among that people they will be not only in difficulty but in danger.

In Germany the unfamiliar process of self-government, working nationalist and militarist sentiment is just now dominant, and until constructive liberalism regains its place among that people they will be not only in difficulty but in danger.

In Germany the unfamiliar process of self-government, working among a highly cultivated people of great intellectual capacity but restricted political experience, is having difficulties of its own, complicated, of course, by the appalling postwar conditions and problems which the German people find daily staring them in the face. In France there are at work, sometimes quietly, sometimes more obviously in evidence, streams of tendency not dissimilar to those with which we are familiar in the United States, but the French form of government enables changing public opinion there to find expression in public policy much more quickly than is possible with us. Here in the United States we are having political discussions and political contests camoufiaged under party names, which have for some years past been without any but merely nominal significance. The names "Democrat" and "Republican" are used by those who claim them to cloak all sorts and kinds of difference of opinion as to fundamental matters of political philosophy and public policy as well as to cover a multitude of sins. All that these names really signify, however, is that the bearers of the one name are in present official place and power and that the bearers of the other name wish to oust them. In the sense of 1868, of 1876, of 1880, of 1896, or of 1904 there is neither a Democrat Party nor a Republican Party. There are voting groups using these party names, strongly influenced by the names and by the emotions that they arouse, but they are held together in no conceivable unity that is nation-wide on any important points of common conviction and common principle. As a result, the present crisis is more severe in the United States than anywhere else in the world, and it is so, first, because of our apparent unwillingness and inability to adopt or adjust our political methods little value if therapeutics be lacking.

We are drifting steadily, and not so very slowly, toward the edge of a political precipice. We are within a few weeks of the assembling of two great national conventions, each of which will nominate a candidate for the Presidency of the United States and each of which will adopt a declaration of principles, no more precise or definite than is believed to be absolutely necessary, upon which to make appeal to the country. When these nominations and these declarations are made, the voting public will be permitted to choose between them, and in November whatever result is reached will be acclaimed as a great popular triumph on the basis of the winning candidate having been supported by a plurality of a minority of the possible voting public. What are described in the daily press as impressive demonstrations of present-day opinion in favor of one candidate or another are the result of the organized activities of very small groups who manage to stir into participation in primary elections from 20 to 30 per cent of the possible number of voters. The entire working of this political machine would be in the highest degree ludicrous were its results not so tragic and so ominous.

machine would be in the highest degree ludicrous were its results not so tragic and so ominous.

Having recently been in 24 States of the Union and having talked freely everywhere with men and women of every possible point of view, every possible background, and every possible shade of political opinion, it can be said with entire conviction that the thoughtful people of the United States are profoundly alarmed at conditions in Washington and at what is going forward politically in the country; and that, if a chance were given them to follow a real leader of large intelligence, demonstrated administrative capacity, and moral and intellectual courage, they would rise and sweep the whole discredited fabric of our present-day national political machinery into the dust bin. At the moment they feel themselves hemmed in, imprisoned, and unable to do more than complain, discuss their distress, use strong language, and wonder what can possibly happen next. can possibly happen next.

There were goings-on in the House of Representatives a few weeks ago which, whether one liked them or not, had at least the promise of bringing reality back into American politics. It looked for a time as if, without further delay, there really might be coming a political division of our people based on genuine differences of principle and conviction applied to present-day conditions. What appeared then to be possible, although perhaps it was but a flash in the pan, was a division of the American people into those who believe in constructive and progressive liberalism, built upon the foundations of the principles written into the Constitution of the United States, and those who believe that such constructive liberalism is no longer effective and that it must be displaced by some form of social compulsion which would be at the least doctrinaire socialism and might involve much more. Such a division of the American people would be real, would be honest, would be up-to-date, and would deal with fundamental principles.

If it might displace the present artificial, and indeed fraudulent, division into Democratic and Republican Parties, the cloud of incompetence would begin to lift, and we should find ourselves on the road to new and constructive progress by one of the two distinct and different paths which would then be open to us. Constructive liberalism is one alternative and socialism, either mild or extreme, is the other. The nation-wide Democratic Party of Jefferson is dead and does not even pretend to profess his principles or to follow his policies. The nation-wide Republican Party of Lincoln and Blaine and Garfield and McKinley and Roosevelt is dead and contents itself with paying those leaders the poor homage of placing flowers on their graves. What can be done about it? about it?

At the Sixteenth Republican National Convention, held in Chithe Sixteenth Republican National Convention, field in Chicago in 1916, Senator Smoot, of Utah, having before him an invitation from the Progressive National Convention then in session in Chicago, moved the appointment of a committee of five delegates by the chairman of the Republican National Convention to confer with a committee of the convention of the Progressive confer with a committee of the convention of the Progressive Party. The motion was agreed to with substantial unanimity, and most important conferences were held which had very substantial political results. Important as that occasion then seemed, it was wholly insignificant in comparison with the one which now faces us. But politicians, like lawyers, love precedents. It comforts them to think that some one has already done the same thing that they are doing whether if he good or not that they are doing, whether it be good or not.

What a splendid break with tradition it would make if the Twentieth Republican National Convention should take action similar to that taken by the sixteenth and appoint a committee of conference to meet a like committee to be designated by the Democratic National Convention, which is to meet a few days later, and then take a recess to await the results! Suppose further that as a result of such conference there might be substantial agreement on the part of a majority of each of those two bodies as constructive, and a rational program which would make instant appeal to hosts of the most intelligent men and women throughout this land who now call themselves either Democrats or Republicans without being in the least able to tell what those words mean as distinguished from each other. Such liberal party of to-morrow would stand in the same relation to the Democratic and Republican Parties of to-day as the Republican Party once stood in relation to the Whig Party of Clay and Webster and Seward. In opposition to such liberal party there could, and should, rally about a single standard all those who prefer compulsion in any of its forms to the historic principles of civil, economic, and political liberty. nomic, and political liberty.

All those who prefer persecution to tolerance, prohibition to temperance, and control or compulsion of individual thought, individual expression, individual action, and individual possession to liberty would then have a standard to which they might repair, provided they could compose their own differences. This party would at least offer an invitation to the Ku-Kiux Klan, to the prohibitionists, to the doctrinaire socialists, and to the communists, who might then labor to convince the American people of the soundness of their views and offer a coherent program for of the soundness of their views and offer a coherent program for carrying those views into effect.

The question has recently been asked, "What if Booth had missed?" What in that case would Lincoln have done in those years of reconstruction upon which we now look back with so little pride? So I ask, What if something of the kind just described could happen? In such case, how intelligent and how public spirited the party managers would prove themselves to be and what a long, long step forward the American people would quickly take toward peace and renewed prosperity! Great Britain would no longer be alone in her capacity to put national welfare before mere party advantage. before mere party advantage.

Suppose, further, that these two conventions, having risen to such a height, should politely turn their backs upon the office-holding and office-seeking class and draft from the abundant, capable, and intelligent citizenship of this land men to voice these principles with clearness, with definiteness, and with courage and who, when elected to office, would quickly carry them into effect. We must not be ready to grant that stubborn honesty and persistence passed with Grover Cleveland or that the blunt capacity of Theodore Roosevelt for getting things done, with public opinion looking on and applauding, is no more within our reach. Why should we be so constantly required to choose between incompetences that are demonstrated and disastrous and competing incompetences that are suspected and feared? feared?

These questions are quite as searching and quite as far-reaching as is the question "What if Booth had missed?" But Booth did not miss, and, if such a course of action as has been described taken in June, the age of miracles would surely not have passed.

We are, therefore, face to face at this moment with the impera

We are, therefore, face to face at this moment with the imperative obligation resting upon each citizen to exert every influence and to make every effort of which he is capable to bring the existing party organization to which he now belongs to a realization of the crisis which confronts it. The biting satire of the popular musical drama Of Thee I Sing will surely not be wholly lost upon the public mind. Often, indeed, wit and satire will gain the day when argument goes unheeded.

An outstanding characteristic of the existing false and misleading political division in this country is the literally appalling cowardice of officeholders and office seekers in respect to any important question of principle which confronts them. The classic example is, of course, afforded by the eighteenth amendment. If men in public office and candidates for office would vote and speak in respect to this amendment as they really believe, ment. If men in public office and candidates for office would vote and speak in respect to this amendment as they really believe, it would be possible for the country to know where it stands. They do nothing of the sort, however, for, having no convictions on any subject which are deep enough to make difficult or doubtful their election or reelection to office, they endeavor either to say nothing on this outstanding question or to cloak their sayings and deings with an observity deeped sufficient to avoid clienting any nothing on this outstanding question or to cloak their sayings and doings with an obscurity deemed sufficient to avoid alienating any important or numerous voting group. It is quite bad enough to call this revolutionary measure, which has substantially undermined our public morality, an experiment noble in motive, but it is much worse to attempt to cloud the issue of bringing it to an end by all sorts and kinds of proposals in lieu of frankness and straightforwardness, the only purpose of which is to confuse and to delaw.

straightforwardness, the only purpose of which is to confuse and to delay.

Of all these subterfuges, the most preposterous thus far proposed are those made in the name of a former Governor of Virginia and in the name of the present Secretary of Agriculture. The first of these two subterfuges is the suggestion to amend the Constitution to provide a new method of amending the Constitution thereafter, and then when, after the lapse of a sufficient number of years, all that shall have been done, to make use of the new method of constitutional amendment to take some action—as yet undefined—in regard to the crucial and pressing problems which the eighteenth amendment has brought upon the Nation. This proposal has been pretty generally greeted with the contemptuous hilarity which it deserves. The second of these subterfuges is yet more remarkable and still more preposterous. Its birthplace is reputed which it deserves. The second of these subterruges is yet indice remarkable and still more preposterous. Its birthplace is reputed to be Washington, and the geniuses who have rocked its cradle are credibly understood to have been drawn from points as remote as San Francisco, Philadelphia, and Toledo.

A recent Republican State convention in Missouri was induced to favor it. In brief, this is a plan to bring into existence under conditions quite impossible of fulfillment a new constitutional convention, the first since 1787, to deal with the subject of nationconvention, the first since 1787, to deal with the subject of nation-wide prohibition on the wholly illusory assumption that such a constitutional convention could be limited to the consideration of that one topic. When a constitutional convention meets it is its own master. It becomes for the time being the depository of the sovereign power of the people, and, if it should choose to substitute fascism or communism for democracy and to propose such substitution for ratification by the people of the United States, it could do so. The so-called Missouri plan for dealing with the eighteenth amendment is the most stupid and the most mischievous that has yet been proposed by anybody. The condimischievous that has yet been proposed by anybody. The conditions which are attached to its operation make plain its insin-The condicerity. It is, therefore, on that very account, beginning to attract the favorable attention of the trimmers and the pussyfooters. In order to avoid using the contentious word "repeal," members of the office-holding and office-seeking class are joyfully proclaimof the office-holding and office-seeking class are joyfully proclaiming their willingness to vote for a popular referendum concerning the eighteenth amendment, or even for what they call its resubmission to the people of the several States. They must know perfectly well that such a referendum could not be held and, if held, would be, from the point of view of public law, wholly meaningless. It would be an enlarged Literary Digest poll and would certainly show just what the Literary Digest poll has shown, but, having done so, would leave the question precisely where it is now. Similarly the use of the word "resubmission" is intended to confuse and to deceive.

No provision that is in the Constitution can be resubmitted.

to confuse and to deceive.

No provision that is in the Constitution can be resubmitted. It must either be left in or taken out. It can only be taken out by the process of repeal. Therefore, if one does not wish the eighteenth amendment to stay in the Constitution he must vote to take it out. The only possible way to take it out is to submit to the States, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, a very brief and simple proposal to repeal the eighteenth amendment as it now stands, this to be acted upon, as the Constitution provides, by the people of the several States themselves acting through conventions elected for the purpose rather than by the voice of their State legislatures. This would involve a genuine referendum followed by results, rather than an illusory referendum followed by no results.

When the two national nominating conventions meet in June, endum followed by no results.

When the two national nominating conventions meet in June, their delegates will be faced by the necessity of declaring themselves individually and collectively for or against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. If they seek to substitute for this simple declaration any form of camouflage or what is generally known as pussyfooting, or if they should choose to vote down a declaration for repeal, they must be prepared to take the consequences in November, and, believe me, those consequences will be very, very, serious for them.

We are confronted by just the same situation when we come declaration for repeal, they must be prepared to take the consequences in November, and, believe me, those consequences will be very, very, serious for them.

We are confronted by just the same situation when we come to deal with constructive policies for relieving the economic crisis which holds the whole world in its grasp. A point has been reached where pretty much everyone is rhetorically in favor of balancing the budgets of the Nation, of the several States, and of the municipalities. When, however, it comes to the practical question of selecting the expenditures to be reduced or discontinued, then well-organized groups and well-intrenched interests exert themselves with prompt efficiency, each to prevent any substantial alteration in the public provision made for that in which they are directly interested. Just so, everyone assents to the statement that taxes must be increased, at least until the present emergency has been met. The discussion of what taxes shall be increased, however, quickly invites to the field of battle other groups of well-organized and well-intrenched special interests with insistence that, whatever else is taxed, they themselves shall not be. It is quite impossible, therefore, that any officeholder or office seeker of importance should be able to satisfy or to pacify each and all of these contending groups. It begins to look as if the man who is in favor of balancing our budgets would pretty soon have to declare himself in favor of doing this in some definite way and stand or fall by his decision. That would certainly be a great gain for frankness, for honesty, and for the public welfare. The House of Representatives at the moment is almost wholly under the influence of pressure groups, self-seeking and contemptuous of the public interest, and is without any responsible and controlling leadership. It is a pathetic spectacle.

It is absolutely essential that organized raids on the Treasury in the name of war veterans and their families should, despite the cowardice of Congress, be re advantage of, however, by tens of thousands of those who have no claim whatever upon the Public Treasury, but who have organ-ized themselves from time to time in nation-wide fashion to compel Congress to give them doles. The consequence is that we have been treating as a veteran a man whose military service was wholly spent in a training camp at home or in office work at Washington. We are treating as a veteran's widow a woman whom he may have married many years after his military service had come to an end, married many years after his mintary service had come to an end, and we are caring for disability contracted on the battlefields of peace decades after hostilities had ceased. This whole series of happenings is a grave blot on our country's history and a shocking example of the misuse that may be made of the word patriotism when turned to the support of a selfish interest. There is no possible way of continuing the support of the Government of the United States on sound financial and economic grounds unless an end be put, and that quickly, to these literally shocking abuses of extravagance and favoritism.

The expenditures of the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1932 will exceed by more than $1,300,000,000 the expenditures for as recent a fiscal year as 1927, taking no account in either case of appropriations for the debt service. The Budget message for the year 1933 asked appropriations of more than $1,000,000,000, about one-fourth of the total national expenditure, for veterans' pensions and relief. This is 14 years after the World War came to an end. No fewer than 367,000 ex-service men, fully double the number of our total war wounded, have already been granted pensions for disabilities not incurred in any way whatever in connection with war service. We may imagine what is to happen in the near future when it is recalled that some 4,000,000 men were in military service of some sort or other during the Great War. It is estimated that if we go on at the present rate the cost by the year 1945 will amount to the colossal sum of $25.500,000,000, which would equal the total direct cost of the World War to the American people. This sort of thing has certainly got to stop. The expenditures of the Federal Government for the fiscal year which would equal the total direct cost of the World War to the American people. This sort of thing has certainly got to stop.

We are constantly told, and not without some very considerable reason, that our whole economic and industrial system is tottering to its fall and that we must be prepared either for an economic and industrial revolution or at least for some changes in the organization and conduct of our industry and our agriculture that will depart very widely from the long-established practices. Of course, those who have a definite substitute to propose for the system upon which the industry of the western world has been built up for several hundred years are most clamorous for the change and most confident in predicting it. They are especially emphatic in insisting that capitalism is bankrupt and must either abdicate the place of authority which it has long held or be forcibly ejected therefrom.

To speak bluntly, there is not, and never has been, any such be forcibly ejected therefrom.

To speak bluntly, there is not, and never has been, any such economic and industrial system as capitalism. This is a term of reproach which has been invented by the enemies of the existing economic and industrial system for their own tactical and psychological purposes. Capital is not, and never has been, a principle of industrial organization. It is a by-product and a result of the system which is civil, economic, and political liberty. The true name for the principle which underlies the institutions of the western world is not capitalism but liberty. Capital, let it be repeated, is an incident, not a principle, and it is the business of lovers of liberty to see that its opportunities and privileges are not abused. Just here is the real point at issue in the world today. On the one side stands liberty with hundreds of years of splendid achievement to its credit, and on the other side stand its critics and its enemies, urging the substitution for it of compulcritics and its enemies, urging the substitution for it of compul-sion in some one of compulsion's various forms. These include, sion in some one of compulsion's various forms. These include, of course, doctrinaire socialism, communism, and despotism. The answer which forward-facing believers in liberty make, and must continue to make, is that the principles upon which the western world has been built up, and upon which it now rests, are sound but capable of abuse and that it is the lovers of liberty, and not the enemies of liberty, to whom we must turn for the correction of those abuses. Selfishness, greed, grasping for privilege, are pretty common and widespread in this human nature of ours and, while we have seen many illustrations of their horrid action in the while we have seen many illustrations of their horrid action in the field of liberty, we may be pretty sure that they would not disappear as traits of human nature were compulsion to take liberty's

Therefore, the fundamental and far-reaching question is: Can believers in liberty show themselves so competent, so intelligent, and so courageous that they will put an end to grave and suspicious abuses and guard against the repetition and multiplication of such abuses in the future? Our society, which long rested upon a basis which was almost exclusively one of competition, has now passed over to a basis which is essentially one of cooperation. This is as true of men as it is of nations. Laisserfaire has had its day and has served its purpose. We have not yet readjusted our modes of thinking, our legal theories, and our political axioms to these new conditions. Jurists like Justice Holmes and Justice Cardozo have more than once taken occasion to point the Justice Cardozo have more than once taken occasion to point the way toward such reconstruction or reapplication of our customary law as would enable us to make progress toward these new ends. We do not ask, and need not ask, the individual citizen to forego or even to limit his individuality. What we ask him to do is to lift his individuality to a higher plane and to make public service, social usefulness, the aim of his endeavors, and to leave off solely social usefulness, the aim of his endeavors, and to leave off solely seeking private profit at the constant expense of the public weal. This indeed is the course of action which the lover of liberty proposes as alternative to the surrender of liberty or to its overturn. Here it is quite futile to expect the office-holding and office-seeking class to lead the way. This must be done by those captains of human effort and those forward-looking men who, whether in agriculture, in industry, or in professional life, occupy posts and are charged with responsibility which give them opportunity and invitation to offer leadership in this vital matter.

Of the moral aspect of the present crisis, not so much is said as should be said. It is quite as much weakness of character and defect of temperament as limitation of intelligence which has plunged the world, particularly the American world, into the gloom and despair which now envelop it. Men who have been accustomed to exercise well-nigh undisputed authority in industry, in transportation, and in finance, find that they have not only destroyed public confidence but that they have lost confidence in themselves. This is why they sit in so great numbers wringing their hands and waiting for some change for the better. Those of us who are confirmed and incorrigible optimists refuse to be discouraged and disheartened even by such happenings as these. We maintain our fundamental faith in human nature and in the ability and capacity of our own people to take or to compel such public action as will bring this present crisis to an end, as well as make it an example never to be followed. This faith, however, must be accompanied by works. There is no use in rhetorically proclaiming our belief in the continuance and prosperity of the American Populity unless me are intellectually and perity of the American Republic unless we are intellectually and morally able to make sure that its principles are continuing and that its peoples are made prosperous.

morally able to make sure that its principles are continuing and that its peoples are made prosperous.

The Great War was the burning up of a phenomenal proportion of the wealth of the world, and it rocked the whole social, economic, and political fabric to its very foundations. We may be a generation or several generations in putting the final effects of this great cataclysm wholly behind us, but we need not lose either faith or courage on that account. The main thing is to lay hold on the fundamental principles of civil, economic, and political liberty, refuse to accept any form of compulsion as a substitute for them, and in our industry and finance, as in our politics, to require clear thinking, administrative capacity, and outspoken moral courage, to the end that liberty may be strengthened, developed, and justly applied in new and splendid ways that will make compulsion hide its head forever.

It is well-nigh 90 years since James Russell Lowell wrote his well-known and truly moving poem having as its title "The Present Crisis," the same that has been proposed for this address. Are not his lines of long ago prophetic of the world in which we live and of the larger world out upon which we look in what should be a spirit of fullest understanding and cooperation?

"For mankind are one in spirit,

"For mankind are one in spirit, And an instinct bears along, Round the earth's electric circle, The swift flash of right or wrong.

In the gain or loss of one race All the rest have equal claim."

PROHIBITION-LETTER OF DR. GORDON FERRIE HULL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, some time ago the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] placed in the RECORD a letter from Doctor Hopkins, president of Dartmouth College, in opposition to the eighteenth amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an open letter favoring prohibition from a member of the faculty of Dartmouth College, the letter being addressed to President Hopkins and the member of the faculty being Dr. Gordon Ferrie Hull.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN OPEN LETTER TO President HOPKINS:

When your first letter in regard to prohibition appeared, many members of the faculty felt that it was called forth by the re-peated urging of those who were carrying on a most active propamembers of the faculty felt that it was called forth by the repeated urging of those who were carrying on a most active propaganda in order to influence the findings of the Wickersham commission. Out of our loyalty to the college and a great personal loyalty to you we did not challenge your views on that occasion. Your letter which has just appeared in the Dartmouth, however, makes it clear that we must choose between these loyalties and those which we bear to the laws of the land and to our own convictions. While I have no authorization whatever to speak for the faculty, I believe I voice the views of many in setting forth my own. It is my opinion that you have vastly overemphasized the evil effects of prohibition without presenting its virtues, that you have proposed no constructive policies, that you have falled to face the problem of alcohol, that you have neglected to point out that those who purchase liquor, if your charge be true, are those who "provide a subsidy for the underworld by which criminals are being given unprecedented power and by which viciousness is being increasingly protected."

You express a great concern for the next generation but it is the present generation, the young men and women of to-day, who presumably are looking to us for guidance. If we bring before them the clear reasons for the world-wide and age-long fight against alcohol, the next generation, though less in need of better guides, will find plenty available.

I propose that the problem of alcohol be made one for discussion in the faculty meeting or elsewhere, a discussion in which pride of opinion and oratorical pyrotechnics would have no place, in which scientific facts would be stressed and the sincerest effort be made to find a better solution, if any exists, of the problem of alcohol.

POSITION OF PROFESSOR HULL ON PROHIBITION REPEAL

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Hartford Courant of April 29, 1932, entitled "The Dartmouth Faculty Polled." I ask that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD immediately following the letter of Professor Hull, which has been ordered printed in the RECORD on the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

THE DARTMOUTH FACULTY POLLED

In replying through the columns of the Daily Dartmouth to President Hopkins's forthright objections to the eighteenth amendment, as contained in his statement to Senator Bingham, Prof. Gordon Ferrie Hull said: "While I have no authorization whatment, as contained in his statement to Senator Bingham, Prof. Gordon Ferrie Hull said: "While I have no authorization whatever to speak for the faculty, I believe I voice the views of many in setting forth my own." He sharply but courteously challenged President Hopkins's advocacy of repeal and the return of the question to the States while upholding his own faith in the amendment. With commendable journalistic enterprise the Daily Dartmouth promptly undertook to ascertain through a referendum whether or not Professor Hull's opinions were sustained by the faculty. The results show that of 219 of the 276 members voting, 186 definitely oppose national prohibition and want the amendment repealed, while only 30 favor its retention.

Those who question the accuracy of the Literary Digest poll should find occasion for reflection in these returns. It can not here be charged that ballots were sent only to known wets, that the count was dishonest, or that the drys refrained from votting. Every member of the faculty had a fair and equal chance to record his opinion. The verdict is not one that can be ignored or laughed off as having no particular significance. It represents the sober and intelligent judgment of men deeply concerned with the Nation's social and economic problems. It can not be dismissed by the usual assertions of prohibitionists that those who do not agree with them are lacking in moral perceptions, place amendment does not afford the right approach to a satisfactory disposition of the liquor question.

The ballots provided space for individual comment, and some of these comments are highly illuminating, as, for instance: "I am for temperance and law observance, both of which are defeated by the present law." "I honestly consider the eighteenth amendment as the most barbaric crime against decency and civilization in all history." "Prohibition is a tyranny which withers us gastronomically, morally, and spiritually." "Prohibition, in my estimation, has resulted in evils far greater than those it tried to correct." "Think I'd be for prohibition if it could be enforced. I fear the attempt to enforce the law is a dismal failure, putting a premium on bootlegging and lawlessness all along the line." "I fear the attempt to enforce the law is a dismal failure, putting a premium on bootlegging and lawlessness all along the line." "I am against prohibition because under the present conditions we are losing rapidly the great gains toward temperance made in the last hundred years." "I consider the eighteenth amendment as the most pernicious single piece of legislation ever enacted." "The American people should be trusted to regulate their personal habits as people are in other countries." "I am against prohibition and in favor of genuine temperance in the use of alcohol and in the use of outlooks about it." in the use of opinions about it."

in the use of opinions about it."

In its own comment on the poll the Daily Dartmouth says: "On nearly all the ballots on which opinions had been penciled we found that opposition to prohibition was based on undebatable evidence of the amendment having harmed the cause of true temperance instead of forwarding it. Dartmouth faculty members are absolutely not in favor of student drinking, nor can any twist or contortion of the facts be interpreted to suggest that they are."

Part the faculty muits expressely is not in favor of undertaking are." or contortion of the facts be interpreted to suggest that they are." But the faculty quite obviously is not in favor of undertaking to deny the student body any opportunity for freedom of choice in a matter that concerns their personal liberty. It is in favor of the individual being permitted to exercise his own self-control as against the attempt to impose upon him total abstinence by legal compulsions, which breed a natural resentment. As one member of the faculty puts it, "We need to extend the frontiers of human freedom."

PROHIBITION-ARTICLE BY SENATOR SHEPPARD

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of March 20, 1932, which was prepared by me at the request of that newspaper, and which is an analysis of the vote in the House of Representatives on the motion a few months ago to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the proposal to submit a constitutional amendment changing the eighteenth

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR THE DRYS

By Morris Sheppard, Senator from Texas

I am requested by the New York Times to present an analysis of I am requested by the New York Thies to present an analysis of the recent vote in the House of Representatives on the wet motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the proposal to submit a constitutional amendment changing the eighteenth amendment so as to remit the question of prohibition to State control. It will be noted that in the voting last Monday there were no votes at all for the wet motion from 14 States, namely, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Utah, and Vermont.

Thirteen of this number of States alone could prevent the ratification of a constitutional amendment modifying or repealing the sighteenth amendment amendment proposed amendment.

eighteenth amendment, even if such proposed amendment were submitted to the States.

submitted to the States.

In each of 9 additional States only 1 vote was cast for the motion, namely, Alabama, with a total of 10 votes in the House; Iowa, with a total of 11; Kentucky, with a total of 11; Nebraska, with a total of 6; North Carolina, with a total of 10; Oregon, with a total of 3; South Carolina, with a total of 7; South Dakota, with a total of 3; and Tennessee, with a total of 10.

It can not be doubted that these nine States would vote against the ratification of a constitutional amendment modifying or repealing the eighteenth amendment. Add these States to the 14 first.

ing the eighteenth amendment. Add these States to the 14 first mentioned and we have a solid phalanx of 23 States, only 1 less than half the total number of the 48 States in the Union, against any change in the eighteenth amendment, when only 13 States are necessary to prevent the change.

In addition to the above-mentioned 23 States, the States in which a majority of their respective delegations voted against the wet motion, were as follows: Indiana, 8 against, 5 for; Missouri, 11 against, 5 for; Texas, 14 against, 3 for; Virginia, 6 against, 3 for; West Virginia, 4 against,

In four of the last-mentioned States the proportion of dry votes over wet was, respectively: Texas, 5 to 1; Missouri, more than 2 to 1; West Virginia, 2 to 1; Virginia, 2 to 1.

Surely these four States could also be counted upon to vote against the ratification of an amendment changing or abolishing the eighteenth amendment, and it is more than an even chance that Indiana would not vote otherwise. Not counting Indiana, however, this makes a total of 27 States, or more than half the States of the Union, known to be dry, which may safely be counted against weakening or repealing the eighteenth amend-

In the following States the vote on the motion was evenly divided, namely:

Minnesota, 5 for, 5 against; Montana, 1 for, 1 against; Louisiana, 4 for, 4 against.

In my judgment, there is more than an even chance that Montana, Minnesota, and Louisiana would vote against the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment, and the vote indicated an even chance in Pennsylvania.

In the following seven States the entire delegations voted for the wet motion, namely: Arizona, Connecticut, Nevada, New Mexico, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Wyoming. No one familiar with conditions would concede more than three of these States as certain to vote for a constitutional amendment changing or repealing the eighteenth amendment, namely, Connecticut, Rhode Ising the eighteenth amendment, namely, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Jersey.

Thus 39 States are accounted for.

Among the nine States remaining the vote was as follows:
California, 7 for, 4 against; Illinois, 17 for, 9 against; Massachusetts, 13 for, 3 against; Maryland, 5 for, 1 against; Michigan, 9 for, 4 against; New York, 32 for, 10 against; Ohio, 13 for, 9 against; Washington. 3 for, 2 against; Wisconsin, 9 for, 2 against.

Of these States Michigan, Ohio, and Washington could by no means be considered as certain to vote for the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment.

tion of the eighteenth amendment

tion of the eighteenth amendment.

According to this analysis, the only States which the wets could count upon to vote against the eighteenth amendment in case of the submission of the issue to the States would be Wisconsin, New York, Maryland, Massachusetts, Illinois, California, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

Conceding to the wets, however, all the States which voted solidly on March 14 for the wet motion, the States evenly divided and the States having a majority of Congressmen voting for the motion, there is a maximum of only 20 States upon which the wets could count to support a modification or repeal of the eighteenth amendment in the event the issue were submitted to them.

wers could count to support a modification of repeal of the eight-eenth amendment in the event the issue were submitted to them. This number is just two more than one-half the number re-quired by the Constitution for such modification or repeal. The Constitution requires ratification by three-quarters of the States, to wit, 38, to bring about any change or repeal of the eighteenth amendment, after submission in due course.

How the wets can extract any comfort from this situation it is difficult to see. It is true that in the vote taken a few drys voted for the motion but so few as not to change the generally accepted view that the issue was really a wet and dry issue.

Moral, law-abiding America will continue to support prohibition. As long as wet dollars can be found to finance wet propaganda we shall have an artificial revival of the wet movement in every Congress. There is nothing new in the present situation except the new money of a few easy marks among the wealthy wets.

There is no more likelihood of repealing the eighteenth amendment than of repealing the Federal Constitution itself. It adds another Bill of Rights to that great instrument—a Bill of Rights deserving to rank with the other charters of justice and security. deserving to rank with the other charters of justice and security.

"THE MINORITY WET SPOTS

They tell us that in spite of prohibition we have bootleggers, speak-easies, gangsters, rum-runners, racketeers. So we do in spots, and we know what spots—the minority wet spots. The remedy for these spots is not less prohibition but more prohibition. Prohibition will heal such spots when the people inhabiting them resolve to uphold the Constitution and the law, to exercise the first duties of citizenship. That they are beginning to do so is shown by the fact that the most powerful criminal and head gangster of the time is now in durance vile.

The wets are constantly pointing out the evil operations of the outlawed liquor traffic, the tragedies and crimes, and dissipations in its sinister train. And yet their remedy is not greater restriction, not a more effective application of prohibition. It is to give this criminal trade a legal status, more power for evil, and a wider sway for dangerous and destructive activities.

Another curious instance of wet logic, or reason on a log is the sway for dangerous and destructive activities.

Another curious instance of wet logic, or reason on a jag, is the contention for so-called light wine and beer by an act of Congress. That is by a change in the Volstead Act permitting these intoxicants in the face of the fact that the eighteenth amendment prohibits intoxicants. The wets mean wine and beer that intoxicate when they speak of altering the Volstead Act so as to authorize these beverages. Nothing less will satisfy them.

The proponents of wine and beer are deceiving the thirsty multitudes of the moist minority on the one side, the damp Santa Clauses on the other. As long as the Supreme Court of the United States retains its integrity (and who will say that this will not be Clauses on the other. As long as the Supreme Court of the United States retains its integrity (and who will say that this will not be forever?) any enactment for intoxicating liquor of any kind—wine, beer, whisky, ale, or anything else—will be as improbable of recognition and sustainment while the eighteenth amendment is in effect (and in my judgment that amendment is as everlasting as the Constitution itself) as would be any other statute contravening any other provision of the Federal Constitution.

Prohibition will remain triumphant and intact because it is rooted in the eternal obligation resting on society to protect and guard all human life by every agency at its command.

Prohibition will continue to survive every whirlwind and to ride out every storm.

out every storm.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR STEPHENS BEFORE MISSISSIPPI STATE CON-VENTION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the Record an address delivered by my colleague the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens] before the State convention of Mississippi, on the 7th instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The Nation is in a sad plight. Such conditions were never present before. Within the past three years new records have been made—records in bank failures, in business failures, in declines in commodity and security values, in opportunities for making profits, in unemployment.

As always happens in times of distress and disturbed conditions, suggestions—and often demands—are being made that run counter to political principles and policies under which the life of the Nation largely has been lived. Threats are made to steer the ship of state into an uncharted sea—one that has rocks and reefs and shoals that would cause wreck and ruin.

In this situation, it is natural that dissatisfaction should be volced. It is not strange that political doctrines which have never found much favor here should now have an increasing number of adherents. Arguments are made for communism and socialism. The history of those doctrines, wherever they have been applied, carry no message of hope to the suffering millions.

The remedy can not be found in changing our form of Government, nor in the adoption of new political principles. In the midst of this smothering political confusion, there is a way out. Truth is ageless. It never dies. And it retains its vitality through all the years. The cure for all the ills of the time can be had by a return to certain political principles and policies that were recognized by the founders of the Republic and which became the principles and policies of a great political party.

Never was a wiser and more far-seeing body of men gathered together than those who wrote the Constitution. In 81 days they wrote 89 sentences. In 400 hours of deliberation they produced a document of 4,000 words. They laid the foundation for a great Republic. They gave full recognition to "the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." In doing so, they bequeathed to the people an abundant legacy of problems.

and humane, it rebukes the arrogant, cherishes honor, and sympathizes with the humble. It asks nothing but what it concedes; it concedes nothing but what it demands. Destructive only of despotism, it is the sole conservator of liberty, labor, and property. It is the sentiment of freedom, of equal rights, and equal obligations. It is a noble, a sublime sentiment which expands our affections, enlarges the circle of our sympathies, and elevates the soul of man. Yes; it is an ennobling principle."

Thomas Jefferson was the apostle of Democracy. Listen to some of his words: "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none"; "Equal and exact justice to all men"; "Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations"; "Encouragement of agriculture and of commerce as its handmaid"; "Economy in the public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened"; "Sacred preservation of the public faith." and humane, it rebukes the arrogant, cherishes honor, and sym-

There are charities which gladden life. There are principles that are verities, that underlie stable government, that are the only promise of stable government among a free people. These may be found among the principles of democracy. And they hold the creative power and integrating energy for great and happy living so far as they may come from political sources. As the sun washes darkness off the face of the earth, so will the principles of democracy, fully and rightly applied, dispel the gloom and distress that to-day cover our Nation.

There is nothing in the history of the administrations when the White House was occupied by a Democrat that would bring a blush of shame to the most sensitive. It is all a record unmarred by dishonesty. There are no strains of graft or corruption to be found. Integrity has stood guard at its door. Public office was recognized as a public trust. Laws were enacted and policies announced which gave recognition to the rights of men.

We are in the midst of a mechanized, industrial civilization. Its

We are in the midst of a mechanized, industrial civilization. Its complexities are manifold. But the human problem is ever the complexities are manifold. But the human problem is ever the same. Civilization is the art of noble and progressive communal living. Politics, as it relates to internal affairs, is essentially a practical problem of administration and of adjusting the conflicting interests of individuals and groups. The profitable production and distribution of commodities is a necessary part of our social existence. It is recognized that the self-supporting ability of every citizen is the greatest asset of a nation. The natural resources are to be protected and developed.

The central, essential task of the present is to correct the economic maladjustment that exists, and to return to those principles and policies which were foremost in the thoughts of men when the Nation was born. The digits of democracy point out the objects of government and the path we should travel. Nothing has transpired in the thought of the world or in the experience of the Nation which suggests the abandonment of native, fundamental, historic, and democratic ideals upon which the Government was founded.

Four years ago the Republicans nominated Herbert Hoover.

Four years ago the Republicans nominated Herbert Hoover. By the use of a recent invention a man may be made to seem 7 miles tall and the size of his body may be magnified six thousand times. In the last campaign the Republican candidate was almost as greatly magnified. We were told that he was "the man of the hour"; that to his glance all hidden things stone man of the hour "; that to his glance all hidden things stone man of the hour "; that to his glance all hidden things stone man of the hour "; that the slope could give new energy and increased prosplain; that he alone could give new energy and increased pros-perity to the people; that his defeat would mean that the Nation would die; that his strength of mind, experience, and knowledge of world affairs were such that his election would bring an era of world ahars were such that his election would bring an era of prosperity, progress, and happiness such as man had never before dreamed of.

It was a bewitching, an entrancing picture. The candidate himself must have been captivated by it. The Master said, "The poor ye have with you always." The candidate promised to abolish

The pathos of life is the disproportion between the promise and the reality.

What is the record? Poverty has not been abolished. The present situation makes one's eyes dim with tears, one's brain reel around as when a whirlpool boils; and black horror fills the mind. The sable wings of poverty cover the land. Hollow-eyed hunger is in every section. Unemployment has become a matter of grave concern politically as well as financially. Desperation

The record of this administration can be measured only by the line of confusion and sounded only by the plummet of emptiness. It is lean to the point of emaciation in those things that are required to make a nation prosperous, the people happy and contented.

Desperate efforts are being made by the Republicans to defend this record. In a lengthy defense that was made recently, this language was used: "The burden has left its mark on him. He is a changed man. Years ago he usually wore blue, To-day he is in a brown business suit." In defending this record, there was no sense in describing the color of his clothes. Many of the defenses were as silly as this. The writer might have called attention to the change in the color of the garb of the Nation. It is now wearing deep mourning. The people realize that the Nation is hovering on the brink of a chasm, an abyss that threatens to swallow us. What has produced this dreadful situation? There are many contributing factors, but I shall not attempt to discuss them all. contributing factors, but I shall not attempt to discuss them all.

contributing factors, but I shall not attempt to discuss them all.

One is the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. The biggest brake on financial recovery is high tariffs that stifie the flow of commerce and the exchange of wealth. President Hoover does not agree with the thought. In a recent veto message, he said, "There never has been a time in the history of the United States when tariff protection was more essential to the welfare of the American people than at present."

Only by restoring the basic industries to prosperity can the Nation prosper. An international market is required. The values of many of our products are governed by their values in a world market. Prices decline as demand lessens. Our high tariff laws have brought retaliatory tariffs in other nations. The results are very hurtful. If a nation can not sell, it can not buy. So prices fall; unemployment results. The volume of unemployment is due very largely to inability to dispose of the products of the Nation in the world markets in sufficient quantities and at adequate prices. in the

It has been truly said that commerce feeds millions of mouths where philanthropy feeds but hundreds, that it clothes millions of the naked where philanthropy clothes scores. The channels of trade must be reopened. The United States is not a self-contained entity. There must be international cooperation.

Another cause of our financial distress is the wild orgy of speculation. From the White House, the Treasury, and the Commerce Department came frequent statements that created the impression that these percentages have the control of th Department came frequent statements that created the impression that there were sound values behind stocks and securities. The public was told that business conditions would begin to improve. The President even stated that the upturn would begin May 1, 1930. Acting on these assurances, coming from such high sources, vast sums of money were used for speculation rather than productive purposes. The Federal reserve system failed to serve its intended purpose. The law creating it is a splendid one. But the validity and beneficence of a law deepeds in a large way on its the validity and beneficence of a law depends in a large way on its administration. Nothing has helped more to cause the present financial distress.

Statements from the Treasury have been incorrect and misleading. Grave mistakes have been made. On many pages of the record may be found instances of injustice, bad judgment, and departure from principles and policies that the wisdom of the rs have approved. A severe penalty is now being paid for these years n things.

We must get back to the fundamental principles of democracy We must get back to the fundamental principles of democracy. We must learn anew that it is both unsafe and unfair to load the people down with unnecessary taxes. We must remember the expression of the Supreme Court that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." Burdens of taxation have almost brought destruction. Let us go back to the slogan of 1884: Retrenchment and reform. In balancing the Budget, the Budget must be confined to essentials.

They made up attempt to state in detail the legislation that fined to essentials.

I have made no attempt to state in detail the legislation that I believe will be required. I have referred only to the principles that should control action.

In this hour of unrest, uncertainty, want, idleness, extravagance, and injustice we should realize that the course must be changed. The future of the Nation will depend upon doing the right things in the right way. The entreaty of Amos, the ancient prophet, was never more needed than in our day, "But let justice run down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream."

In my judgment the people are becoming aroused to the situation. They are going to demand a change. All signs now point to a victory for our party this fall. If we meet with defeat, it will be because of our own action. A sane, sensible platform and a candidate who will command the confidence and respect of the people will insure victory. We shall again see a Democrat in people will insure victory. We shall again see a Democrat in the White House—the White House which was occupied by those great men whose memories we cherish—Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson

ADDRESS ON NATIONAL PROHIBITION BY SENATOR WAGNER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have an interesting and instructive address on prohibition printed in the RECORD. It was delivered by my colleague, Senator Wagner, at a meeting in Buffalo, N. Y., May 20, 1932.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and fellow citizens, a single aim has brought us all here together to-night. We desire to make it as plain as the English language will permit that it is our united purpose to bring to a rapid conclusion the dismal and futile experiment with national prohibition. We see no room for equivocation; no permanence in halfway measures; no hope in compromise.

For a dozen years the American people have been shackled with the eighteenth amendment, impotent to defend themselver against the corruption, hypocrisy, intemperance, and criminality which have from its inception accompanied the prohibition adventure. We want to become free again, free to control the liquor traffic, free to restrain it, regulate and tax it. We can achieve that freedom only by restoring the temperance problem to the States through the complete repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I am fully aware that some men in high places are still speaking of revising or modifying the eighteenth amendment. Apparently they would return just a little of the power over the liquor problem to the States. They would continue to surrender the rest of it to the Federal Government.

There are a number of proposals pending in Congress which rest of it to the States. They would continue to surrencer the rest of it to the Federal Government.

There are a number of proposals pending in Congress which sound like repeal of the eighteenth amendment, but on close reading you find that they have left the prohibition problem again in the hands of the Federal Government. In my judgment, these proposals are wrong in principle. If we have learned anything from our bitter experience, it is that no single Federal standard will satisfy the widely diversified communities which make up the United States. I am convinced that that is not the kind of change the American people now favor. With true instinct for the realities of government, they want to see the prohibition experiment completely divorced from the Federal Government. The only safe and certain way of accomplishing that is to write into the Constitution these 13 words "The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed." That is the resolution I have proposed in the Senate. Let us pause a moment to consider why public sentiment in the United States has become so overwhelmingly opposed to the continuance of the unhappy experiment in national prohibition. The answer is to be found in the logic of events, in the common sense of experience.

The whole Nation is to-day courageously battling against the most violent depression that has ever visited this country. Business is almost at a standstill; the wheels of industry are slient; ness is almost at a standstill; the wheels of industry are silent; 8,000,000 men and women are wearily plodding the highways and byways in search of a job; their backs are bowed down with the burden of prolonged unemployment; their hearts are weighted with fear and anxiety for their wives and their children. In addition the Volstead Act is hanging like a millistone about their necks and is dragging them down further into the bog of unemployment. Hundreds of thousands of new jobs would open instantaneously if Congress but took the necessary action to legalize wine and beer. In these days of national stress, of widespread want, what a blessing that would be. The failure of Congress to take that action is not only unintelligible but unforgivable. It is daily making countless recruits for the cause of repeal.

For the past two months Congress has been struggling with the countiess recruits for the cause of repeal.

For the past two months Congress has been struggling with the new tax bill. It has searched far and wide for new sources of revenue with which to balance the National Budget. All the time that the search was in progress there flowed within view of Congress a flood of all manner of intoxicating beverages which proceeded on its way unregulated and untaxed for the special enrichment of the racketeer. The legalization and taxation of light wine and beer would alone do more to balance the Budget than all of the nulsance taxes that have been proposed in the pending revenue bill. Now, in the name of all that is reasonable, why should we not collect a revenue of more than $300,000,000 from an industry which can bear it and to that extent relieve the business man who is fighting for his financial life against the present depression. As long as Congress falls to do so it is in effect paying a subsidy out of the National Treasury to the bootlegger.

The business depression and the national deficit are the latest but by no means the only facts which have made clear to the general public the necessity of abandoning the policy of national prohibition.

Since 1920 we have patiently watch the unfolding of this ill-starred experiment. During that time we saw our citizens killed by armed enforcement officers; we endured the violation of the privacy of our homes; we observed the saloon converted into a speak-easy; we viewed the rise of a new and powerful criminal class enjoying a monopoly of liquor traffic, amply financed and thoroughly organized, ready to lend a hand in the perpetration of every crime on the calendar; we saw enforcement officials corrupted with bribery; citizens demoralized with hypocrisy; we saw crime organized into a business trust with the eighteenth amendment as its charter.

I do not doubt the sincerity of those who advocate the continuance of prohibition. Not for a moment do I question that they are prompted by motives of patriotism. But I declare they do not see the facts. They are mistaking the promise of prohibition for the performance. The American people would gladly forego the jobs that repeal would make available, would gladly dispense with the revenue if national prohibition were a success. The fact, howover, is that every hope entertained by the friends of prohibition has been shattered; every fear anticipated by its opponents has been realized a thousandfold.

The liquor supply has not been reduced; temperance has not been promoted, a single standard for the Nation has not been achieved. That is the judgment of every impartial investigator of the facts of prohibition. That is the official conclusion of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement, headed by the venerable Mr. Wickersham.

of the facts of prohibition. That is the official conclusion of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement, headed by the venerable Mr. Wickersham.

Ever since the report of that commission was published there has been no need for debating the proposition that prohibition has completely and irretrievably collapsed.

No friend of prohibition can with justice complain that the experiment has not had a fair trial. To enforce the Volstead Act we employed a bigger organization than the United States has ever assembled for the enforcement of any criminal statute. We arrested our citizens by the hundred thousand. We poisoned the alcohol we knew would reach our people. We passed more severe laws, hired more men, spent more money to satisfy every wish and every whim of the advocates of prohibition. And what has been the net result? Growing intemperance, corruption the like of which this country has never seen, and a general lawlessness which is undermining the very foundations of government.

Once again the American pejople have learned the all-important Democratic lesson that the enforceability of a law depends upon the support it receives from public opinion. To this day no means have yet been invented of forcing an unpopular law down the throats of a liberty-loving people. Apply that principle to the prohibition situation and you will discover why, in the contest between that law and its violation, the Government has lost.

You can not by a governmental edict uproot the habits of has lost.

You can not by a governmental edict uproot the habits of a lifetime. You can not by legislative decree persuade the people of this country that a glass of refreshing beer is wicked.

I can not make it too plain, however, that it is not liquor which concerns us. We are concerned with the sanctity of the Constitution, which is daily desecrated. We are concerned with the majesty of the law, which is flagrantly defled. We are concerned for the supremacy of government, which is openly challenged. We are concerned for the very civilization we have cultivated if we continue to widen the breach between the citizen and his Government.

The choice before the American people is not whether we should have a liquor traffic or not. The only alternative is whether we shall have a flourishing bootleg industry, free of regulation, free of taxation, growing rich and powerful under the protecting wing of the eighteenth amendment, or whether we shall have a traffic subjected to control under the police power of the State, regulated with a view to promote the temperance of the people. Patience has now ceased to be a virtue. We now know that prohibition was a mistake. We now know that the attempt to enforce it has been a failure. The time has come for us to insist that the Government admit the failure and abandon the hopeless effort to impose a single standard of abstinence upon this great and diverse Nation effort to impose a single standard of abstinence upon this great and diverse Nation.

What is our objective? Plainly stated, our principal purpose is to become free of the eighteenth amendment so that we may recover the right and the power we once possessed to bring the liquor traffic under control, and to solve the problem of temperance in a manner that will suit the people of each particular State. This purpose is in accord with the philosophy of the men who founded this Government.

Three major principles are involved in that policy: First, the principle of State responsibility; second, the protection of the prohibition States against the violation of their policy by the nonprohibition States; third, provision against the return of the saloon.

How shall we restore State responsibility for the solution of the liquor problem? The obvious way to accomplish that is to strike out of the Constitution the eighteenth amendment, which has taken the responsibility away from the States. We do not need any affirmative language in the Constitution to confer this power upon the States. The States responsed the power before the power any affirmative language in the Constitution to confer this power upon the States. The States possessed the power before the eighteenth amendment was written and they will repossess themselves of the power the moment the eighteenth amendment is stricken from the Constitution. That is why I advocate outright repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The second part of our program is to protect the prohibition States against the violation of their policies by nonprohibition States. The solution to that problem was formulated fully 19 years ago in the Webb-Kenyon Act, which prohibited the transportation of intoxicating liquors into a State if the liquors were intended to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used in violation of the law of that State. That law was entirely adequate to give the dry States ample protection. Unfortunately it never had a fair trial. Within a few months after that act had been declared constitutional by the United States Supreme Court, the eighteenth amendment was already submitted to the States for ratification. My proposal is that when Congress submits the repeal of the eighteenth amendment for ratification by conventions in the several States, it should also reenact the Webb-Kenyon Act to take effect the moment the eighteenth amendment Kenyon Act to take effect the moment the eighteenth amendment is repealed.

Is repealed.

The third part of our program is to prevent the restoration of the saloon. Once the eighteenth amendment is repealed the power and the duty and the responsibility to prevent the return of the saloon will all be centralized in the respective State governments; and the States must be left to work out that difficult problem in accordance with local needs and to suit local sentiment. To this only course there is no alternative. In the American system of government the State and not the Federal Government is equipped to deal with that problem. Nothing the Constitution can say about it; nothing Congress can do about it, will change the fundamental fact that the saloon can be kept out of a community only by the will of that community.

The prohibition issue has now become sharp and clear. It can

The prohibition issue has now become sharp and clear. It can no longer be straddled. It can no longer be evaded. No great issue that has divided the American people has ever been disposed of by evasion. Prohibition will not prove an exception. It is the duty of the political parties to speak out on this question. For any party to dodge this issue now is a complete abdication of its high political responsibility which the voters will remember and high political responsibility which the voters will remember and resent.

The American people are to-day regarding the prohibition question with an earnestness which will not be played with. They know perfectly well that the way to repeal is to repeal. They are fully convinced that that is the thoroughfare which leads out of the wilderness to temperance, self-discipline, and self-government—the stuff of which real character is built.

We now know our objective, and we know the way to reach it. We must move forward, for the day of argument has come and gone. The time is now ripe for action.

FIELD TRAINING OF RESERVE OFFICERS AND NATIONAL GUARD

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter written by Maj. O. R. McGuire, of the Finance Reserve, United States Army, dealing with the Army appropriation bill and the proposal to eliminate 2,000 officers from the Regular Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

CLARENDON, VA., June 7, 1932.

THE RESERVE OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION,

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON CHAPTER, George Mason Hotel, Alexandria, Va.

GENTLEMEN: There has been received a letter dated June 4, 1932, from Maj. Guy N. Church, Signal Reserve, and member of your procurement committee, as follows:

"The George Washington Chapter of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, will hold its regular monthly meeting at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria on Tuesday, June 7, at |

"This chapter has been recently organized and now stands first in the State in point of membership. We are very anxious to increase the enrollment as the association is doing much to

"This chapter has been recently organized and now stands first in the State in point of membership. We are very anxious to increase the enrollment as the association is doing much to promote the interests of the Regular service, of the Organized Reserve, and the National Guard. It is responsible for having the appropriation for reserve training this year reinstated in the Budget and is the only organization which is active in looking after our welfare in Congress. In order that you may be more fully acquainted with the purpose of the association I would like to have you attend this meeting as my guest and would like to have as large a group as possible assemble at my office, near the corner of Broad and Washington Streets, Falls Church, Va., Tuesday night at 7.30 and go to Alexandria in a body. Whether you can attend this meeting or not you are urgently requested to support the association. Dues are only $3 per year and the meetings are held on the first Tuesday of each month."

The President of the United States, by virtue of his office, is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and no man in the history of this Republic more willingly and readily rendered obedlence to the duly constituted authority of this Nation than did the great man for whom your chapter is named, George Washington. He never faltered in that obedlence, even though he was surrounded by cabals, his Army freezing and starving at Valley Forge, his heart wrung by the treachery of some of his friends, and when he was required to promise, from his own pocket, money to his men to fight the Battle of Trenton and inject confidence in the waning hopes of that devoted band in and out of Congress who stood at his side. I can not believe that the chapter of the reserve officers' association, named for him and almost within the shadow of Mount Vernon, will hesitate for a moment in following the ideals of Washington—one of the really great men in the tides of time. As much as I should like to be a member of the George Washington Chapter of the Reserve O the part of any considerable number of members of such chapter and/or association.

The President has stated publicly, and we know it to be a fact, that this Nation is confronted by a grave economic crisis in its affairs and in a world of great unrest. Both he and the Congress, regardless of party, are endeavoring to keep appropriations at the minimum consistent with economy and efficiency in the conduct of the Government and with the hope that the great tax burden now being placed on our people may be reduced during the part now being placed on our people may be reduced during the next fiscal year. Having taken my oath on the altars of this Republic, fiscal year. Having taken my oath on the altars of this Republic, it is both my duty and my inclination to render all possible obedience and feeble assistance to the President and the Congress in this effort. The reserve officers of the United States, many of whom hold commissions in the National Guard, are at least the equal in both courage and mentality of the great body of our people, and I believe it is their duty to uphold the President, whoever he may be, and the Members of Congress, of whatever party, when they find it necessary to effect economies, even at our expense. Furthermore, the constitution of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States provides in Article II thereof that—

"The object of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United

"The object of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States is to support and assist in the development and execution of a military policy for the United States which shall provide adequate national defense. The association believes this to be the surest and most economical insurance against future wars and essential to the prestige of our country necessary to further our world policies and interests."

The Army appropriation bill, H. R. 11897, as it passed the House of Representatives proposed to eliminate some 2,500 officers of the Regular Army. The Secretary of War and other duly constituted military authorities have represented, both to the Congress and the country, that such a cut in the Regular Army would be nothing short of a calamity. No one knows this better than the reserve officers of the United States Army. It should be our endeavor to save this cut in the officers of the Regular Army by voluntarily suggesting and insisting that there be no appropriations made for the fiscal year 1933 for the purpose of 15 days' training of reserve officers of the Army. The item carried in the bill for the reserve officers of the Army. The item carried in the bill for the reserve officers is $6,354,348. In my opinion, for the fiscal year 1933, this item should be cut at least $5,500,000, only reserving enough to send certain selected officers to the Command and Staff School at Fort Leavenworth or to the Army War College in Washington.

I think it should also be the purpose and endeavor of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States to insist that the appropriations for the National Guard be cut so as to eliminate the item of $8,078,354 for expenses of camps of instruction, or 15 days' training in the field for the National Guard during the fiscal year 1933. This would leave intact the funds necessary to preserve the National Guard and pay them for their drills at their home rendezvous.

In this period of economic crisis and mounting taxation, the home rendezvous.

In this period of economic crisis and mounting taxation, the reserve officers of the United States Army, as well as the National Guard may well forego 15 days' training in the field in order to assist the President and the Congress in effecting needed economies and to preserve for our instruction and training during coming years the same 2,500 officers of the Regular Army who must otherwise be discharged. It is of far more importance to the national defense of this country that there be retained these 2,500 men who have devoted their lives to the military profession—officers who are equipped and who will be needed in any national crisis to help train the National Guard and the reserve officers for more efficient duty than it is that these two classes have summer training. for more emicient duty than it is that these two classes have summer training. This is entirely aside from the question of the enormous expense to the taxpayers in educating a Regular Army officer at West Point, retaining him for years in the military service, and then discharging him before retirement without any profession and generally unequipped to take an efficient place in the commercial life of the Nation.

This letter is not to be understood as any opposition on my part, or any belief that the reserve officers and the National Guard should not have 15 days' training in the field. It is to be understood in the profession of the part, or any belief that the reserve officers and the National Guard should not have 15 days' training in the field. It is to be understood as taking the position that in the present crisis confronting this Nation it is the duty of the reserve officers of the United States Army to not attempt to force through Congress an appropriation bill containing large sums for the field training of reserve officers and the National Guard at a time when there is a huge and ever-mounting deficit in the Federal Treasury, when such a selfish attitude would force some 2,500 officers from the Regular Army, and when the loss of 15 days' field training during the fiscal year 1933 will not in any manner result in the loss of efficiency in any great degree of either the reserve officers or the National Guard. Unless I can be assured that the members of the George Washington Chapter of the Reserve Officers' Association will stand for this policy, I must decline your invitation to become a member this policy, I must decline your invitation to become a member thereof.

Respectfully,

O. R. McGuire, Major, Finance Reserve, United States Army.

NATIONAL INCOME OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a Senate resolution, and ask to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 220), as

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is requested to report to the Senate of the United States on or before December 15, 1933, estimates of the total national income of the United States for estimates of the total national income of the United States for each of the calendar years 1929, 1930, and 1931, including estimates of the portions of the national income originating from agriculture, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and other gainful industries and occupations, and estimates of the distribution of the national income in the form of wages, rents, royalties, dividends, profits, and other types of payments. These estimates shall be prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and the bureau shall use available official and unofficial statistics and such relevant data as may be in the possession of the various departments, bureaus, and independent establishments of the Federal Government. eral Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. My information is that the resolution, if adopted, will not require any additional force or expenditure of additional money by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; that the staff now in the bureau can work upon these data and compile them, and that it will not occasion any deficiency estimate.

May I say, Mr. President, that for a number of years there has been no study of the very important question of national income, its distribution, and its sources. The only available data on this question have been furnished by unofficial agencies, particularly the Bureau of National Economic Research. That bureau has, however, not made any study since the years prior to 1929.

In the consideration of legislation in the future I believe that the data to be compiled under the authorization of the resolution introduced by me will be of very great importance in helping Congress to determine policies relating to fiscal affairs of the Government, as well as to other legislation which is economic in character.

When the Committee on Manufactures was holding hearings upon the bill to establish a national economic council, it gathered a great deal of information concerning the present status of statistical data and developed the fact that these most important data were missing from the statistical information upon which to predicate broad questions of national policy.

With that statement, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. PresidentThe VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. The resolution as read provides that the report called for shall be submitted to Congress in December, 1933. Will it be necessary to allow the bureau that much time within which to complete the work?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have allowed in the resolution a very liberal amount of time for doing the work, because it is my understanding that the investigation is not to be permitted to interfere with other statutory work; but, if it shall be possible to complete the study before the date mentioned in the resolution, then, of course, the report may be submitted prior to that time.

Realizing that there was a disposition upon the part of many Members of the Senate not to incur any additional expense, I wished to allow sufficient time in the resolution so that the work might be done with the present staff and the present appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I may be entirely wrong, but it seems to me that the bureau ought to be able to compile and submit the information to Congress on the 1st of December, 1932. The resolution gives them a year and a half in which to do the work. If for any reason they should be unable to compile the information by that date, of course, the time within which they are required to report could be extended, if they requested such an extension. But if we are to wait for a year and a half, the information, of course, will not be obtained until that time, and will not be of as much benefit as it otherwise would be. It is before that time, I should think, that we would probably want to use the information in the consideration of legislation. So I should like to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he change the date and make it December, 1932. If the bureau can not compile the information by that time, and will say so, the time may be extended.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I note the Senator from Oregon is on his feet; and if he intends to ask that the resolution go over under the rule, then I will have an opportunity to confer with the Senator from Nebraska. The reason I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the present consideration of the resolution is that I am apprehensive that there will not be many morning hours, in view of the continuous recesses being taken by the Senate, and I am very much interested in the subject matter of the resolution

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the proposal involves a very large task. It may be a worthy one. Personally, I have no objection to it. There is not a large attendance here this morning, and I think the resolution should go over under the rule. The suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] may be a fair one, but some opportunity should be given for the department to give to the Congress its view concerning the necessity of this work.

Entertaining that view, I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Are there further concurrent and other resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we start to consider the calendar of unobjected bills under Rule VIII, commencing with Order of Business 682, which followed the call a few days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I have no objection. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator withhold that suggestion? The Senator from New Mexico is about to ask a question.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to remind the distinguished Senator from Oregon that in response to a query of mine on June 1 the Senator advised me that it was the intention to have two more calendar morning hours in the past week. Of course, I appreciate the fact that things come up which are beyond the control of the Senator from Oregon as well as the rest of us; but I should like to have his opinion as to the possibility of having some more morning hours in the immediate future.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the reason why I am asking for this unanimous-consent agreement to take up unobjected bills is so that we can complete that class of bills to-day. When we approach the consideration of the appropriation bills, probably this afternoon, in my opinion, there will be a great many opportunities for morning hours during the remainder of the session.

Mr. CUTTING. I have no desire to interfere with the program of the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. REED. My recollection is that we were just beginning the discussion of Order of Business 680 when we had the last call of the calendar. Would the Senator be willing to start with that one?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly. I was informed at the desk that the number was really 681. That being a bill of my own, I desired to pass it and commence with 682. If by mistake I have given the wrong calendar number, I should desire to correct it, of course.

Mr. REED. Order of Business 680 was called; the clerk is quite right about that; but just as we began to consider it the gavel fell.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I will modify my request, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon as modified? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think a number of Senators who are engaged in committee work would like to be here when the calendar is called.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is wise.

Mr. KING. I hope, therefore, that the Senator will call for a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. I think it is wise to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Couzens Jones Robinson, Ind. Kean Schall Sheppard Shipstead Shortridge Bankhead Dale Kendrick Barbour Barkley Davis Dickinson King La Follette Logan McGill Bingham Blaine Dill Smith Fletcher Smoot Steiwer Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Borah Frazier McKellar McNary Metcalf George Glass Bratton Broussard Bulkley Goldsborough Townsend Trammell Bulow Byrnes Gore Hale Moses Neely Tydings Vandenberg Capper Caraway Harrison Norb eck Hatfield Norris Wagner Walcott Walsh, Mass. Walsh, Mont. Nye Oddie Carey Hawes Cohen Connally Hayden Hebert Patterson Coolidge Copeland Howell Pittman Watson Wheeler Costigan Johnson Robinson, Ark.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE CONTRACTS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, when we had the calendar up the other day, Order of Business 606, Senate bill 3145, was called, and objection was made by two Senators. Since then they have withdrawn their objection. I ask unanimous consent to have that bill considered at this time, as it will be impossible for me to be in the Senate after Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill (S. 3145) providing for the appointment of commissioners to hear cases arising under contracts of warrisk insurance in the District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of South Carolina was read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, do I understand from the Senator from South Carolina that the Senator from Montana has withdrawn his objection?

Mr. SMITH. He has.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the judges of the United States District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of South Carolina shall appoint a commissioner who shall reside within the State of South Carolina and who shall have jurisdiction to hear without a jury and render and who shall have jurisdiction to hear without a jury and render judgment on any case brought in either of such district courts on a contract of war-risk insurance now authorized by section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, to be brought against the United States, and brought before him with the consent both of the claimant and of the United States. The commissioner so appointed shall sit and act at such times and at such places in such judicial districts as such district judges shall designate. Any judgment rendered in any such case shall be final, except that an appeal shall lie therefrom to the United States district court for the district in which such case was heard, and such district judges shall prescribe the rules of procedure and practice trict court for the district in which such case was heard, and such district judges shall prescribe the rules of procedure and practice for such commissioner in the trial of cases for appeal to such United States district courts. Any judgment rendered by either of such district courts on any such appeal shall be subject to review in the same manner as is provided by section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, for cases arising under contracts of war-risk insurance.

Sec. 2. All costs and expenses arising out of cases brought under section 1 of this act, and properly chargeable to the United States.

SEC. 2. All costs and expenses arising out of cases brought under section 1 of this act, and properly chargeable to the United States, shall be certified, approved, and paid as like costs and expenses in the courts of the United States are certified, approved, and paid under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. The commissioner appointed under section 1 of this act shall receive an annual salary of $6,000, payable monthly. The clerk of the district court for the district in which such commissioner may be sitting, or his deputy, shall, during such time as such commissioner shall continue to sit therein, act as clerk to such commissioner in the same manner so far as practicable as such commissioner in the same manner so far as practicable, as for the district court for which such clerk or deputy clerk was appointed.

SEC. 4. This act shall not be in force after December 31, 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of a commissioner to hear cases arising under contracts of war-risk insurance in the District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of South Carolina.'

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION OF NATIVES OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 4425) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a native of the Virgin Islands of the United States who is now residing in any foreign country shall for the purpose of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, be considered as a nonquota immigrant for the purposes of admission to the United States; but shall be subject to all the other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws, except that—

(a) He shall not be subject to the head tax imposed by section 2 of the immigration act of 1917;

(b) He shall not be required to have a passport or immigration visa;

(c) If otherwise admissible, he shall not be excluded under second of 1917, unless excluded under the tion 3 of the immigration act of 1917, unless excluded under the provisions of that section relating to—
(1) Persons afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious dis

(3) Prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons;(4) Contract laborers;

(5) Persons previously deported; or(6) Persons convicted of crime.

SEC. 2. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any such alien after the expiration of two years following the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. An alien admitted to the United States under this shall not be subject to deportation on the ground that he has become a public charge.

SEC. 4. Terms defined in the immigration act of 1924, as amended, shall, when used in this act, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

SEC. 5. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to confer United States citizenship upon certain inhabitants of the Virgin Islands and to extend the naturalization laws thereto," approved February 25, 1927, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following

"(d) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who are, on the date of enactment of this subdivision, residing in continental United States, the Virgin Islands of the United States, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, or any other insular possession or Territory of the United States, who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, regardless of their place of residence on January 17, 1917."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in order that the bill just passed may be elucidated, I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the Congressional Record at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made

The report (No. 641) submitted by Mr. REED on May 5, 1932, is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 641, Seventy-second Congress, first session] IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN NATIVES OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. Reed, from the Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 4425):

The Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (S. 4425) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon with the recommendation that it do

The popular belief that all Virgin Islanders are American citi zens has caused much confusion and is one of the problems to which the civil administration of these islands has given considerable attention.

The following analysis explains the citizenship situation and

The following analysis explains the citizenship situation and indicates the reason for this bill being enacted at this time:

(a) By the treaty of cession Danish citizens and natives of the Virgin Islands who were residing in these islands on January 17, 1917, and who did not elect to preserve their Danish nationality within one year, became "citizens of the Virgin Islands entitled to the protection of the United States."

(1) Practically all natives believed that, if they did not make declaration within one year to retain their Danish citizenship, they became citizens of the United States.

(b) To correct this confusion, Congress on February 25, 1927, declared the following persons were granted full United States citizenship:

(2) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the Virgin Islands on January 17, 1917, who did not retain their Danish nationality, and who resided in the Virgin Islands, the United States, or Porto Rico, on February 25, 1927; and their children born after January 17, 1917.

(3) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the United States on January 17, 1917, and who resided in the Virgin Islands on February 25, 1927; and their children born after January 17, 1917.

(4) Persons born in the Virgin Islands on or after January 17, 1917, and who were subject to the jurisdiction of the United States on February 25, 1927.

on February 25, 1927.

(c) The act of Congress of February 25, 1927, further provided the privilege of naturalization, if applied for prior to February 25, 1928; to the following natives of the Virgin Islands:

(1) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the Virgin Islands on January 17, 1917, and who resided either in the Virgin Islands or in the United States or in Porto Rico on January 25, 1927.

(2) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the United States on January 17, 1917, and who resided either in the United States or in Porto Rico on February 25, 1927.

(d) No provision was made in the act of February 25, 1927, for the citizenship or naturalization of the following natives of the Virgin Islands:

(1) Natives of the Virgin Islands who, on January 17, 1917, resided anywhere else than (a) in the Virgin Islands, (b) in the United States; or

(2) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided either in the Virgin Islands or in the United States on January 17, 1917, and who, on February 25, 1927, resided anywhere else than (a) in the Virgin Islands, (b) in the United States, or (c) in Porto Rico. (3) Natives of the Virgin Islands, regardless of date of birth, who on current date do not reside either (a) in the Virgin Islands. or (b) in the United States, or (c) in Porto Rico, regardless of their place of residence on either January 17, 1917, or February

their place of residence on either January 17, 1917, or February 25, 1927.

Notwithstanding the legislation contained in the acts referred to, there still remains considerable confusion, especially with regard to the present status of (1) natives of the Virgin Islands who are on current date residing in territory of, and territory under the jurisdiction of, the United States, other than Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the United States proper, i. e., the States and the District of Columbia, and (2) natives of the Virgin Islands who are on current date residing in any territory under States and the District of Columbia, and (2) natives of the Virgin Islands who are on current date residing in any territory under the jurisdiction of any other nation than the United States.

Under a misconception of the above provisions of law, most of the natives of the Virgin Islands who have been residing in foreign countries are ignorant of the fact that they are not American citizens, since most of their fellow countrymen were made citizens by the clause of the treaty of 1917. Many of them have returned from time to time to the Virgin Islands without nonquota immigration visas. The requirement that these natives of the Virgin Islands should go to the nearest American consul to secure a nonquota visa is extremely difficult to comply with, and it is almost impossible for them to carry out, because there are few American consuls in the islands of the Caribbean Sea, and most of these native Virgin Islanders now domiciled in foreign countries are pretty well distributed throughout the Caribbean islands.

Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the bill are intended to be a short Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the bill are intended to be a short emergency immigration act, with certain concessions and specific exceptions, to remain in force for only two years from this date, under which natives of the Virgin Islands, may, with the minimum of delay and few restrictions, return from foreign soil to their native land for permanent residence after which they may become naturalized in the same way that any allen applicant for United States citizenship. No visa, passport, or head tax is

To clarify the status of, and to extend justice to natives of the Virgin Islands who now reside in territory under the jurisdiction of the United States, as distinct from definitely foreign soil, section 1 of the act of February 25, 1927, is amended by section 1 of this present act so as to declare citizens of the United States such natives of the Virgin Islands, who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, who reside at current date (a) in the States or the District of Columbia, (b) in the Virgin Islands, (c) in Porto Rico, (d) in the Canal Zone, (e) in any other insular possession of the United States, or (f) any Territory of the United States but without regard to their place of residence as on January 17, 1917.

The context of H. R. 11363 is such that, from the very nature of things, the benefits of section 1 of this act or of section 5 of this act are very specifically limited to "natives of the Virgin Islands" and the burden of proof would be upon the applicants for these benefits to establish that they were born in the Virgin Islands and that unless primary fact is satisfactorily established no benefits under this act would accrue to anyone.

During the hearings before your committee it was indicated by To clarify the status of, and to extend justice to natives of no benefits under this act would accrue to anyone.

During the hearings before your committee it was indicated by the Governor of the Virgin Islands and other witnesses that the native Virgin Islanders who would, or could, be benefited by this act is, in the very nature of known facts, relatively a very small number. However, those comparatively few are almost in the status of "persons without a country" and find it difficult to return to the country of their birth.

return to the country of their birth.

The act does not provide or require any additional appropriation of Government funds specifically for its administration.

In compliance with paragraph 2A of Rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in the existing law made by the bill are shown as follows: New matter is printed in italics, existing law in which change is proposed is shown in roman.

Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 constitute the short emergency immigration act and is new matter, as follows:

Section 1. That a native of the Virgin Islands of the United States who is now residing in any foreign country shall, for the purpose of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, be considered as a nonquota immigrant for the purposes of admission to the United States; but shall be subject to all the other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws, except that—

(a) He shall not be subject to the head tax imposed by section 2 of the immigration act of 1917;

(b) He shall not be required to have a passport or immigration

(b) He shall not be required to have a passport or immigration

(c) If otherwise admissible, he shall not be excluded under section 3 of the immigration act of 1917, unless excluded under the provisions of that section relating to—

(1) Persons afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious

(2) Polygamy; (3) Prostitutes (4) Contract b Prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons; Contract laborers;

(5) Persons previously deported; or
(6) Persons convicted of crime.
SEC. 2. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any such alien after the expiration of two years following the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. An alien admitted to the United States under this act shall not be subject to deportation on the ground that he has become a public charge.

SEC. 4. Terms defined in the immigration act of 1924, as amended, shall, when used in this act, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

Section 1 of the act approved February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1235), is shown in roman, together with the amendment proposed by section 5 of the bill shown in italics, as follows:

[Act of February 25, 1927]

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons and their children born subsequent to January 17, 1917, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States:

(a) All former Danish citizens who, on January 17, 1917, resided in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and are now residing in those islands or in the United States or Porto Rico, and who did not make the declaration required to preserve their Danish citizenship by article 5 of the treaty contract into the contract of the co Danish citizenship by article 6 of the treaty entered into on August 4, 1916, between the United States and Denmark, or who, having made such a declaration, have heretofore renounced or may hereafter renounce it by a declaration before a court of record; (b) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who, on January 17, 1917, resided in those islands, and are now residing in those islands or in the United States or Porto Rico, and who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country; and

(c) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who, on January 17, 1917, resided in the United States, and are now residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country. (44 Stat. 1234;

10. S. C., Supp. I, t. 8, sec. 5b.)

(d) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who are, on the date of enactment of this subdivision, residing in continental United States, the Virgin Islands of the United States, Porto Rico, the Canal Zone, or any other insular possession or Territory of the United States, who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, regardless of their place of residence on Innuary 17, 1917.

There is appended to this report a letter received from the Governor of the Virgin Islands, which is self-explanatory and favorable to the enactment of this bill, reading as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY Washington, April 30, 1932.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Reed: The popular belief that all Virgin Islanders are American citizens has caused much confusion and is one of the problems to which the civil administration has given considerable attention. The citizenship situation may be analyzed as follows:

1. By the treaty of cession Danish citizens and natives of the 1. By the treaty of cession Danish citizens and natives of the Virgin Islands who were residing in these islands on January 17, 1917, and who did not elect to preserve their Danish nationality within one year became "citizens of the Virgin Islands, entitled to the protection of the United States."

Practically all natives believed that if they did not make declaration within one year to retain their Danish citizenship they became citizens of the United States.

2. To correct this confusion Congress on February 25, 1927, declared the following persons were granted full United States citizenship:

citizenship:

"(a) Former Danes who resided in the Virgin Islands on January 17, 1917, did not retain their Danish nationality, and who resided in the Virgin Islands, the United States, or Porto Rico on February 25, 1927.

"(b) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the Virgin Islands on January 17, 1917, did not retain their Danish nationality, and who resided in the Virgin Islands, the United States, or Porto Rico on February 25, 1927.

"(c) Natives of the Virgin Islands who resided in the United States on January 17, 1917, and in the Virgin Islands on February 25, 1927.

States on January 17, 1917, and in the Virgin Islands on February 25, 1927.

"(d) Natives of the Virgin Islands who were residing in the United States on January 17, 1917, and in the United States or Puerto Rico on February 25, 1927, were granted the privilege of naturalization within one year on petition.

"(e) No provision was made for those natives who were residing in foreign countries on January 17, 1917. They are held to be 'nonquota immigrants' and must have nonquota immigration visas in order legally to resume residence in these islands."

Despite this legislation there still remains considerable confusion.

To clarify the status of and to give justice to Virgin Islanders in the Virgin Islands, Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and continental United States, it is recommended that Congress grant full American citizenship to all natives of the Virgin Islands, regardless of their place of residence on January 17, 1917, with the exception, of course, of those natives who have retained their Danish nationality or have acquired some foreign nationality.

As most Virgin Islanders who have been residing in foreign countries are ignorant of the fact that they are not American

As most Virgin Islanders who have been residing in foreign countries are ignorant of the fact that they are not American citizens, as their fellow countrymen were made by the clause of the treaty of 1917, and as many of them returned to the Virgin Islands from time to time without nonquota immigration visas, the Virgin Islands government is considerably embarrassed. The requirement that these natives of the Virgin Islands should go to the nearest consul to secure a nonquota visa makes it almost impossible of carrying out. There are few consuls in the Caribbeans, and Virgin Islanders are distributed pretty well throughout the islands of the Caribbean, where most of these natives in foreign countries are now domiciled.

It is recommended that the natives of the Virgin Islands residing in any foreign country shall, for the purpose of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, be considered as nonquota immigrants for the purpose of admission to the United States; but shall be subject to all other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws, except such as the proper authorities of immigration and naturalization deem necessary.

Very sincerely.

PAUL M. PEARSON, Governor Virgin Islands.

COOS BAY INDIANS OF OREGON, AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 4352) to amend an act (ch. 300) entitled "An act authorizing the Coos (Kowes) Bay, Lower Umpqua (Kalawatset), and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians of the State of Oregon to present their claims to the Court of Claims," approved February 23, 1929 (45 Stat. 1256), was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, yesterday the House passed an identical bill, which has been messaged over and referred to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask that the committee be discharged, the House bill substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills are identical?

Mr. McNARY. Identical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11120) to amend an act (ch. 300) entitled "An act authorizing the Coos (Kowes) Bay, Lower Umpqua (Kalawatset), and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians of the State of Oregon to present their claims to the Court of Claims," approved February 23, 1929 (45 Stat. 1256), which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act (ch. 300) entitled "An act authorizing the Coos (Kowes) Bay, Lower Umpqua (Kalawatset), and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians of the State of Oregon to present their claims to the Court of Claims," approved February 23, 1929 (45 Stat. 1256), be, and the same hereby is, amended by omitting, in line 20, the words "township 26 south, range 7 west" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "township 15 south, range 6 west."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 4352 will be indefinitely postponed.

FLORIAN FORD

The bill (H. R. 5940) for the relief of Florian Ford was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would withhold his objection.

This is a case where a barn on an Indian's property out in Montana sheltered a negro who was wounded by the sheriff. The sheriff went to get him and the negro shot the sheriff from the barn, and later on shot two or three other men, one of whom afterwards died.

It was decided, when nightfall came, to burn the barn in order to get this man out. He was driven out. The county paid $500 for the lumber to build the barn, and the Indian and the superintendent claimed that it cost $175 for labor to build the barn; and they held that this Indian was entitled to it. I believe he is. The department approves the measure. I think the bill is a worthy one and that the Indian should be allowed his $175, which was his actual expense for building the barn.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175 to Florian Ford, in full settlement for his loss through the burning of his barn and other property, located on land under the police jurisdiction of the Crow Indian Agency, under authorization of Federal officers engaged in the capture of George Bolton on October 29, 1926.

EMPLOYMENT OF FARMERS IN INDIAN SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 10161) amending the act of May 25, 1918, with reference to employing farmers in the Indian Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of that measure.

May I say that I have had some complaints from representatives of the Indians and from some of the Indians to the effect that there is no necessity at all for this measure; that some of these so-called expert farmers are wholly incompetent, and that the proposed legislation is simply a waste of money and an improper drain upon the funds of the Indians.

I ask that the bill go over until I have a chance to look into it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 368) for the relief of Joliet National Bank, and H. William, John J., Edward F., and Ellen C. Sharpe, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CARLOS V. CUSACHS

The bill (S. 4349) authorizing the President of the United States to present a Navy cross to Carlos V. Cusachs, late lieutenant commander, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to present a Navy cross to Carlos V. Cusachs, late lieutenant commander, Corps of Professors of Mathematics, United States Navy, in recognition of his exceptionally meritorious services while assistant to the naval attaché at the American Embassy, Madrid, Spain, during the war with Germany.

WALTER THOMAS FOREMAN

The bill (S. 4513) for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Will he give his atten-

Mr. KING. I notice that the alleged injury occurred away back in 1916.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the incident out of which this legislation springs occurred in 1918. In the first place, it simply seeks to waive the provisions of the statute requiring notice and the filing of a claim before the compensation commission within a definite period of time.

The explanation of the claimant is that, in the first place, his injuries were very slow in developing. He was led to believe that they would yield rapidly to treatment. He was under a doctor's care for a long time, and when it appeared that his injuries were serious and permanent, then he filed a claim in the Veterans' Bureau, believing that, as a seaman, he came under the general veterans' acts. It was not until the case had been adversely adjudicated by the Veterans' Bureau that the man learned that he might originally have filed his claim before the compensation commission. His injuries were severe. The committee were unanimous in the view that they originated in the service which he was rendering, and the committee also were unanimous in the opinion that in these circumstances these statutory provisions as to notice and the filing of a claim should be waived and that the man should have the right to go before the compensation commission and establish his claim, if he had one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is some doubt in my mind as to whether or not there was an injury for which the United States under any circumstances might be responsible, and I would like to ask the Senator whether at the time of the alleged injury there was a law which would have given the claimant any compensation?

Mr. WHITE. I think he would have had a right to go in before the Compensation Commission and claim the benefits of the act of 1916. As I have said, he did not do that, because, when he sensed the seriousness of the injuries, he proceeded before the Veterans' Bureau, thinking that as a sailor he came under the veterans' legislation. It was not until adverse action by the Veterans' Bureau had been taken, as I have said, that he knew of the original right he had to | in the final settlement the postmaster would not lose the appeal to the Compensation Commission.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection, but I may file a motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Without objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "act," to strike out the words:

Provided further, That said Walter Thomas Foreman shall be reimbursed for all hospital and medical expense incurred as a result of injuries received while an employee of the United States Shipping Board, if found entitled to compensation under the provisions of said act, as amended.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Walter Thomas Foreman, former employee of the United States Shipping Board, who now resides at Albermarle, N. C.: Provided, That compensation, if any, shall commence from and after the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. COX

The bill (H. R. 2633) for the relief of William R. Cox was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the amount carried in this bill is comparatively small, it does seem to be a bill which might establish a very important precedent, namely, that in cases where postmasters deposit funds in banks and the banks close, and losses of the funds result, the postmasters shall be relieved from liability. It is conceivable that there may be a very large number of cases of this character, and I think the Senate should give consideration to this measure. I do not wish to assume the responsibility of saying that the precedent which the bill would establish would be unsound. I know there are many instances in which postmasters have been relieved from liability in somewhat similar cases, but I think the Senate ought to be advised that it is committing itself to the policy of making whole postmasters who do make deposits in banks, and experience losses by reason of so doing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that if we are to pay for such losses suffered by postmasters, it ought to be through a general law. If we pass this bill, all postmasters similarly suffering losses will want private bills introduced to make them whole. If the policy is to be to pay for such losses, it would be very much better to pass a general bill covering all, than to have individual bills. For that reason I ask that the bill go over for the present.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HOWELL. The Post Office Department authorizes postmasters to deposit their funds in banks. There are not proper receptacles for the care of the money within many of the post offices, and the Post Office Department has time and again recommended and the Senate has passed in every case I can recall bills of this character, where the postmaster was not at fault.

Mr. SMOOT. This loss was the result of the closing of the First National Bank of Pasco, Wash.

Mr. HOWELL. That is true. Mr. SMOOT. There will be a complete loss, providing there is no partial payment made to depositors. I am not objecting to the postmasters being protected, but in the cases of some banks that are closed the depositors receive sometimes 50 per cent, sometimes 60 per cent, sometimes 30 per cent. There may be a partial payment in this case, and I think there ought to be a general bill covering the whole subject matter, so that whenever a postmaster deposits money in a bank and loses it, whatever loss there is to him in the final settlement should be taken care of by the Government. But I do not think we ought to take an individual case and assume there was a total loss, when it may be that whole amount of the deposit.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the total amount the postmaster had deposited in the bank was $485.03. The bank's affairs have been settled up, and there has been recovered by the Post Office Department all but $103.81. The Post Office Department is holding this postmaster for that amount and has no authority to discharge him from liability.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the payment of the money, but I think that instead of numerous bills being introduced, there ought to be a general bill to cover all such

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah ought to realize that this occurred in a small town, and that the danger of robbery was such that the postmaster felt obliged to put the money in the bank. Had all the money been lost, we would have paid for the loss.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting, in any case of the failure of a bank, to pay what is lost; that is, what is actually lost. I think there ought to be a general bill to cover all such cases, and that we should not take up one case at a

Mr. DILL. The amount called for in this bill represents the actual loss.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that; but what I mean is to have a measure covering all such cases, so that when such a case arises the Post Office Department will be authorized to pay the man and can do so without having a private bill

Mr. DILL. That policy might apply to the future, but this bill is here, and it seems to me that since it is approved by the Postmaster General the Senator ought to let it go through.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the man being relieved of the loss; that is not the point I had in mind. What I thought was that if we are to enter into this field, it ought to be by a general bill covering all such cases, so that we will not have bills introduced in the Senate from all over the country.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows that if we follow that course it will be years before the money in this case will be paid. Let that apply to the future, and not hold up this bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist upon his objection. As stated by the Senator from Washington, the amount called for is small, and we can legislate for the future through a general bill.

Mr. SMOOT. For the information of the Senator from California, I call attention to the fact that my point is that the proper thing to do is to pass a general bill covering all such cases, so that we will not have a great number of individual bills presented in the next year or so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert in lieu thereof "Comptroller General of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of William R. Cox, postmaster at Pasco, Wash., in the sum of $103.81, due the United States on account of the loss resulting from the closing of the First National Bank of Pasco,

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MADRIGAL & CO., MANILA, P. I.

The bill (S. 256) authorizing adjustment of the claim of Madrigal & Co., Manila, P. I., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow Madrigal & Co.,

Manila, P. I., the sum of $420 in full and final settlement of their claim for refundment of wharfage charges collected by the Navy Department on the United States ship Buffalo, purchased by said company under the provisions of Catalogue 318-b, issued by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department, Washington, D. C. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $420 for payment of said claim.

JOHN T. LENNON AND GEORGE T. FLORA

The bill (S. 261) authorizing adjustment of the claims of John T. Lennon and George T. Flora, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow John T. Lennon and George T. Flora $25 each in full and final settlement of their claims for blood furnished May 4 and May 11, 1926, respectively, for transfusion to Harvey J. Shoppe, a patient in a Government hospital. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50 for the payment of such claim.

FRANKLIN SURETY CO.

The bill (S. 4258) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE H. HANSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4440) authorizing adjustment of the claim of George H. Hansen, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of George H. Hansen, for $1,000 deposited with the former United States Commissioner Fisk as ball for Guillaume Peyran and which amount the said United States commissioner converted to his own use, and to allow said claim in an amount not exceeding $1,000. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of such claim.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. HOWEIL. Mr. President, this bill is to cover a case where bail was required and was paid over to a United States commissioner. The United States commissioner applied the money to his own use, and when the action came to an end and the money should have been returned to the bondsman, Commissioner Fisk could not repay it. It was under the practice of the court that the money was paid over to Commissioner Fisk.

Mr. KING. Did the Government proceed against Commissioner Fisk?

Mr. HOWELL. I do not know what was done.

Mr. SMOOT. He was indicted.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL SURETY CO.

The bill (S. 4441) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the National Surety Co., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the National Surety Co. for refund of $500 on account of collections from the said National Surety Co. as surety on a bond dated March 12, 1917, of Ovide Robin, former postmaster at Leonville, La., in excess of the principal amount of said bond, and to allow not to exceed $500 in full and final settlement of the claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the claim.

EDWARD BODECK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2238) for the relief of Edward Bodeck, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement of all claims against the Government, the sum of $3,500 to Edward Bodeck, of New York, N. Y., on account of injuries sustained when struck by an Army truck November 8, 1928: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

CHARLES THOMAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3724) for the relief of Charles Thomas, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Charles Thomas, the sum of $3,500 in full settlement for injuries sustained by him by being struck by an Army truck on Bell Avenue at Maxwell Avenue, Bayside, Long Island, on October 8, 1928: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

H. H. LEE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4144) for the relief of H. H. Lee, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $233.75 to H. H. Lee as final settlement of his claim for loss by fire to his own property while assigned to protection of Government holdings during the Half Moon forest fire in Glacier National Park.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4270) for the relief of Commander Francis James Cleary, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4567) to provide for the settlement of claims against the United States on account of property damage, personal injury, or death was announced as next in order. Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND IN ARIZONA FOR AIR-NAVIGATION FACILITIES

The bill (S. 4549) to authorize conveyance to the United States of certain lands in the State of Arizona for use of the United States in maintaining air-navigation facilities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. Hay-DEN] is in charge of this bill, and will be in the Chamber in a moment. He wants to have a House bill substituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears that the bill is the same as Order of Business No. 747, House bill 10926.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber temporarily, and was not here when Senate bill 4549 was reached on the calendar.

I ask that Order of Business No. 747, House bill 10926, bearing the same title, be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Is the bill in the same words?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; it is.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10926), to authorize conveyance to the United States of certain lands in the State of Arizona for use of the United States in maintaining air-navigation facilities, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, title from the State of Arizona to all of section 18, township 22 8 west, northeast quarter section 31, southeast north, range 8 west, northeast quarter section 31, southeast quarter southeast quarter section 30, west half northwest quarter section 32, township 9 south, range 10 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Ariz., and in exchange therefor may patent to the State of Arizona an approximately equal area of survey, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral public lands within the State. The land to be acquired by the United States under this act shall be used by the Department of Commerce in maintaining air-navigation facilities. If at any time this land or any portion thereof should not be needed for such purpose, the Secretary of the Interior shall, upon advice to that effect by the Secretary of Commerce, restore said land or such portion to the public domain for merce, restore said land or such portion to the public domain for disposition under applicable law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4549 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4578) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians to compensation on a basis of guardian and ward, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

FRANCES AGRAMONTE

The bill (S. 4273) to pay an annuity to Frances Agramonte, the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, member of the Yellow Fever Commission, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts annually as may be necessary to pay, during the remainder of her natural life, the sum of $125 per month to Frances Agramonte, widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, deceased, who was a member of the Yellow Fever Commission, and whose who was a member of the Yellow Fever Commission, and whose name appears on the roll of honor of the participants in the yellow fever investigations in Cuba, published annually in the Army Register, said annuity being the same heretofore paid to Dr. Aristides Agramonte, pursuant to the provisions of the public act approved February 28, 1929, entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever."

THOMAS W. H. BALL

The bill (S. 2620) to correct the military record of Thomas W. H. Ball was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment. This is a bill for the relief of a brave soldier who enlisted in the Regular Army. He was guilty of some infraction of military rules and was dishonorably discharged. He suffered punishment and thereafter reenlisted in the service. The matter was referred to the department and the Secretary of War recommends passage of the bill as amended. The committee reports it as amended. I hope the Senator will suffer the matter to go through.

Mr. KING. I notice he was tried by court-martial in

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. He was sentenced to be confined at hard labor for eight months, was released from confinement in 1900, and then was tried later for another offense.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. He was guilty, of course, of becoming intoxicated and was properly punished and discharged. The bill as suggested by the Secretary of War contains a proviso that "no bounty, pension, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act." He served our country many years as a faithful, brave soldier. I hope that the Senator will permit the bill to go through.

Mr. KING. Let it be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

MICHAEL J. MORAN

The bill (S. 850) for the relief of Michael J. Moran was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged from the service on October 19, 1903.

In view of the fact that, prior to his last enlistment, Dominick charged soldiers Michael J. Moran, alias James Moran, who was a member of Troop F, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 27th day of September, 1876: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

FRANCIS N. DOMINICK

The bill (S. 1877) for the relief of Francis N. Dominick was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the numerals "1903" to insert "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Francis N. Dominick shall be held and considered to have served without desertion as a private, Sixty-sixth Company, Coast Artillered Corps, United States Army, and to have been honorably discharged from such service on October 19, 1903: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object. This man enlisted in the Army four times. On three different occasions he was discharged on account of illness. This is merely a measure to correct his record. He served three different enlistments in the Philippine Islands. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. This was not some minor offense, but he deserted. He enlisted and was returned home because of dysentery, enlisted again, and was discharged promptly because of alleged disability after having served only a little while. He enlisted again in 1901 and deserted in 1903.

Mr. WHEELER. He enlisted three different times and was discharged. The fourth time, it is true, he did enlist and desert. He is an old man in ill health. This is merely to correct his record.

Mr. KING. So he can get a pension?

Mr. WHEELER. So he can get a pension to which he is entitled if anybody ever was entitled to one. There are very few men who have enlisted four different times in the Army of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana a question? What was the matter with his record that it needs correcting?

Mr. WHEELER. He enlisted four times. Three different times he was discharged and the fourth time he was held to have deserted. This is to correct his record in that regard.

Mr. CONNALLY. It really means to remove that cloud of desertion?

Mr. WHEELER. It means to correct his record by removing that cloud.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's idea is that if he enlisted three times and only deserted once, that is not a bad record. Mr. WHEELER. He enlisted four times and only deserted once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the discussion of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the first page of the report of the committee be read and then let us have a vote. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Francis N. Dominick enlisted in the Regular Army November 16, 1896, and was honorably discharged September 13, 1897, by reason of disability. When the Spanish-American War broke out he enlisted in the Alabama Volunteer Infantry May 3, 1893, but was discharged for disability on June 24, 1898. He again enlisted on August 17, 1899, in the United States Volunteer Infantry, and served in the Philippine Islands, but was returned home because of dysentery incurred there. His discharge of February 12, 1901, simply stated that his services were no longer required. He again enlisted April 13, 1901, under the name of Francisco N. Domingo. He deserted the service on May 16, 1901, and surrendered August 28, 1903. He was tried and convicted by a general court-martial and convicted of fraudulent enlistment and desertion and was dishonorably discharged from the service on October 19, 1903. Francis N. Dominick enlisted in the Regular Army November 16, several months, your committee believes that he has been sufficiently punished, and that he is entitled to the relief proposed by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, VERMONT

The bill (S. 1980) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain, at a point ing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champiain, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near East Alburg, Vt., and a point at or near Swanton, Vt., authorized to be built by Jed P. Ladd, of Burlington, Vt., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1929, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

JENNIE BRUCE GALLAHAN

The bill (S. 571) for the relief of Jennie Bruce Gallahan was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jennie Bruce Gallahan the sum of $5,000 as compensation for the death of her husband. Samuel L. Gallahan, late lieutenant, District of Columbia Fire Department, which occurred while he was engaged in the performance of his duties: Provided, That such sum shall be in addition to any payments heretofore or hereafter received from the policemen and firements relief fund. District of Columbia, on account of such firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia, on account of such

EXEMPTION FROM QUOTA OF HUSBANDS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS

The bill (H. R. 10600) to exempt from the quota husbands of American citizens was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

(a) An immigrant who is the unmarried child under 21 years of age, or the wife, or the husband of a citizen of the United States": Provided, That the marriage shall have occurred prior to issuance of visa.

SEC. 2. Clause (A) of paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of section 6 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(A) Quota immigrants who are the fathers or the mothers of citizens of the United States who are 21 years of age or over.'

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS UNDER WAR CLAIMS ACT, 1928

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) extending for one year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the settlement of war claims act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (g) of section 2 and subsection (f) of section 5 of the settlement of war claims act of 1928, as amended by Public Resolution No. 48, Seventy-first Congress, approved March 10, 1930, are further amended, respectively, by striking out the words "four years" wherever such words appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five years."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4262) to provide for the establishment and development of American air-transport services overseas, to encourage construction in the United States by American capital of American airships and other aircraft for use in foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLOSING OF BARBER SHOPS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4023) providing for the closing of barber shops one day in every seven in the District of Columbia was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the word "both," to insert the following:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make, modify, and enforce reasonable regulations to obtain compliance with the provisions of this act, and such regulations shall have the force and effect of law within the District of Columbia.

So as to make the bill read:

Whereas in the District of Columbia persons engaged in the occupation of barbering are required to work seven days a week in order to meet competition and conform to custom; and Whereas the health of such persons is endangered and often impaired by the working conditions peculiar to their occupation;

Whereas the protection of the health of such persons will tend to protect the health of the general public by guarding against the spread of infectious disease: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in the District of Columbia it shall be unlawful for a person to maintain seven days consecutively any establishment wherein the occupation or trade of barbering or hair dressing (including the cutting or singeing of hair, shaving, shampooing, massaging, or manicuring) is pursued. All such establishments shall be required to remain closed one day in every seven beginning at midnight or sunset. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not in excess of $20 or by imprisonment for not more than 60 days, or both. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make, modify, and enforce reasonable regulations to obtain compliance with the provisions of this act, and such regulations shall have the force and effect of law within the District of Columbia. effect of law within the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

GAME AND BIRD SANCTUARY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3792) to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia," and thereby to establish a game and bird sanctuary of the Potomac River and its tributaries in the said District, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. 808), entitled "An act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia," is hereby amended by striking out the words "with any boat propelled by any means other than oars," so that the said section as amended shall read as follows:

"Sec. 5. That no person in the District of Columbia shall at any time hunt, pursue, or needlessly disturb any wild duck, goose, or other waterfowl in any of the waters of the District of Columbia under penalty of $10 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not other waterfowl in any of the waters of the District of Columbia under penalty of $10 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not more than 30 days, or both, for each offense."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of the said act of June 30, 1906, is hereby amended by striking out the words: "But nothing in this act shall prevent the hunting of game birds on the marshes of the Anacostia River, or Eastern Branch, north of the Anacostia Bridge and on the marshes on the Virginia shore of the Potomac River east of the Aqueduct Bridge: Provided, That said birds are not hunted within 200 yards of any bridge or dwelling," so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"Sec. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent berewith be "SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3053) to promote safety on the streets and highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia, to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, that is a very important bill. I think we ought to have quite a full explanation of it.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT EMIL TAYLOR

The bill (S. 3543) for the relief of Robert Emil Taylor was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjudication of the claims of Robert Emil Taylor (C-267750), late private, Thirty-second Company, One hundred and sixty-sixth D. B., for disability allowance benefits under the World War veterans' act, as amended, and for adjusted compensation under the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to include as active military service during the World War the service of the said Robert Emil Taylor from August 28, 1918, to the date of his discharge, July 19, 1919, notwithstanding the industrial furlough on which he was ordered from November 16, 1918, to July 17, 1919.

REFERENCES IN LAW CASES

The bill (S. 2447) to provide for references in law cases by consent of the parties and declaring the effect of such submission was considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah—

Mr. KING. Is this bill the one the Senator and I were discussing?

Mr. BRATTON. It is.

Mr. KING. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the bill should be explained. It relates to legal procedure.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as will be seen from the report containing quotations from various decisions, a divergence of practice has grown up among the several Federal courts throughout the country with respect to the effect of a report of a referee. At common law the report had to be accepted or rejected in toto. The judge was powerless to accept it in part and reject it in part. Under a great many State statutes the judge has the power to review the report of the referee and accept it in part and reject it in part. Where a Federal court refers a case under such a statute, the court has the power to review the report and approve it in part and disapprove it in part. Not so where the reference is made under authority of the common law.

The bill is designed to unify the practice and empower a Federal court, where a case is referred to a referee and he makes his report back to review the report and approve it in so far as it is correct and reject it in so far as it is in error. It is a very wholesome bill, designed to expedite Federal procedure by enlarging the reviewing power of the court.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico if he regards it as proper to attach a presumption of correctness and validity to the report? It seems to me that the report should stand upon the same basis as any report submitted by an examiner in an equity case or a referee. The presumption is, of course, that he has taken the testimony correctly and reported it with his findings. I would have no objection at all—I am not sure that I object to this—to a provision that he shall report his findings and conclusions of law and his recommendations.

Mr. BRATTON. That is exactly what the bill does. It provides that when the referee has done that the court shall have the power to review the findings and recommendations and approve them in so far as they are correct, and correct them in their erroneous parts.

Mr. KING. It seems to give such validity to the report as that if the judge did not review it it would automatically become a judgment.

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. If it required the court to review, I would agree with the Senator.

Mr. BRATTON. As I understand it, under the present system if a case is referred by authority of the common law and the report comes to the judge, he must either accept it in whole or reject it in whole, and either try the case himself or rerefer it to the referee. The judge is powerless to hold, for instance, that the referee was correct in four respects but erred in the fifth. The bill simply enlarges the reviewing power of the court. It is intended to expedite procedure and to give the court a wider range of corrective authority. I think it would be a very wholesome procedure.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the only purpose of the bill is to do exactly that which the Senator from Utah has in mind—to give to the court, upon the review of the report of the referee, the power to sustain the report as filed, to reject it, or to modify it in such particulars as in the opinion of the court it should be modified. It is to make uniform the practice throughout the country. It is to make it certain in every case that the judge shall have the power to modify in some particulars and not be forced in some cases to reject entirely the report of the referee.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the parties to any law case in any court of the United States may waive a jury trial and may consent to a reference of all or any issues of law or fact to a referee or auditor, and the report of such referee or auditor shall be treated as presumptively correct, but shall be subject to review by the court, and the court may adopt the same or may modify or reject the same in whole or in part when the court in the exercise of its judgment is fully satisfied that error has been committed: Provided, That when the intention is plainly expressed in the consent order or otherwise that the submission is to the referee or auditor as an arbitrator, the court may review the same only in accordance with the principles governing an award and decision by an arbitrator.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN MARYLAND

The resolution (S. Res. 212) submitted by Mr. Howell on the calendar day of May 11, 1932, was considered and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4415) entitled "A bill for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an Act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

REPORT OF NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR LAW OBSERVANCE AND

The resolution (S. Res. 92) submitted by Mr. Shipstead on December 15, 1931, was considered. The resolution had been reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, on page 1, line 2, to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and is hereby, authorized to expend not to exceed $5,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, for the classification, arranging, compiling, and indexing of the documentary evidence, statistics, records, and other data, submitted to the Senate by the National Commission for Law Observance and Enforcement in response to Senate Resolutions Nos. 423 and 463, and ordered printed as Senate Document No. 307, Seventy-first Congress, third session, under authority of Senate Resolution No. 474, reported to the Senate from the Committee on Printing on February 26, 1931, and agreed to; and for the employment of the necessary assistance in connection with the publication of all other matters authorized by the Senate during said session to be printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN SEAMEN

The bill (S. 7) to provide for the deportation of certain allen seamen, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The President pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT FOR INDIAN PUEBLO LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2914) to authorize appropriations to pay in part the liability of the United States to the Indian pueblos herein named, under the terms of the act of June 7, 1924, and the liability of the United States to non-Indian claimants on Indian pueblo grants whose claims, extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, have been found by the Pueblo Lands Board to have been claims in good faith; to authorize the expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior of the sums herein authorized and of sums heretofore appropriated, in conformity with the act of June 7, 1924, for the purchase of needed lands and water rights and the creation of other permanent economic improvements as contemplated by said act; to direct the issuance of a patent to the pueblo of Taos for certain lands described herein, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to

That in the fulfillment of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 636), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums hereinaft set forth, in compensation to the several Indian pueblos hereinafter named, in payment of the liability of the United States to after named, in payment of the liability of the United States to the said pueblos as declared by the act of June 7, 1924, which appropriations shall be made in equal annual installments as hereinafter specified, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to approval of the governing authorities of each pueblo in question, at such times and in such amounts as he may deem wise and proper; for the purchase of lands and water rights to replace those which have been divested from said pueblo under the act of June 7, 1924, or for the purchase or construction of reservoirs, irrigation works, or other permanent improvements upon or for the benefit of the lands of said pueblos.

SEC. 8. The attorney or attorneys for such Indian tribe or tribes shall be paid such fee as may be agreed upon by such attorney or attorneys and such Indian tribe or tribes, but in no case shall the fee be more than 10 per cent of the sum herein authorized to be appropriated for the benefit of such tribe or tribes, and such attorneys' fees shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance herewith: Provided, however, That 25 per cent of the amount agreed upon as attorneys' fees shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior to be disbursed by him under the terms of the contract, subject to approval of the Secretary of the Interior, between said attorneys and said Indian tribes, providing for further services and expenses of said attorneys in furtherance of the objects set forth in section 19 of the act of June 7, 1924.

SEC. 9. Nothing herein contained shall in any manner be construed to deprive any of the Pueblo Indians of a prior right to the use of water from streams running through or bordering on their respective pueblos for domestic, stock-water, and irrigation purposes for the lands remaining in Indian ownership, and such water rights shall not be subject to loss by nonuse or abandonment thereof as long as title to said lands shall remain in the Indians.

Indians.

SEC. 10. The sums authorized to be appropriated under the terms and provisions of section 2, this act, shall be appropriated in three installments over a period of three years.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, this measure has been discussed on the floor of the Senate two or three times. The bill is designed to complete the program of settling the Pueblo Indian controversy in New Mexico in accordance with the act of June 7, 1924. It proposes to compensate the Indians for their lands lost through the negligence of the Government in failing seasonably to prosecute suits for the recovery of their lands. It proposes to compensate settlers for improvements on lands, title to which the settlers could not sustain, the compensation being exclusively for improvements.

Let me say to the Senator that a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs conducted hearings in New Mexico last summer on the question involved. Both the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the similar committee of the House of Representatives have reported similar bills on the subject.

The authorized appropriation for the Indians is spread over a period of three years. I think I shall ask to make it five years. Should that amendment be agreed to, it will decrease the amount which must be appropriated annually for such purpose. Under existing circumstances we may well afford to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. In Section 10, page 16, line 22, in the committee amendment, after the word "years," I move to strike out "three" and insert "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXAMINATION AND SURVEY OF M'KENZIE RIVER, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4512) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey of the Mc-Kenzie River, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the controlling of floods, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "examination," to strike out the words "and survey"; in line 6, after the word "to," to strike out "determining the extent to which floods on such rivers may be controlled, the best method of controlling such floods, and the probable cost of such flood control" and insert "the control of its floods, in accordance with provisions of section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes,' approved March, 1, 1917"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "examination," to strike out the words "and survey," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the McKenzie River, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917. The cost of such examination shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of the McKenzie River in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods."

CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO STONINGTON, CONN.

The bill (H. R. 10683) to provide for the conveyance by the United States of a certain tract of land to the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by quitclaim deed unto the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut, all of its right, claim, or title to or the possession of that tract of land, less than 1 acre, known as Stonington Point, situated in the borough of Stonington, county of New London, in the State of Connecticut, for improvement and maintenance as a plaza in commemoration of those valiant men who so nobly defended it during the 3-day bombardment by the British fleet under Commodore Hardy on August 9, 10, and 11, 1814.

SEC. 2. The Lighthouse Service reserves the right to maintain such lights on the property to be conveyed as the needs of navigation may require, and the right to enter upon the reservation by the most convenient route for the purpose of maintenance of such lights and reserve an easement for beams of light from such lights, and the right to trim any trees that now exist or may hereafter exist that interfere with or obstruct the beams of such lights.

SEC. 3. The conveyance shall be made on completion of said improvement by said borough of Stonington and said deed shall recite all the conditions contained in this act.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] to the fact that the bill which has just previously passed contains a rather peculiar provision in section 2, that "the Lighthouse Service reserves the right to maintain such lights," and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill was presented by the Senator from Connecticut, and at his instance and upon his presentation it was reported by the committee. I prefer that any explanation to be made shall be made by that Senator.

Mr. REED. I think it is obvious that if we should substitute for the words "Lighthouse Service" the words "United States" we would have a more shipshape bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection at all to such an amendment.

Mr. REED. I ask that we may recur to the bill for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate recurs to the bill and the votes by which it was read the third time and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. REED. On page 2, line 4, I move to strike out the words "Lighthouse Service" and to insert "United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF CONSERVATION OF WILD ANIMAL LIFE— EXPENSES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 203) authorizing an additional expenditure to investigate methods for replacement and conservation of wild animal life, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit tion 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, to investigate appropriate methods for the replacement and conservation of wild animal life hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $7,500 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, being objected to, will be passed over.

MERIDIAN HILL PARK

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) for the improvement of Meridian Hill Park was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States the gift of an armillary sphere designed by C. Paul Jennewein to be placed in Meridian Hill Park in the District of Columbia. The United States shall be put to no expense in connection with such gift. The plan, design, and location of such sphere shall be subject to the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts. mission of Fine Arts.

USE OF POST-OFFICE BUILDING IN CASPER, WYO.

The bill (S. 4542) providing for the use by the Veterans' Administration of the old post-office building in Casper, Wyo., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

the tenacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit the Veterans' Administration to use, as a regional office, the old post-office building in Casper, Wyo., and the grounds thereof, located in lots Nos. 1 to 6, inclusive, of block No. 4, in such city. During the period of such use the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to maintain such building and grounds and to make such alterations and repairs as he may deem necessary; and the expenses of such maintenance, alteration, and repairs shall be paid out of any funds available for similar expenses in connection with regional offices of the Veterans' Administration. The provisions of this act shall not interfere with the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell such building and grounds.

LAWRENCE (MASS.) POST-OFFICE SITE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8907) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire land adjoining Lawrence (Mass.) post-office site.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Utah, I will simply say that this bill proposes to permit the Treasury Department to grant permission to purchase from the Boston & Maine Railroad a portion of its right of way which is needed for the extension of the post-office building in Lawrence, Mass. It does not call for any additional appropriation, though it is additional legislation. Funds for the building under construction will amply take care of this cost.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of the act of Congress approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 899), for extension and remodeling of the post-office building at Lawrence, Mass., be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to provide for the acquisition by the Secretary of the Treasury by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such land adjoining said post-office site as may be needed in connection with said extension; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation for said remodeling and extension shall be available for the acquisition of said additional land.

FUNCTIONS OF SUPERINTENDENT OF HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

The bill (S. 4374) to empower the superintendent of the Hawaii National Park to perform the functions now performed by the United States commissioner for the said national park, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the superintendent of the Hawaii National Park, as appointed under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, with respect to offenses or violations of law occurring within the limits of the Hawaii National Park, shall have all the duties, rights, powers, and jurisdiction now imposed and conferred by law upon the United States commissioner for the

and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$7,500," so as to read:

Resolved, That the special committee directed by Senate Resolution 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, to investigate appropriate methods for the replacement and conservation of wild animal life recovers of Herweit shall receive no compensation for the services rendered under authority of this act in addition to his compensation as superintendent shall receive no compensation for the services rendered under authority of this act in addition to his compensation as superintendent shall receive no compensation for the services rendered under authority of this act in addition to his compensation as superintendent shall receive no compensation for the services rendered under authority of this act in addition to his compensation as superintendent shall receive no compensation for the services rendered under authority of this act in addition to his compensation as superintendent; and any and all United States commissioners now or hereafter authority of United States commissioners in and all persons who shall hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in and for the Territory of Hereafter succeed to the duties, powers, and authority of United States commissioners in ritory of Hawaii shall have full power, authority, and jurisdiction to act, with respect to offenses or violations of law occurring within the limits of the Hawaii National Park, as the United States commissioner for the Hawaii National Park may now act with respect to offenses or violations of law occurring within the limits of said park.

SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws, either Federal or Territorial, in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE IN DOVER, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11337) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the Federal building site in Dover, N. J., for another site, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether this was one of the items that came within the cognizance of his committee?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I understand it does not. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] will be able to inform the Senator from Utah as to what the proposal is.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill, but I was wondering if the question involved came within the activities of the Senator's committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange by the usual quit-claim deed, without expense to the United States (when title becomes vested in the Government) the Federal building site located on the northwest corner of Dickerson and Warren Streets at Dover, N. J., now under contract to be purchased by the United States, for a site offered by the city of Dover, located on Sussex Street and Morris Street extended: Provided, That the exchange herein set forth shall be subject to such condithe exchange herein set forth shall be subject to such conditions as to the improvements on the Sussex Street site to be made by the city of Dover as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, and free rental to the Government of the present post-office quarters located on the Dickerson Street site until the new post-office building is completed and occupied. These conditions to be assented to by the city of Dover in order to equalize tions to be assented to by the city of Dover in order to equalize the price of the Sussex Street site. In the event that the ex-change as herein set forth is consummated it is further provided that the unexpended balance of the appropriation authorized in the act of Congress approved March 4, 1931, for a site and build-ing at Dover, N. J., is hereby made available for the construction of the new building on said Sussex Street site.

FEDERAL AID IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS

The bill by Mr. ODDIE (S. 36) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Over. Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will withdraw his objection for a few mo-

Mr. REED. I will withhold the objection for a few moments.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD the report I have submitted from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. ODDIE on May 19, 1932, is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 719, Seventy-second Congress, first session] FEDERAL AIB IN CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS

"Sec. 4. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act of April 9, 1924 (43 Stat. 90), entitled "An act authorizing the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior," as amended by the act of January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1053), and the act of March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1553), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be available until expended in accordance with the provisions of said acts: The sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935; of which sums $1,500,000 may be allocated each year, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of approach roads to national parks and national monuments, inclusive of necessary bridges: Provided, That in lieu of the total cash appropriations herein authorized the Secretary of the Interior may approve projects, incur obligations, and enter into contracts for additional work each fiscal year not exceeding the difference between the amount of the unobligated appropriation for the particular fiscal year and the amount herein authorized for said fiscal year, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Goyernment for the payment of the construction of roads in national parks and national monuments shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligation so created. parks and national monuments shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligation so created. "Sec. 5. All acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect on its passage."

SUPPORT FOR THIS LEGISLATION GENERAL

For the first time in several years extensive hearings were held on this subject. Many witnesses appeared in behalf of this legislation and not a single person testified in opposition. Representatives of the State highway departments presented exhaustive testimony as to the value of Federal participation with the States in road construction and the splendid results obtained.

They were supported by the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the American Federation of Labor, the American Automobile Association, the American Road Bullders' Association, the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, the American Motorists Association, and the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

REGULAR FEDERAL-AID APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1934 AND 1935

The first section of this bill provides for an authorization to continue the regular Federal-aid program through the fiscal years 1934 and 1935, carrying the same amount as was provided for in the authorizations for the fiscal years 1931, 1932, and 1933. While this bill apparently carries $125,000,000, the actual net amount is $109,000,000, since the bill specifically provides for the annual deduction of $16,000,000, or one-fifth of the emergency advance funds of $80,000,000 made available to the States in December, 1930, with the condition that the sum so advanced would be deducted in five annual installments from future allotments of Federal aid. Federal aid.

It will be recalled that this emergency allotment of $80,000,000 was provided to aid in the unemployment situation and the success of this enterprise is overwhelmingly accepted. The annual deduction of the repayment of $16,000,000 has been made for the fiscal year 1933 and this bill includes two further deductions for the years 1934 and 1935. It can readily be seen, therefore, that if this bill as reported by the committee is enacted the Congress is really reducing its Federal-aid program on the basis of economy reductions provided for other governmental activities.

In reality, a reduction has already been made and work is proceeding at present on a reduced basis. In the first four months of 1931 about $81,000,000 of regular Federal-aid funds were pledged to specific projects. In the same period this year only about $32,000,000 have been obligated—a reduction of $49,000,000.

NATIONAL-FOREST HIGHWAYS

The second section of this bill provides for an authorization of $12,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 for the construction of roads and trails through the national forests. This is at the same rate as carried in the three previous fiscal years. In actual administration this amount is divided into two funds, $3,000,000 to be used for the building of roads and trails under the direction of the Forest Service for fire protection and development of the forest reserves; the remaining $9,500,000 to be used for the improvement of highways within the national-forest areas. Since many of our main interstate highways traverse forest reserves, it has become necessary to provide for the construction of these roads.

ROADS OVER PUBLIC LANDS

The third section of the bill provides the sum of $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 for the construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of roads over lands which are wholly owned by the Federal Government outside of the national forests. These roads form important links in the interstate system of roads the same as those through the forests and yet are wholly of roads, the same as those through the forests and yet are wholly in territory owned exclusively by the United States. This authorization is in the same amount as was provided for the fiscal year

BOADS IN NATIONAL PARKS AND MONUMENTS

ROADS IN NATIONAL PARKS AND MONUMENTS

The fourth section of this bill provides for roads in the national parks and monuments. Heretofore the funds provided for this work have been made available in the appropriation bill of the Department of the Interior, but the committee after careful consideration reached the conclusion that all legislation relating to road construction should be centralized in one bill and it, therefore, provided for an authorization for this work as a part of the general Federal aid road bill.

The sum provided for in this section is $7,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1934 and 1935, of which sum $1,500,000 may be allocated each year in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of approach roads to national parks and national monuments, inclusive of necessary bridges.

Furthermore, it is necessary in order that this work may be successfully administered that authority in law in connection with the road appropriation for the National Park Service be similar in authority to that law which now prevails in connection with the Federal aid and forest-highway appropriations. For this reason this section of the bill gives the necessary authority to the Secretary of the Interior for the proper approval of projects.

ALL AVAILABLE FUNDS NOW ALLOCATED

Under the terms of the Federal highway act the Secretary of Agriculture is required to apportion to the States the funds for each succeeding fiscal year on or before January 1, next preceding the beginning of the fiscal year. This provision of the law is for the purpose of allowing the States and the Bureau of Public Roads to make the studies and surveys, and to prepare the plans and specifications necessary before the actual construction operations are started. tions are started.

tions are started.

Normally the allocation of each year's funds has been made just before January 1, but for the past three years the allotments have been made earlier for the purpose of stimulating employment in the building of roads. The making of these Federal funds available during the fall months has made it possible to do all the preliminary work necessary so that the Northern States might begin construction as soon as weather conditions permitted the following spring and so that the Southern States might continue their program of construction through the winter months. This legislation should be passed in this session of Congress in order to provide for construction work during next winter and early spring by enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to make the necessary distribution of funds to the States during the coming fall months.

ing fall months.

ADVANTAGES OF EARLY ENACTMENT

There are other important advantages in the early enactment of this legislation. During the present serious unemployment crisis road construction has been relied upon to a large extent by the States to provide work not only through the summer, but during the past three years, through the winter months. More work has been carried on during the winter months just ended than has ever before been attempted.

Some of the States have been very successful in maintaining a large amount of employment through the winter months. Many of these projects have been made possible only through use of the Federal-aid funds. In such States as Ohio and Michigan, the specifications and plans were drawn to provide the maximum amount of labor possible and a kind of work was selected that could be carried on through the winter months.

There is every reason now to make provision for continuing

There is every reason now to make provision for continuing the same program during next fall, and in order to do this in either the Northern or Southern States it will be necessary to make the allocation of the Federal-aid funds some time early in the fall months.

Another important advantage which will result from the early enactment of this legislation in the present session of Congre-will be its effect on State highway policies. Next winter th will be its effect on State highway policies. Next winter the legislatures of 44 States will meet in regular session. At that time they will provide the funds necessary to carry on the road program and to meet the Federal-aid funds. If Congress acts without delay in the enactment of this legislation the State legislatures will be subject to no uncertainty as to Federal policy. Efficient highway administration is facing a critical period, and it is more necessary than ever that Congress should recognize this condition and make every effort to provide effective leadership to condition and make every effort to provide effective leadership to uphold the present policies which have been thoroughly tried and found satisfactory and upon the basis of which the Federal Government has invested so large an amount of public funds.

1933 BUDGET NOT AFFECTED

While action is necessary now on this measure in order to permit the States to operate as in the past, these authorizations do not affect or add to the Budget requirements for 1933. The expenditures which will be made during the fiscal year 1933 are from the funds already authorized and which have been or are now being put under contract. Taken as a whole, a considerable period elapses between the time that the States award contracts and their actual withdrawal of funds from the Federal Treasury. Some of the States carry the current expenditures and submit vouchers for their Federal aid pro rata after projects are completed

Taking an average of the whole operation, the Federal Treasury is not called upon to meet the obligations to the States until about a year after these have been made. Thus the passage of this regular authorization bill now will permit the States to operate through the late fall and winter months without any material effect upon the Federal Budget for the fiscal year 1933.

effect upon the Federal Budget for the fiscal year 1933.

The committee amendments are as follows:

An amendment has been inserted on page 2, line 4, explicitly providing that $16,000,000 shall be deducted from the full authorization. Although the existing law now provides for this deduction, a restatement is believed necessary fully to explain the situation. Strike out "1932," on page 3, line 6, and insert "1933"; strike out "1933," on line 8, and insert "1934"; and strike out "1934," on line 9, and insert "1935." Due to the fact that this legislation has been greatly delayed the dates for the authorization are pushed forward one year so that the amounts will run continuously with the other amounts provided in the bill.

the other amounts provided in the bill.

To provide road funds for the National Park Service simultaneously with other Federal road funds section 4 is added to the Strike out "6" in section 6, page 4, line 16, and insert "5," so as to read section 5.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this is the regular Federal aid road appropriation bill. Congress has been providing for this work for a number of years past. It is necessary that this authorization be passed at this session and quickly, in order that the various State highway departments may complete their plans which have been worked out in connection with the Bureau of Public Roads. It is highly important that this be done now.

Mr. President, in 1930 the Congress appropriated an emergency sum of $80,000,000 for Federal-aid highway construction, with the understanding that it would be repaid in five years. Already one payment has been made. This bill of mine provides that the $16,000,000 a year shall be repaid from the funds for 1934 and 1935, $125,000,000 each year, which this bill authorizes.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow this bill to be passed. It is of great importance. We have discussed the main features of Federal-aid highway legislation many times on the floor of the Senate. I will not now go into details as time will not permit; we are all hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and allow the bill to pass.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I understand that this is the regular highway Federal-aid program?

Mr. ODDIE. This is the regular Federal aid highway bill and provides for a smaller appropriation than was made

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I say to the Senator that the Highway Department of the State of Michigan cordially agrees with his feeling that there is imminence in the necessity for the passage of the bill?

Mr. ODDIE. I am glad to hear the Senator say that. The Highway Department of Michigan has done unusual and splendid work in carrying out the provisions of the Federal aid highway law, I hope no further objection will be made and that the bill will now pass.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me why the committee has left out the provision that occurs in the former act requiring trees to be specified as a part of the Federal specifications?

Mr. ODDIE. That provision was included in the law some years ago.

Mr. REED. It has been included in the past, but it seems that it is omitted in this instance.

Mr. ODDIE. It is in the existing law.

Mr. REED. I do not think it is in the present law.
Mr. ODDIE. I would be perfectly willing to include such a provision as an amendment, making it subject to the approval of the State highway departments. I know the Senator from Pennsylvania worked to get such a provision in similar measures a few years ago.

Mr. REED. I do not ask any more than that it be made discretionary with the head of the department to include such a specification. I am perfectly well aware that in certain places it is inappropriate to specify shade trees, but I think the committee in good faith toward those of us who believe in it should include such a provision.

Mr. ODDIE. I am perfectly willing for such a provision to go in. It went in the last similar bill at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I recall the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] discussed it at that time also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the purpose to perfect the bill from the floor or to have the proper amendment

Mr. REED. I will prepare the amendment in a few moments, and will then ask to recur to the bill and will make no objection to it if such a provision shall be incorporated in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, is that the bill appropriating $113,000,000 for highways?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the regular annual appropriation bill; but it is not the House appropriation bill, if that is the measure to which the Senator refers.

Mr. ODDIE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask permission to recur to the Federal-aid highway bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has suggested this amendment, which I agree to:

In every case in which, in the judgment of the Secretary Agriculture and the highway department of the Secretary of Agriculture and the highway department of the State in question, it shall be practicable to plant and maintain shade trees along the highways authorized by said act of November 9, 1921, and by this act, the planting of such trees shall be included in the specifications provided in section 8 of the act of November 9, 1921.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 4, after "1935," to familiar with the necessity for this work, and I repeat I insert: "Provided, That in apportioning the foregoing sums among the several States and the Territory of Hawaii for said fiscal years deductions shall be made as reimbursement to the United States of the $80,000,000 emergency advance funds apportioned to such States and the Territory of Hawaii and used in road work, such deductions to be made at the rate of $16,000,000 each fiscal year, in accordance with the item 'Federal-aid highway system' of the act approved December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1031)"; on page 3, line 6, after "June 30," to strike out "1932" and insert "1933"; in line 8, after "June 30," to strike out "1933" and insert "1934"; in line 9, after "June 30," to strike out "1934" and insert "1935"; and after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act of April 9, 1924 (43 Stat. 90), entitled "An act authorizing the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior," as amended by the act of January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1053), and the act of March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1553), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, to be available until expended in accordance with the provisions of said acts: The sum of $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935; of which sums $1,500,000 may be allocated each year, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of approach roads to national discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of approach roads to national parks and national monuments, inclusive of necessary bridges: Provided, That in lieu of the total cash appropriations herein authorized the Secretary of the Interior may approve projects, incur obligations, and enter into contracts for additional work each fiscal year not exceeding the difference between the amount of the unobligated appropriation for the particular fiscal year and the amount herein authorized for said fiscal year and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof and appropriations hereafter made for the construction of roads in national parks and national monuments shall be considered available for parks and national monuments shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging the obligation so created.

So as to make the bill read:

Mr. ODDIE. Yes. Mr. REED. Then I will not have to renew this every time the matter comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that amendment is agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANUFACTURE OF ALCOHOL IN OSAGE COUNTY, OKLA.

The bill (S. 3691) to provide for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes in Osage County, Okla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed an identical bill, being House bill 7123. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the House bill on the . calendar?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not on the calendar, but has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the Committee on Indian Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7123, and the House bill will be substituted on the calendar for the Senate bill, the title of which has just been stated. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7123) to amend the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 983; U. S. C., title 25, section 242) was considered and ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 883; U. S. Code, title 25, sec. 242), declaring all of Osage County, Okla., to be Indian country within the meaning of the acts of Congress making it unlawful to introduce intoxicating liquors in the Indian country, shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following thereto: "Except that the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes shall be permitted in said Osage County, in accordance with the laws of the United States pertaining to the regulation of such industry." industry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3691 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, following the passage of the bill, the portion of the report of the committee which I have indicated by blue pencil marks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This bill has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, as set forth in the following letter, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 9, 1932.

Hon. LYNN J. FRAZIER,

Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: In compliance with your request of February 18, 1932, for a report on S. 3691, to provide for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes in Osage County, Okla., I transmit herewith a memorandum on the subject that has been submitted by the Commis-

Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, May 6, 1932.

Memorandum for the Secretary.

This will refer to the request of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs for a report on S. 3691, being a bill to provide for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes in Osage County, Okla.

The act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L. 969-983), contains the following premision:

lowing provision:

"That all of Osage County, Okla., shall hereafter be deemed to be Indian country within the meaning of the acts of Congress making it unlawful to introduce intoxicating liquors into the Indian country.

S. 3691 is for the purpose of amending that act. S. 3691 is for the purpose of amending that act. Those promoting this legislation state that the Barnsdall Oil Co. has a large refining and manufacturing plant at Barnsdall, Okla., in Osage County, and that they desire to extend and increase their plant to include the manufacture of alcohol in connection with their other manufacturing activities. It is represented that a part of the operations will be the utilization of waste gases, etc., in their present plant, and in addition thereto they will utilize an increased quantity of crude oil from the immediate vicinity. The said act of March 2, 1917, prevents the manufacture of alcohol in said county.

said county.

The Osage Indian Tribe, whose lands are in Osage County, are of course, interested in obtaining increased markets for their oil and other products. Representatives of the oil company presented their plan to the Osage Tribal Council, and that body, by resolution of February 2, 1932 (copy inclosed), approved the securing of the legislation necessary to permit the manufacture and sale of industrial and ethyl alcohol out of crude oil or its by-products for lawful purposes.

This office has been informed that if such plant is authorized it will be subject to inspection, supervision, etc., by other branches of the Government to prevent local or illegal diversion. If the plant is operated so as to prevent diversion of alcohol to the Indians, the latter will apparently benefit by increased demand for oil.

In view of the advantages claimed for the Indians, directly and indirectly, and the assurances that there will be little danger of increased sale of intoxicants to Indians, this office does not feel justified in opposing the proposed legislation.

C. J. Rhoads, Commissioner.

PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO RED LAKE INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8393) providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, which was read as follows:

States, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal timber fund on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Band of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota and to make therefrom payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota, under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payment shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have, accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians. of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether this is desired for the Indians and whether the appropriation is wise and

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the bill provides for a payment of $25 per capita to the Red Lake Indians of Minnesota out of their own money on account of timber funds. The passage of the bill is necessary on account of the exceedingly hard times and low prices of timber and the poor sale for their lumber. They have a lumber mill and also a cooperative fishing plant. The prices have gone down so low that they feel they need this money. They asked for $100, but the department suggested $25, and the bill passed the House in that form. They are badly in need of the money.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3532) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to readjust and close streets, roads, sioner of Indian Affairs, and invite your attention thereto. This department will interpose no objection to the enactment of this less or unnecessary, and for other purposes, was announced proposed legislation. less or unnecessary, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

PROPERTY OF SOCIETY OF SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2178) to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C., which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Washington," to insert the words "District of Columbia," and at the beginning of line 9 to strike out "August 26, 1927," and insert "the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property situated in square 196 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, described as lot 10, together with all the furniture and furnishings now in and upon premises 1227 Sixteenth Street NW., occupied by the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, be, and the same is hereby, exempt from and after the passage of this act from all taxation so long as the same is so occupied and used, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved March 3, 1877, providing for exemptions of church and school property, and acts amendatory thereof. amendatory thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE RIVER, FORT HANCOCK, TEX.

The bill (S. 4554) authorizing the Fort Hancock-Porvenir Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Fort Hancock, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 10585, being Order of Business 745 on the calendar, which is identical with the Senate bill, may be substituted for the Senate bill and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10585) authorizing the Fort Hancock-Porvenir Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Fort Hancock, Tex.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4554 will be indefinitely postponed.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY CORPORATIONS

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 154) to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to withhold his objection for the purpose of permitting me to make a statement.

I should like to say to the Senate that this is a measure which corresponds in very nearly every respect to the Senate joint resolution which was reported favorably by the committee and objected to by two members of the committee, known as Senate Joint Resolution 13.

This House joint resolution is a very important measure, although, apparently, it concerns only the Capital of the United States. It is important because it affects also all of the people of the United States. This matter of public service has needed attention for about 20 years, and the people of the District of Columbia have been coming to Congress to get some remedial legislation for many years.

Congress, in the effort to accomplish this result, has employed expert service to investigate very carefully the transportation of passengers within the District of Columbia, between connecting carriers outside, and also locally. As a result of an investigation by an expert, by the Bureau of Efficiency, and by the Public Utilities Commission this House joint resolution was drawn. It carries out in general all of the provisions recommended by the expert and recommended by the Bureau of Efficiency and by the Public Utilities | the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such Commission.

It is certainly important that Congress should not turn

The petition shall set forth all the facts upon which the claims

It is certainly important that Congress should not turn away from this vital matter, which has been delayed for so many years. There is ample time to pass this legislation and consider all of the suggestions of amendments which we are notified that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper] desire to offer.

I hope the Senate will give this measure the consideration to which it is entitled, not only on account of the fact that is is important in itself but also on account of the fact that the time certainly has come when Congress must give attention to the interests and the affairs of the Capital of this country.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask to have the joint resolution go over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1197) to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness and to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry by establishing an efficient credit system, through which the unjust and unequal burdens placed upon agriculture, during the period of price fixing and deflation, may be lightened, by providing for the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the Federal farm loan system, the Federal reserve banking system, and the Postal Savings Depository System, and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, Senate bill 1197 has just gone over because of an objection which was made. The Agricultural Committee gave extended hearings to this bill; and I hope there is going to be a will on the part of the Senate to afford a chance for its consideration before adjournment is taken.

INDIANS IN OREGON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4572) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 14, after the word "orders" to strike out "or wrongful actions of the Government," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, by either party, as in other cases, to here examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims, arising under or growing out of any treaty, agreement, act of Congress, or Executive order, which certain Indian tribes or bands, or portions thereof, and their detain Indian tribes or bands, or portions thereof, and their descendants, may have against the United States, namely, the Indians described in the ratified treaties of September 10, 1853 (10 Stat. 1018), September 19, 1853 (10 Stat. 1027), November 18, 1854 (10 Stat. 1122), November 25, 1854 (10 Stat. 1125), January 22, 1855 (10 Stat. 1143), and December 21, 1855 (12 Stat. 981), together with those described in the unratified treaties published in Senate Executive Document No. 25, Fifty-third Congress, first session (pp. 8 to 15), except the Coos Bay, Lower Umpqua, and Siusiaw Tribes, it being the intention of this act to include all the Indian tribes, or bands, residing in the State of Oregon, west of the Cascade Range, at the dates of the said treaties, respectively, and their descendants, some of whom, in 1855 or later, were removed by the military authorities of the United States to the Siletz, Coast Range, or the Grande Ronde Reservation, in the said State, except the three tribes last named.

Sec. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts

Sec. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts hereunder they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon any such claim shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleaded as a set-off, and the United States shall be allowed to plead and shall receive credit for all sums, including gratuities, if properly chargeable, paid to or expended for the benefit of any of said nations, tribes, or bands of Indians. The claim or claims of each nation, tribe, or band may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment and consolidation in proper cases. Such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant; and any nation, tribe, or band are based and the laws, treaties, agreements, Executive orders under and upon which recovery is sought, and shall be signed and verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims and who are under contract with said Indians approved in accordance with existing law. A copy of the petition in such suit shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice designated by him, shall appear and defend the interests of the United States: Provided, That any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 10 years from the date of the approval of this act.

Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall allow the attorney or attorneys access to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be proper.

SEC. 3. Upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, based upon actual services rendered, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said nations, tribes, or bands of Indians; and if not otherwise paid, the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said Indians.

or sums found to be due said Indians.

Sec. 4. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said Indians, less attorneys' fees and expenses, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date of the original judgment or decree, and thereafter shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for educational, health, industrial, and other purposes for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. read the third time, and passed.

SUPPORT OF WIVES AND MINOR CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 4107) to amend section 3 of an act, as amended, entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved June 10, 1926, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the amendment carried in the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It increases the amount which may be paid to the wife and children of a man in prison from 50 cents a day to $1 a day. There was no objection to it on the part of anyone.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved June 10, 1926, is hereby amended by striking out the words "50 cents" and substituting the words "$1."

DAMAGES RESULTING FROM FLUCTUATION OF LAKE OF THE WOODS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) to provide for the determination of claims for damages sustained by the fluctuation of the water levels of Lake of the Woods in certain cases, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas in order that the claims of settlers whose property was damaged by reason of fluctuations in the level of Lake of the damaged by reason of fluctuations in the level of Lake of the Woods may be judicially determined, thereby following the expressed intent of the investigation made by the International Joint Commission under a reference from the Governments of the United States and Canada dated June 27, 1912, which terminated in a treaty between the United States and Great Britain in respect of Canada, proclaimed July 17, 1925, in which the two Governments adopted certain recommendations, among which was one that each Government shall on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury that may have resulted to it or its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the level of Lake of the Woods or of the outflow therefrom, caused by the of Lake of the Woods or of the outflow therefrom, caused by the construction of dams in the outlets of Lake of the Woods which have destructively flooded the lands along the United States shores and given rise to complaints of landowners: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods concluded on the 24th day of February, 1925," approved May 22, 1926, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section, to read as follows:

amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. The Secretary of War shall forthwith file a certified copy of the report and awards made by him under section 3 of this act with the clerk of the United States district court, or his deputy, in the district and division of the district in which the lands involved are situated; and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had in such court on such report and awards as upon awards of the commissioners in the case of condemnation proceedings under the provisions of section 1 of this act."

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN NATIONALS AGAINST GERMANY

The resolution (S. Res. 181) directing the Secretary of State to transmit to the agent of the United States all claims and notices of claims of American nationals against the Government of Germany under the treaty of Berlin of August 25, 1921, was considered by the Senate, and was read,

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the agent of the United States, before the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, all claims and notices of claims of American nationals against the Government of Germany, under the treaty of Berlin of August 25, 1921, filed in the Department of State on or before the passage of this resolution.

That the agent of the United States, Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, shall examine all of the claims and notices of claims filed in the agency of the United States and/or in the Department of State by American nationals against the Government of Germany, to determine the character and amount of such claims under the decisions of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, heretofore rendered under the treaty of Berlin, of August 25, 1921, and the principles of international law applicable thereto.

That the agent of the United States Mixed Claims Commission.

That the agent of the United States, Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, be, and is hereby, instructed to prepare and transmit within 60 days after the passage of this resolution a report setting forth as nearly as may be ascertained from the documents now on file the character and amount of the claims, and notices of claims, of American nationals against the Government of Germany, filed on or before the passage of this

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York advise us of the purpose or necessity of this measure? I have in mind the fact that we have a commission which has been sifting for several years listening to testimony and passing upon the claims. I was wondering if the report of this commission would not furnish all the information

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is to facilitate the work of the Mixed Claims Commission that this legislation has seemed desirable.

There is in possession of the State Department a great deal of material which has not been handed over to the commission and which the commission deems necessary to complete their work. In other words, they are proceeding with a job which is tremendously indefinite, because they do not know how big it is. The object of this legislation is to put in the hands of the commission all the material the State Department has, all the claims which have been made through the State Department, in order that the Mixed Claims Commission may coordinate its work and attempt to conclude it speedily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 661, Senate bill 3938, to provide for the transportation of certain juvenile offenders to States under the law of which they have committed offenses or are delinquent, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the unanimousconsent agreement, I do not think that is a proper request. We started at Order of Business 680, and this is prior to the order from which we started. That is going back into a program that was not contemplated in the unanimous-consent agreement. I suggest to the Senator that he withhold his request until we have another call of the calendar. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 10590) to prohibit the misuse of official insignia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is the same as Order of Business No. 668, Senate bill 940.

Mr. KING. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

The bill (H. R. 5651) to amend chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to the condemnation of land for public use, was announced as next in

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that there should be a statement by the Senator reporting the bill of the effect of this legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it has been so long since this bill was before the committee that I have almost forgotten about it; but I understand that it passed the Senate and passed the House, and an amendment has been tendered which provides that in the event the Government pays for property before suit when it takes possession of the property, and the owner of the property elects not to receive the amount paid and to prosecute the suit, and the judgment is that too much money has been paid, the excess shall be returned to the Government. If not enough has been paid, then, of course, judgment is entered against the Govern-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that the bill go over until the next call of the calendar, if you please.

ORDERS OF STATE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARDS

The bill (S. 3243) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the bill is an extremely important one. Perhaps it ought to be given fuller consideration than can be given in the morning hour.

It is a bill that has been introduced at the instance of the utility commissions of many of the States, twenty-odd in number, in order to require in the first instance, where action is commenced in the State, that the public utility shall pursue the remedy in the State in respect to rates before jurisdiction shall attach to the Federal court. I say that very hastily.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas rose.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Arkansas will see that it is a bill of some consequence and some importance, to which the public-utility companies are objecting; but the State utility commissions, with practical unanimity, have requested it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report is unanimous? Mr. JOHNSON. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the case of a bill of that importance, would it not be wiser to take it up when there is more time for its consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON. I frankly concede to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is a bill of importance, and that in this particular morning hour it is a very difficult thing to give it the consideration it deserves. I would not take it amiss if the Senator objected to its consideration, in which event we will endeavor to take it up subsequently

Mr. REED. I do not mean to imply by my objection that I am opposed to the bill, but I have not had time to read it or know what is in it. It is vitally important, of course.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. It is a departure, and a departure upon which there is a very wide controversy between the utility companies-who want to pursue two remedies, first in the State court and then in the Federal court—and the public utility commissions of the States, which want to require them to exhaust their remedy first in the State court on rates alone.

Mr. REED. I see. I think I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

FORT HALL INDIAN SCHOOL RESERVE, IDAHO

The bill (S. 4510) to authorize exchange of small tribal acreage on the Fort Hall Indian school reserve in Idaho for adjoining land was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to arrange and effect an even exchange with the owner of the west half southeast quarter northeast quarter section 2, township 5 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, in Idaho, former irrigable allotment No. 175 on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in Idaho, in which the United States will acquire, in trust for the Fort Hall Indians, title to that part will acquire, in trust for the Fort Hall Indians, title to that part of the 20 acres above described lying east of the right of way of the Oregon Short Line Railroad, in consideration for a deed from the said Secretary of the Interior, which he is hereby authorized to execute, for that part of the west half northeast quarter southeast quarter said section 2 lying west of the said Oregon Short Line Railroad right of way, subject to all existing rights of way.

FIELD SEASON CONTRACTS OF FOREST SERVICE

The bill (S. 4261) to facilitate execution of and economy in field season contracts of the Forest Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am advised that a similar bill has passed the House. I am not accurately advised; and for the present, while I make inquiry into the matter, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

MORTON NURSERY SITE, NEBRASKA

The bill (S. 772) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the Morton Nursery site, in the county of Cherry, State of Nebraska, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to advertise for sale and to sell to the highest is hereby, authorized to advertise for sale and to sell to the highest responsible bidder the premises known as the Morton Nursery in the county of Cherry, State of Nebraska, comprising an area of 77 93/100 acres of land, more or less, together with the buildings and other improvements thereon, upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States; to convey such property to the purchaser thereof by quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt, after deducting the expenses incident to said sale.

incident to said sale.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL BANK ACT TO VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 4574) to extend the provisions of the national bank act to the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the national bank act, as amended, and all other acts of Congress relating to national banks shall, in so far as not locally inapplicable hereafter, apply to the Virgin Islands of the United States: Provided, That (1) any bank which shall organize under the authority of this act may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, establish or acquire and keep in operation not more than two branches in the Virgin States; (2) said bank and its branches shall. and keep in operation not more than two branches in the Virgin Islands of the United States; (2) said bank and its branches shall have the right to act as broker or agent for others as granted by the act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 752; U. S. C., title 12, ch. 2, sec. 92), notwithstanding that the population of the place in which it is located may exceed 5,000; (3) the Comptroller of the Currency shall assess and said bank shall pay the expense of examinations of said bank and its branches.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask that the report on Senate bill 4574 be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 705, Seventy-second Congress, first session] EXTENSION OF THE NATIONAL BANK ACT TO THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency,

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 4574):

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4574) entitled "A bill to extend the provisions of the national bank act to the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes," having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

This is a departmental bill prepared by the Treasury Department and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The following letter from Secretary Wilbur under date of May 2, 1932, in support of the bill, is hereto appended and made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
Washington, May 2, 1932.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,

Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
My Dear Senator Norbeck: The National Bank of the Danish West Indies, with main offices at St. Thomas and branch offices at Christiansted and Frederiksted, St. Croix, Virgin Islands of the United States, was granted a charter in 1904 by the Danish Government, and under this charter it was designated as the bank of issue in the islands for a period of 30 years. This charter was continued in effect until expiration by the treaty of purchase whereby the United States acquired the Virgin Islands from Den-whereby the United States acquired the Virgin Islands from Denmark in 1917.

In anticipation of withdrawal in 1934 the National Bank of the Danish West Indies has already ceased to make loans and is otherwise winding up its business and failing to serve the interest and needs of the people of the Virgin Islands. This is a situation which will gradually become more and more aggravated as the actual date of withdrawal in 1934 approaches, unless immediate steps are taken to organize and establish an American bank in the Virgin Islands to take over the activities of the Danish bank, which they have indicated they will reliquish at any time a new Virgin Islands to take over the activities of the Danish bank, which they have indicated they will relinquish at any time a new banking institution is set up to take over its business.

At my request, the Secretary of the Treasury recently directed that two banking investigators proceed to the Virgin Islands for the purpose of making a thorough examination and study of the operations of the Danish bank since it was established in 1904, and also to survey general conditions in the islands as they pertain to the establishment of a new American banking institution to succeed the present bank. These investigators have recently returned and submitted their report, which contains a recommendation that the type of bank needed in the islands is a national bank. In order to organize and establish a United States national bank in the Virgin Islands, it becomes necessary that the provisions of the national bank act be extended to the Virgin Islands.

I inclose a draft of proposed legislation, prepared by the Treasury Department, extending the provisions of the national bank act to the Virgin Islands and it is requested that the matter receive your favorable and prompt consideration.

Sincerely yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR.

RIO GRANDE BRIDGE, BOCA CHICA, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 11246) authorizing the Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Boca Chica, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject also to the approval of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, El Paso, Tex., and of the proper authorities in the Republic of Mexico.

Sec. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Boca Chica Bridge Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international com-

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Texas upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

Sec. 3. The said Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

I can not state offhand the number of children, but there are a great many there.

Mr. REED. Quite seriously, Mr. President, I am impressed with the number of hills on the calendar approximation.

in the act of March 23, 1906.

Sec. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same s fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL, FRAZER, MONT.

The bill (S. 4391) to authorize appropriations for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $15,000 for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont., and for necessary equipment in connection therewith for manual, laboratory, and other lines of training.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN PATENTED LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4390) authorizing the exchange of certain patented lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and upon application of Henry J. Kirn and Louise H. Kirn, to cancel fee simple patent issued to them for the southwest quarter of northeast quarter section 12, township 30 north, range 50 east, principal meridian, Montana, containing 40 acres, and to cause a new trust patent to be issued to them covering the same land, of the form and legal effect as provided by the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 383), and amendments thereto, such patent to be effective from the date of the original trust patent, and the land shall be subject to extensions of the trust made by Executive order on other allotments of members of the same Executive order on other allotments of members of the same tribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect in any way the vested interests of anyone other than the persons named herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel patent in fee issued to Henry J. Kirn and Louise H. Kirn."

PUBLIC SCHOOL, FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 3817) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the extension of the public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, how many children would use that school?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that practically all the children in this vicinity, or at least a large portion of it, are Indian children. The high school is to be where the Indian agency is located, and the children from a vast area on the Indian reservation will come there. The department is doing away with the Indian school now being used by the Government and putting the children into public schools wherever they can. The town and the Government are supposed to build this school together.

Mr. REED. How many children will use it?

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry to say I can not give the Senator the figures offhand.

Mr. REED. I know the area is vast, but the area is not going to school. It is just the children who are going to

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Indians out there in the vast open spaces are very prolific. If the Senator would come out there-Mr. REED. I have been there; I know.

Mr. WHEELER. There is a tremendous number of chil-pressed with the number of bills on the calendar appropriating fifty, seventy-five, a hundred thousand dollars, for schools at various points throughout the mountain country, all on the theory that some Indians are going to those schools

Mr. WHEELER. This school is to be right in the heart of an Indian reservation, and, as a matter of fact, I think there are vastly more Indian children than white children there. The Government heretofore has had a boarding school at that place, and they are proposing to do away with that boarding school and send the children to public school. Anybody familiar with conditions will testify that the children are much better off going to the public schools than in going to the Indian boarding schools, that it is cheaper for the Government, as a matter of fact, in the long run, than to have the Indian children in the boarding schools.

Mr. REED. I shall not object, but I have grave doubt about this kind of spending in this kind of times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be ap-Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district No. 45, town of Wolf Point, and county of Roosevelt, Mont., for the extension and betterment of the public high-school building at Wolf Point, Mont: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms except as to payment of tuition, as other children. to all Indian children of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one-half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

KICKAPOO INDIAN LANDS, OKLAHOMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4339) repealing certain provisions of the act of June 21, 1906, as amended, relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of Kickapoo and affiliated Indians of Oklahoma, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, beginning with line 1, to insert the following paragraph:

All lands from which restrictions have heretofore been removed by operation of said act, still held by the Indians and free from encumbrances, the restrictions under which such lands were formerly held are hereby reimposed, to continue for a period of 10 years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, further extend said period in accordance with existing law.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph relating to the sale and encumbrance of lands of the Kickapoo and affiliated Indians under the heading "Kickapoo" (34 Stat. L. 363) in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 21, 1906, as amended, is hereby repealed.

All lands from which restrictions have heretofore been removed by operation of said act, still held by the Indians and free from encumbrances, the restrictions under which such lands were formerly held are hereby reimposed, to continue for a period of 10 years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, further extend said period in accordance with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNAKE RIVER WATER, IDAHO AND WYOMING

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) to permit a compact or agreement between dren there. I have not taken the time to count them, and the States of Idaho and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Snake River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "apportion-ment," to strike out the word "among" and to insert the word "between," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas the Snake River and its tributaries are interstate streams flowing through the States of Idaho and Wyoming; and Whereas the above-named States are vitally interested in the possible development of the Snake River and its tributaries for irrigation, power, domestic, and navigation uses; and Whereas the plans for future reclamation development must take into consideration the needs of the States and the water-right problems of interstate streams, and an agreement must be reached by the States concerned regarding the economic apportionment of waters of said interstate streams; and Whereas it is desirable that a compact for the economic apportionment of the waters of the Snake River and its tributaries for irrigation, power, domestic, and navigation purposes be entered that the interests of the United States be considered in the drawing of said compact, by authorized representatives of each of said States and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Idaho and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1934, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between said States of the water supply of the Snake River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon conditions that a suitable person shall be appointed by the President of the United States from the Department of the Interior, who shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any comin said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States

expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DIVISION OF THE WATERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7914) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement not later than January 1, 1936, providing for an equitable division and apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Yellowstone River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to Congress of the proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any such compact or agreement entered into: Provided, That any upon either of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislature of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The bill (S. 4565) to amend the railway labor act was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], I ask that this bill may go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oregon realizes that the bill would permit pilots and other employees of the air-transport lines carrying the mails to have the same right to appeal to the Board of Arbitration that is now granted to workers on the railroads which carry the mails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair undestood the Senator from Oregon to have objected in behalf of a Senator who is absent.

Mr. McNARY. I know nothing about the merits of the bill, but the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] is necessarily absent to-day, and he requested me, in case this order was reached, to object to its consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the objection just a moment, so that I may explain the bill. in order that Senators may understand it?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The situation, briefly, is this: In the case of mail crossing this country by rail, if there is a disagreement in regard to wages between a railroad company and its employees, in order that there may be no delay in the mails and in order that justice may be done, we permit such a dispute to go to a board of arbitration. That has been the practice for several years, and has worked extremely well. The result has been that instead of strikes and instead of the mail being held up, we have a board of arbitration which takes the matter up and decides it equitably.

Mails now are going across the country by airplane. If there is a dispute between the owner of an airplane, or of a line running an airplane, and the pilots or the mechanics concerned therein, the pilots and mechanics have no other recourse than to strike. There is no board of arbitration to whom they can appeal. This bill would merely permit them to be in the same class with the employees of the railroads and have a chance to have their cases laid before the board of arbitration. It seems to me the only fair thing to do, and I am very sorry the Senator from Delaware is not here, in order that the matter might be explained to him.

I know that there are certain persons interested in air mail lines who object, just as there were certain railway executives who did not want their employees to be able to bring them, with compulsion, before a fair board of arbitration, and I regret that state of affairs. I do not think they are acting wisely in asking anyone to object to the consideration of this bill. It seems to me only fair that the pilots and the mechanics connected with the air transport service should have the same right of appeal to a board of mediation that is now accorded to railway employees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS OF RIVER AND HARBOR ACT TO VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 4680) to extend certain provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, to the Virgin Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, this bill should be passed, and I have sent for the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], who is in the corridor, to ask him if he will not come in and permit the bill to go through to-day, because if it does not go through to-day it probably will have little chance of becoming a law. It is a perfectly innocuous measure asked for by the Governor of the Virgin Islands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. For whom has the Senator sent?

Mr. JOHNSON. For the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], and I am glad to see he has come into the Chamber. He had an amendment he stated he would like to offer to the bill. I ask him if he can not withdraw his amendment and let the measure go through?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Postmaster General has been entering into contracts with shipping companies providing subsidies to those companies running lines to various parts of the world. He is granting one now to a line running, I believe, from New York or Savannah to Balboa, which is one of our possessions in the Panama Canal Zone, although he is prohibited by an act from entering into such a contract.

This proposal would permit of a mail contract to the Virgin Islands. Of course, no mail would be carried, or substantially none, because whatever mail is carried is just dropped there. If I could have an assurance that it is not the purpose of the bill to establish a mail subsidy between our country and the Virgin Islands, I should be delighted not to offer the amendment, but otherwise I think that the Congress ought not to give additional opportunity for the Postmaster General to give out these subsidies to companies which do not need them, costing the Government untold millions of dollars.

that this is the genesis of the bill? Governor Pearson, of the Virgin Islands, called upon me and stated that it was utterly impossible to have a vessel or certain vessels stop at the islands under the existing situation. He was seeking to repair a deprivation which had occurred in reference to a vessel stopping there. There was not the slightest idea on his part, I am perfectly certain-and none surely upon mine-and no thought on the part of anybody on the face of the earth in respect to mail contracts. That is the situation, so far as I am aware of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have these vessels been stopping there, and have they ceased stopping there?

Mr. JOHNSON. There was a vessel of some line which stopped there which has quit, and this measure would enable some other vessel to stop there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I know that the Senator from California does not want to pay an immense subsidy to some American-line vessel or some foreign-line vessel. We pay both American lines and foreign companies in the same way. We pay them all subsidies when they stand in with the Postmaster General.

Mr. JOHNSON. When this matter first came up I asked the Senator from Tennessee if he would not make the requisite inquiry of Governor Pearson or of others who were familiar with the situation, so as to satisfy himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did; but I was taken ill, unfortunately, and I have not made the inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senator whether he will not make the inquiry and satisfy himself, and then when we have the next call of the calendar we can take this small measure up?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be delighted to do that. Mr. JOHNSON. That is all I ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] for a moment.

There are a few bills on the calendar which can not be reached by 1 o'clock. I suggest that unless some reason prevents, we arrange to proceed with the call of the calendar under the present order until it is completed. It will take only a few moments, and certainly if Senate bills are to receive consideration by the House at this session, it will be necessary to get them over to the House as hurriedly as possible.

Mr. McNARY. I join with the Senator in that request. I would like to refer the matter, however, to the Senator in charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have not looked at the calendar closely, and do not know how many bills are on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are about 60 more bills on the calendar.

Mr. JONES. I will be willing to have the call of the calendar continued for a few minutes, and see if we can not complete the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

LISTON RANGE REAR LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, DEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 79) to provide for conveyance of a portion of the Liston Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation, New Castle County, State of Delaware, for highway purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF EDISTO RIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3951) to provide a preliminary examination of the Edisto River and its branches, South and North Edisto, S. C., with a view to the control of its flood, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. EMMETT HAMILTON

Mr. JOHNSON. May I say to the Senator from Tennessee | from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to D. Emmett Hamilton, in full settlement for carrying additional mail on route No. 29449, and not covered in his then existing contract with the Post Office Department, and which additional mail forced upon him by the Postmaster General caused the claimant undue financial loss and hardship.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BEATRICE I. MANGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 329) for the relief of Beatrice I. Manges, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof $1,000, and $50 per month in an amount not to exceed $2,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, and $50 per month in an amount not to exceed $2,500, to Beatrice I. Manges, of Cleveland, Ohio, as damages for injuries received November 7, 1918, when a United States Army truck collided with an automobile of which she was an occupant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANNIE SWEARINGEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 363) for the relief of Nannie Swearingen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof '$50 per month in an amount not to exceed $5,000," so as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $50 per month in an amount not to exceed $5,000, to Nannie Swearingen to compensate her for the death of her husband, who was struck by a Government-owned postal motor vehicle on November 26, 1926.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4318) for the relief of Horace G. Knowles was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

RELIEF ON FEDERAL IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 4614) to amend section 14 of an act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant certain other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636), as amended (46 Stat. 249), was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Klamath irrigation district, in the northern part of California and the southern part of Oregon, wants to make a resurvey for the purpose of reclassifying the land with respect to its productivity. It does not require any appropriation. It is simply for the purpose of classifying the lands due to seepage from some of the drainage districts.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to adjust water-The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5242) for the relief of D. COLUMBIA RIVER WATERS

The bill (H. R. 5649) to extend the life of "An act to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Montana, respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries, and for other purposes," was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the numerals "1935," to insert:

Provided, That the State of Wyoming shall be made a party to such compact or agreement.

So as to make the bill read:

Be tt enacted, etc., That the time within which the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, and Montana may enter into a compact or agreement respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries as authorized by the act approved March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1268), and the amendatory acts of April 13, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 247), and March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1403), is hereby extended to January 1, 1935: Provided, That the State of Wyoming shall be made a party to such compact or agreement. such compact or agreement

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RECORDING OF MORTGAGES, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4444) to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, at the top of page 8, to insert:

(c) In the event such banking institution is named in a deed of trust as sole trustee or as cotrustee with an individual trustee, the recorder, upon request, shall identify the note secured by said deed of trust in the manner provided and for the fees prescribed in section 3 of this act.

And on page 9, line 1, after the word "same" and the period, to insert:

When such banking institution shall certify to the recorder that it holds on deposit the sum required by the deed of trust to be paid for the release in whole or in part of said deed of trust, the recorder shall accept for record and record such relief.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc.

MIGRATORY BIRD SANCTUARIES

The bill (S. 4726) to supplement the migratory bird conservation act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the migratory bird treaty act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this bill seems to provide some kind of tax requirement. I think it had better go over.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am not only against the bill, but I am amazed that the committee having charge of this proposed legislation should have reported the bill to the Senate. In two separate Congresses we fought out the fight on the dollar Federal license fee, and I thought the Senate had clearly decided the matter. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF BREAKWATER, INDIANA HARBOR, IND.

The bill (S. 4573) authorizing the sale of the southerly end of the breakwater at Indiana Harbor, Ind., was considered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I notice the bill authorizes the sale of a tract of land, and instead of covering the proceeds into the Treasury, it instructs the application of $114,180 to the maintenance and improvement of Indiana Harbor.

Surely we are not going to make an appropriation for a specific river and harbor project in that fashion. I move to amend by striking out, on page 1, line 10, all after the numerals "$114,180," as follows:

And to apply the same sum to the maintenance of the improvement of Indiana Harbor, Ind.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words "and to pay the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I think I am willing to accept the amendment. The War Department passed on the bill and is very heartily in favor of its provisions. However, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, is authorized to sell to the Inland Steel Co. approximately 1,903 feet of the southerly end of the existing east breakwater of the river and harbor improvement, Indiana Harbor, Ind., subject to such conditions and limitations as he may impose to insure proper maintenance of the breakwater and to protect the interests of navigation, for the sum of $114,180, and to pay the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States.

STREET LINES AND LAND TRANSFERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4396) to provide for readjustment of street lines and the transfer of land for school, park, and highway purposes in the northeast section of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this appears to be a bill of some importance. I think its provisions should be explained.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill is founded on the model bill, so called, which has been enacted by many of the States to take care for children born out of wedlock. There were long hearings held by the District Committee. It was the unanimous view of the committee that we should have a provision in the District laws similar to the provisions in most of the States. The matter was discussed at length by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] and other lawyers upon the District Committee. Senators who read the bill will find nothing in it that is novel. It follows the usual custom as regards the care of illegitimate children.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears to have been approved by the District Commissioners and by the corporation counsel.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERTA C. HUGHES

The bill (H. R. 3527) for the relief of Berta C. Hughes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Berta C. Hughes, widow of John H. Hughes, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 in full satisfaction of all claims against priated, the sum of $500 in run satisfaction of an claims against the United States on account of the sale for alleged storage charges, not in fact due, by the Alaska Railroad Co. at Nenana, Alaska, on July 31, 1926, of a drilling outfit belonging to such John H. Hughes, deceased.

SALE OF BONDS BY JUNEAU, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 5052) to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds in pursuance to the act of Congress of February 11. 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town was considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask with respect to this and the next bill whether the inhabitants, speaking through the municipal council of the two cities or the Governor of Alaska, favor the two measures.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Utah that the inhabitants have requested it, and it has the approval of the Alaskan authorities.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of February 11, 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town.

Sec. 2. That the common council of said town is hereby authorized to direct the amount, if any, of the funds arising from said bonds that shall be used for either or both of said purposes.

SALE OF BONDS BY PETERSBURG, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6487) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for the purpose of improving and enlarging the capacity of the municipal light and power plant and the improvement of the water and sewer systems and for the purpose of retiring or purchasing bonds heretofore issued by the town of Petersburg, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $40,000 for necessary improvements to the municipal electric light and power plant, owned by the town of Petersburg, Alaska, and the transmission lines and distribution system and for the purpose of doubling the capacity of said electric light and power plant; the sum of $25,000 for necessary improvements to the water system and water supply and sewer system of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, and the distribution systems thereof; and the sum of $35,000 to be used to purchase or retire outstanding bonds of the said town of Petersburg, Alaska, which bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum.

SEC. 2. That before such bonds shall be issued, a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, and held in the manner pursuant to law after legal notice thereof, at which election the question of the issuance of said bonds shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Petersburg, whose names appear on the last assessment roll or tax roll of said town for the purposes of municipal taxation. Not less than 30 days' notice of such election shall be given in a newspaper Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Petersburg, printed and published in said town, and of general circulation, before the date fixed for such election.

before the date fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That said election shall be conducted in all respects in accordance with existing statutes enacted by Congress and the legislature of the Territory of Alaska, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be as far as possible and practicable in accordance with the requirements of existing laws governing general or special elections in said municipality. Said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of such bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the city of Petersburg, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds and which said interest shall not exceed 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and the same shall not be sold for less than their par value with accrued interest, and they shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the town of Petersburg may reserve the right to pay off said bonds or any portion thereof in numerical order at the rate of not to exceed $15,000 thereof per annum from and after the expiration of five years from the date of issuance of such bonds as shown on the face thereof. The principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, or at such bank or banks or such place or places as may be designated by the common council of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, such place or places of payment to be designated and set forth in each of the respective bonds issued: Provided further, That each of such bonds shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, at the time of their issuance, and there shall be impressed thereon the official seal of said town.

Sec. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than that specified in this act, and such bonds shall be sold only when, and in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be dispensed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes hereinabove set forth.

GOVERNMENT WHARF AT JUNEAU, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6713) for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to submit, for the consideration of Congress, such estimates as are in his judgment necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska, constructed under authority contained in Public Resolution No. 33, Sixty-ninth Congress, approved May 28, 1926.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) authorizing appropriations for the maintenance by the United States of membership in the International Council of Scientific Unions was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does it cost $5,000 for membership in that organization? I thought we were rather opposed to international associations and agreements and what not. I would be glad to learn if this is the entrance fee and the cost per year?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator who reported the joint resolution is not present.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

STATUE OF GEN. JOHN SEVIER

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) submitted by Mr. McKellar on January 7, 1932, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound 5,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Gen. John Sevier, presented by the State of Tennessee, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee.

copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

STATUES OF JUNIPERO SERRA AND THOMAS STARR KING

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21) submitted by Mr. Shortede on the calendar day of May 27, 1932, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound 5,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Junipero Serra and Thomas Starr King, presented by the State of California, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

STATUES OF JEFFERSON DAVIS AND JAMES Z. GEORGE

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24) submitted by Mr. Harrison on the calendar day of May 27, 1932, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed with illustrations and bound 15,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Jefferson Davis and James Z. George, presented by the State of Mississippi, of which 1,000 shall be for the Senate and 2,300 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 11,700 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Mississippi.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

LYNN BROS.' BENEVOLENT HOSPITAL

The bill (S. 2613) for the relief of Lynn Bros.' Benevolent Hospital was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask why the Government is paying this hospital bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, this bill covers a claim filed by a hospital at Pocatello, Idaho, for payment of services rendered. It covers one of a number of bills filed by the hospital at Pocatello, Idaho, for the treatment and care of Indians on the reservation at that place. There is no hospital on the reservation and no hospital facilities there. From time to time services are rendered by this hospital. There is no way of collecting for them without a special act of Congress. The object of the bill is to provide for their payment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Were the services rendered under contract or on what authority does the hospital receive Indian patients for treatment?

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. There are oftentimes emergency cases taken to the hospital without definite authority. That is the reason for the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see that Mr. Rhoads, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommends against the passage of the bill. I want to observe, also, that from my State a number of communications have been addressed to me by persons who have furnished hospitalization to Indians and have cared for them. I have appealed to the Indian Bureau, and they say that there is no provision for the payment of such services. If we shall pass this bill, there will be an enormous number of claims presented to the Government for hospitalization and for care of Indians. It seems to me it would be a dangerous precedent. If this be a legitimate claim, it ought to come through the Indian Bureau and be charged against the Indian Bureau and against the funds of the Indians. I do not think we ought to pass this proposed legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Utah that the only reason why this proposed legislation is asked for is that some of the Indians need hospital attention and can not get it otherwise. If some doctor or some hospital takes them in and treats them, should they go without being compensated? I submit that we can not expect people, without compensation, to care for Indians who are the wards of the Government. By reason of the fact that they have no funds of their own, we have either got to let them go about the streets diseased and without must do its duty and pay for such services. This, in my judgment, is a proper and just claim. The Committee on Indian Affairs examined it very carefully, and we decided that it ought to be paid.

Mr. KING. I regret exceedingly to offer any objection to this claim. The Senator from Montana knows the sympathy that I have for the Indians and the fight I have been making for years for their protection. I feel that in many instances the Indian Bureau has been derelict, but I know of scores and scores of cases in my own State and elsewhere where charges will be made against the Government for the care of Indians if we shall pass this bill and establish this precedent.

I have no objection to referring the question to the Indian Bureau, and if the Indian Bureau shall make an investigation and find that these Indians were the wards of the Govment or that they ought to be wards of the Government and shall make a recommendation, and some policy shall be determined upon by which the wards of the Government or Indians that are without protection shall, under certain circumstances, be cared for, and a general plan shall be adopted to deal with the situation, I will be very glad to support such a measure. But it seems to me that to pass this bill at the present time, with the uncertainties that will attend it, would be most unfair, and I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Couzens in the chair). Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

DR. A. M. NEWTON, OF POCATELLO, IDAHO

The bill (S. 3188) for the relief of Dr. A. M. Newton, of Pocatello, Idaho, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, that bill falls in the same classification as the bill to which the Senator from Utah just objected, does it not, may I ask the Senator from Titah?

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. The bill covers the same kind of a claim.

Mr. KING. I think it would fall under the same category. There is an adverse report on the bill, and I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

HOLY FAMILY HOSPITAL, ST. IGNATIUS, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2941) for the relief of the Holy Family Hospital, St. Ignatius, Mont., which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$14,957.20" and to insert "$8,825.66," and on page 2, line 3, after the name "Montana," to strike out "between July 1, 1914, and" and insert "prior to and including," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the Holy Family Hospital, St. Ignatius, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,825.66, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for compensation for the care by such hospital of persons admitted thereto under authority of the Flathead Indian Agency, State of Montana, prior to and including November 30, 1931.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears that the claim contained in that bill was originally reported for $14,957.20. The committee reduced it by nearly one half. That illustrates the difficulty of merely taking anybody's word for bills of this character.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. I will state to the Senator that this bill was introduced by myself for the original amount, basing it upon the hospital's statement. I submitted the matter to the department; the department checked it up, and recommended to the committee that the amount should be reduced, as the bill is now proposed to be amended, to the sum of $8,825.66. As reduced, the bill should be paid. As a matter of fact, the department does not dispute that the remainder of the amount claimed was incurred, but it was read the third time, and passed.

medical care or else the Government of the United States, prior to the time when we had a policy similar to the one which we have now.

Mr. KING. Is the bill based on a contract?

Mr. WHEELER. The Holy Family Hospital is the only hospital upon the Flathead Reservation. The Government has a contract with the mission there, but the bureau ran out of funds; they notified the hospital that they had run out of funds, but the hospital said, "We are not going to turn out the Indians who need hospital treatment because you have not the funds; we will go ahead and treat them and apply for payment."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The department recommends the passage of the bill which the appropriation re-

Mr. WHEELER. The department recommends the passage of the bill with the reduced appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator indicate in what fashion this measure differs from the previous bills which were not passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. The department has checked the items and recommended the bill's passage, and let me say that there is this difference, that this is a hospital located right on the reservation where the Indians are wards of the Government. There is not any question about that whatsoever.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand there is also this difference, that there was a contract entered into by which the Indians were to be received and cared for; but the funds became exhausted and the hospital continued to care for them, relying upon the bureau to obtain the necessary

Mr. WHEELER. The department itself says-and I quote from the report-

However, in view of the fact that no Government hospital facilities are available and that the Holy Family Hospital has been giving good service to these Indians for a number of years at reasonable charges, it is the opinion of this office that settlement should be made for the accounts of all enrolled Flathead Indians designated on the list as "ward" and "nonward" from the list as "ward" and "nonward" from the list as "ward". July 1, 1926, to November 30, 1931. These accounts total $8,825.66.

We took the recommendation of the department as they had checked the items, accepted the statement that the bill was just, and recommended its passage for the amount the department said was just.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, before disposing of this particular bill, let me say with respect to the two bills which we have just passed over that the information I have is that they are all on the same common plane. What I have not been able to get from the department is why they recommended the passage of the bill now pending and did not make a favorable recommendation on the others. I am sure that the pending bill is meritorious; I do not want to be put in the position of objecting to it.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the Senator will not object. Let me say to him that I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; I felt the bills in which he is interested should be passed and I recommended to the committee that they be passed and suggested that, notwithstanding the recommendations of the department, in my judgment the bills were just. I hope now that the Senator will not take the position because the department did not recommend his bills but did recommend the pending one that he will object upon that ground.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, in order to make myself perfectly clear about the matter, let me say that I am advised that the circumstances surrounding the bills are practically the same. I am, however, going to withhold objection to the passage of the pending bill because I think they all should be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SPECIAL MEDICAL AND SURGICAL WORK, FORT PECK RESERVATION

The bill (H. R. 10239) creating a reimbursable fund to be used for special medical and surgical work among the Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over. I may say with respect to the bill that there is a provision for a continuous appropriation of $3,000 for special medical and surgical attention. Appropriations of that kind are wholly improper, and, moreover, all these Indian items ought to come to us in the Indian appropriation bill and should be included in the amount carried in that bill. I think it is very unfortunate these separate bills come before us dealing with Indian questions

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

CRIMES BY INDIANS

The bill (S. 4511) to amend sections 328 and 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and sections 548 and 549 of the United States Code of 1926 was announced as

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill and to inquire if there is any necessity for this proposed criminal statute?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, was objection made to

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has asked that the bill be explained.

Mr. KING. I asked if there is not a statute now sufficient to deal with the alleged offenses covered by the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. There is; but the bill provides an amendment to the existing statute which the department asked to have adopted in order to better prosecute certain crimes among the Indians. After careful consideration of the matter, the committee suggested amendments, and, with the amendments incorporated, recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. I will not object.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendment on page 1, line 8, after the word "incest," to strike out "carnal knowledge"; in line 9, after the word "kill," to strike out "assault with intent to rape"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "weapon," to strike out, "assault with intent to do great bodily harm "; and in line 13, after the word "the," to strike out "offenses rape and carnal knowledge," and insert "offense rape," so as to make the bill

Be it enacted, etc., That section 328 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and section 548 of title 18 of the United States Code of 1926 are hereby amended to read as follows:

Code of 1926 are hereby amended to read as follows:

"All Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, incest, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, arson, burglary, robbery, and larceny on and within any Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States Government, including rights of way running through the reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner, and be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons comsubject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That any Indian who commits the crime of rape upon any female Indian within the limits of any Indian reservation shall be imprisoned at the discretion of any indian reservation shall be imprisoned at the discretion of the court: Provided further, That as herein used the offense rape shall be defined in accordance with the laws of the State in which the offense was committed.

"The foregoing shall extend to prosecutions of Indians in South Dakota under section 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and section 549 of title 18 of the United States Code of 1926."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, PEARLINGTON, MISS.

The bill (S. 4679) authorizing the Louisiana Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pearl River at or near Pearlington, Miss., was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order of business No. 826, being House bill 11020, may be substituted for the Senate bill and passed, and that order of business 803, being Senate bill 4679, may thereupon be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11020) authorizing the Louisiana Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pearl River at or near Pearlington, Miss.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Order of Business 803, being Senate bill 4679, will be indefinitely post-

REIMBURSABLE DEBTS OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10884) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust reimbursable debts of Indians and tribes of Indians, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a House bill. After it passed the House, hearings were held before the Senate committee, and certain amendments were agreed to by Congressman Leavitt, of Montana, who was on the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and members of the Indian Bureau, together with our committee. There are two more amendments that they have asked to go in, and I ask unanimous consent to offer these two amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, this is a very important measure. It involves millions of dollars, as the Senator knows-perhaps tens of millions, if we take into account the twenty-five to practically forty millions which have been expended for irrigation projects. My attention has been called to what it is believed are some defects, and I desire to offer one or two amendments. I have not prepared them. Will the Senator let the measure go over until the next call of the calendar?

Mr. FRAZIER. Perhaps the amendments I have are the ones to which the Senator refers.

Mr. KING. I am not sure, because I have not had time to confer about the matter.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to offer these amendments: On page 2, line 1, after the word "Indian," insert the word "owned," and on page 2, line 6, after the word levied," insert "against such lands."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those amendments will be considered as offered and pending.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. The department is very anxious to have it passed.

Mr. KING. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS ADJACENT TO NATIONAL FORESTS IN OREGON

The bill (S. 763) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange act to lands adjacent to the national forests in the State of Oregon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 485). be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to any lands within 6 miles of the boundaries of national forests in the State of Oregon. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the national forest nearest to which they are situated.

USE OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS FOR RECREATION, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 773) to facilitate the use and occupancy of national-forest lands for purposes of residence, recreation, education, industry, and commerce, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with an amendment, on page 2, after line 9, to strike out:

Ssc. 2. That in the administration of the national forests under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1095), and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and in coordination with the activities authorized by such acts, the Secretary of [Agriculture may, and he hereby is authorized to, take such measures as he may deem necessary to develop and make available for public use and enjoyment the recreational, educational, and related values of the national forests so far as may be compatible with the purposes for which they were created and with the proper conservation of their scenic and wild-life resources.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to authorize the occupancy and use of national-forest lands by permit or lease for purposes of residence, recreation, education, industry, and commerce, not incompatible with the best use and management of the nanot incompatible with the best use and management of the national forests, for periods of not more than 30 years and for areas of not more than 80 acres, and during the life of any permit or lease issued or executed under the provisions of this act the lands described therein shall not be subject to entry or appropriation under the public land laws of the United States except where the right to make such entry or appropriation was legally established prior to the date of approval of this act, but nothing contained herein shall prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from canceling, revoking, or otherwise terminating such permit or lease because of a breach of its terms and conditions or for other just cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 11499) for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3346) to provide for the escheat to the United States of certain deposits in national banks was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a Senator who is not in the Chamber has asked me to request that this bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2370) for the conservation of lobsters, to regulate interstate transportation of lobsters, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that that bill may go over. I also ask that a telegram which I have received may be printed in the RECORD in this connection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, and the telegram will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

GLOUCESTER, MASS., June 7, 1932.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH Washington:

Washington:

The Consolidated Lobster Co. (Inc.), largest distributor of lobsters in the world, wish to register in opposition to White-Nelson lobster bill. Passage means 2,250 Maine lobster fishermen and a few more in New England will, of course, reap a harvest by high lobster prices at the expense of hundreds of thousands of your constituents, as well as all lobster eaters in every State in the last and the constituents of lobster are state of the lost of Union. Passage will open up new bootlegging of lobsters, as State laws here vary as to length—legal. This company also has largest holdings in Maine, but haven't been successful in securing enough lobsters to supply demand there, so have had to import. By this you will appreciate with imports cut the price must soar, result public suffers. White-Nelson bill offered as conservation must be public suffers. White-Nelson bill offered as conservation must be cloaked, for we can not see how stopping imports will conserve local supply; it will act entirely opposite. If we could produce more lobsters in this country than demand, it would carry some good, but American supply is inadequate by millions of pounds. If a Federal 9-inch lobster law was passed in place of 10½, it would carry much sounder over the years to follow. We respectfully request your attention, Senator.

R. M. O'CONNELL, General Manager.

RENEWAL AND EXTENSION OF CERTAIN LETTERS PATENT

The bill (S. 1301) to renew and extend certain letters patent was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection in order that I may make a statement of the urgent necessity of action on this bill, if any is to be taken?

Mr. DILL. I withhold it.

Mr. HEBERT. This is a bill to extend letters patent for an instrument known as the telegraphone. It is a recording instrument which operates by means of a metallic tape. The term of the patent is about to expire. The officials who had way.

charge of the development of it did not proceed as expeditiously as the stockholders thought they should. In fact, nothing was done with it at the outset, and the stockholders were forced to institute proceedings in court to obtain control of the affairs of the corporation.

They seek no extension of the term of their patent for the time that elapsed up to the period when suit was brought; but, for some reason which was not made clear to the committee-and we held extensive hearings upon it-the court delayed rendering a final decision for a period of something over seven years. The suit was brought in the courts here in the city of Washington, the District of Columbia courts. Those who are interested in this bill, and who are the owners of the patented device, feel that that was a matter beyond their control; and now that the patent is about to expire they think they should have an extension of approximately the period of time which was lost because of delays over which they had no control-the delays that occurred in the proceedings in court.

The bill would provide for an extension of the letters patent for a period of eight years. I repeat that the patent is about to expire; and if any action is to be taken upon the matter, it should be taken at this time.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is something that Congress has never done. To pass a bill of this kind without any consideration to me is unthinkable. There is no bill of the kind in the House. It would be a futile thing to do, and would serve as a precedent. I must object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

ADDITION OF LANDS TO COLUMBIA NATIONAL FOREST, WASH.

The bill (S. 1492) to add certain lands to the Columbia National Forest in the State of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington whether the inhabitants of his State are desirous of having this done? There is an ambition upon the part of certain officials to get as much as possible of the public domain within forest reserves.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not remember having received any obection to the legislation. I have received several communications urging that something of the kind

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know who initiated the movement under which this large area is sought to be added to the Columbia National Forest? It embraces a great many sections of land.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that it was initiated in the first instance by some of our people down in Vancouver, in Clark County; and then I think the bill was amended because of some other legislation that had passed through the Senate, and this measure was made somewhat to correspond to that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Washington that this land would be withdrawn from State taxation, and thereby would indirectly impose additional burdens upon the people of Washington?

Mr. JONES. The land that is now in the ownership of the National Government is withdrawn from taxation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely; and this bill proposes to add to the acreage, does it not?

Mr. JONES. No; these lands are to be exchanged for a similar acreage, which would then become taxable.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I put the question for the reason that I understand there is a movement on foot to ask for the enlargement of a certain national-forest reservation in the State of California, to which I object, and for the moment I was under the impression that this bill involved the same proposition.

Mr. JONES. On the proposition that the Senator suggests, the land that is restored to the Government, of course, would not be taxable, but the land that would be received from the Government would be taxable.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. JONES. So I think it would be balanced in that

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see that there is no provision for any exchange. This is a complete cession. I have had a large number of complaints made by persons in the West who are interested in mining exploration, trying to discover some minerals, and they find a great deal of difficulty in prosecuting their explorations because many mineral sections really are not timberlands at all but are incorporated within these forest reserves; and I want to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that there has been no objection based on that ground from our State; and, furthermore, the mineral law would not be changed at all. The lands would still be subject to the mineral law.

Mr. KING. I want to offer a specific amendment, and I ask the Senator to let the bill go over.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF KIDNAPED PERSONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1525) forbidding the transportation of any person or persons in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That whoever shall knowingly transport or cause to be transported, or aid or abet in transporting, in interstate or foreign commerce, any person who shall have been unlawfully seized, confined, inveigled, decoyed, kidnaped, abducted, or carried away by any means whatsoever and held for ransom or reward shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for such term of years as the court, in its discretion, shall determine: Provided, That the term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country; or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That if two or more persons enter into an agreement, confederation, or conspiracy to violate the provisions of the foregoing act and do any overt act toward carrying out such unlawful agreement, confederation, or conspiracy, such person or persons shall be punished in like manner as hereinbefore provided by this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Missouri whether he thinks it would be an offense cognizable in the Federal courts for two or more persons residing within a State to confederate together to kidnap some person, but not to convey him beyond the State?

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I do not believe that that would be such an offense.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I infer from the Senator's question that he is disturbed as to whether Congress has power to pass a law punishing intrastate seizure and transportation of persons?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I am of opinion that under the rights, immunities, and privileges granted to persons by the four-teenth amendment Congress has the power to pass such a law.

Mr. KING. That it does?

Mr. ASHURST. I think so.

Mr. KING. That is to say, Congress would have the power to define and punish the conspiracy of two or more persons to commit a felony within a State, to commit an assault or to commit a robbery?

Mr. ASHURST. Has the power to punish the seizure, the abduction, the carrying away of a person wholly within a State. I admit that it is a close question. Under the privileges, rights, and immunities guaranteed to persons not only by the fourteenth amendment but by other parts of the Constitution, I believe that it is within the power of Congress to pass a law penalizing and punishing such acts. I am not going to be so offensively presumptuous as to put my opinion on a legal question against that of the able junior Senator from Utah, but I submit this for his consideration.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. The bill makes it an offense to enter into a conspiracy. It provides in very plain language that the conspiracy shall relate to the violation of "the provisions of the foregoing act." It does not purport to cover a conspiracy entered into by two or more persons to kidnap a person in a State, so the question suggested by the Senator from Utah is not involved in this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator thinks that the provision to which I am challenging attention relates to a conspiracy to kidnap a person and convey that person beyond the limits of a State?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is it exactly. I think the language of the bill is susceptible of no other construction.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped, or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony."

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE, DOVER, N. J.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby House bill 11337 was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The vote is reconsidered, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 10494) to provide a postage charge on notices to publishers regarding undeliverable second-class matter was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 278) to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which the orders are drawn was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4594) to fix the rate of postage on publications mailed at the post office of entry for delivery at another post office within the postal district in which the headquarters or general business offices of the publisher are located was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10244) fixing the fees and limits of indemnity for domestic registered mail based upon actual value and length of haul, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10247) prescribing fees and corresponding indemnities for domestic insured and collect-on-delivery mail of the third and fourth classes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ACQUISITION OF INDIAN LANDS

The bill (S. 4808) relating to the acquisition of restricted Indian lands by States, counties, or municipalities was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no printed report in the calendar on this bill, and I ask that it may go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to withhold his objection for a moment. I think when he hears the bill explained he will have no objection to it.

homa that lands can be condemned for water supply and other public purposes. It is the law in the Five Civilized Tribes that where land is sold the money derived from the sale can be used for buying other lands, and such other lands may be placed under restriction, and thereby exempt from taxes.

At Pawnee, Okla., outside of the Five Civilized Tribes. the Indian Department wants to secure some Indian lands for public purposes, and the bureau wants to take the money and buy other lands, so that such lands when purchased for Indians will be restricted and not be subject to taxation.

This measure extends the Five Civilized Tribes law relating to Indian lands to Indian tribes generally. It is a departmental bill and is an emergency matter.

Mr. SMOOT. With the explanation, I have no objection. There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to relieve re stricted Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes whose nontaxable lands are required for State, county, or municipal improvements or sold to other persons, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

"That whenever any nontaxable land of a restricted Indian of the Five Civilized Tribes or of any other Indian tribe is sold to any State, county, or municipality for public-improvement pur-poses, or is acquired, under existing law, by any State, county, or poses, or is acquired, under existing law, by any State, county, or municipality by condemnation or other proceedings for such public purposes, or is sold under existing law to any other person or corporation for other purposes, the money received for said land may, in the discretion and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be reinvested in other lands selected by said Indian, and such land so selected and purchased shall be restricted as to allenation, lease, or incumbrance, and nontaxable in the same quantity and upon the same terms and conditions as the nontaxable lands from which the reinvested funds were derived, and such restrictions shall appear in the conveyance."

SUITS IN ADMIRALTY

The bill (H. R. 7238) to amend section 5 of the suits in admiralty act, approved March 9, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I think the Senator had better let this bill go over. I have an amendment which may take some time to discuss, and I think the bill had better go over. It is the first time it has been reached on the calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator withhold the objection so that I may make a brief explanation?

Mr. DILL. I withhold my objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I would like to have the RECORD show that this is a remedial measure, designed to remove the bar of the statute of limitations, which has run on claims of approximately 187 claimants for personal injuries incurred in the service of the Shipping Board of the United States, and for cargo injuries and losses suffered by the owners thereof, through the negligence of the United States Shipping Board Fleet Corporation. It is a measure of the greatest equity. It is necessary, if we are going to do by private individuals what we ask as a Government that private individuals should do unto each other.

This Government, through its judicial department, placed an interpretation upon the admiralty act, which governed the Fleet Corporation, which fooled the customers of that corporation. In other words, the United States Government went into the business of transporting goods and passengers in competition with private corporations and individuals, and when it found itself embarrassed by the seizure of its vessels in ports here and there to answer to claims for damages, it went to Congress and said, "Now, we will put the Government upon the same plane with private enterprise, and we will allow suits in personam to be brought against the United States Government in these cases, in the same manner in which they can be brought against private corporations and individuals." Thereupon, business went

It is now the law in the Five Civilized Tribes in Okla- | ahead and employed these Fleet Corporation vessels in competition with private corporations, and there arose these

> Many years, more than 10 years, after that admiralty act was passed, the Supreme Court of the United States made an interpretation of the law which defeated the entire purpose of the act. In the meantime, it can be readily seen, time had passed upon these claims, and upon 187 of the claims time had so far run that they became outlawed under the terms of the admiralty act.

> The simple proposition of this bill is to do justice, and nothing but justice, to those claimants who have proceeded under the theory of the law as held by the courts for years, and who suddenly were discovered without remedy because of that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That is all there is to this measure.

> I should say something which is not in the report, and which was not overlooked intentionally; that is, that the Attorney General's Department objected to the passage of this legislation on the ground which is commonly urged and always recognized by lawyers, that the evidence, in case of the long passage of years, is likely to be obscured and difficult to obtain, and therefore, as a matter of policy, it was contended that it was not good legislation. But the Attorney General's Department said also, "If you pass this measure, you ought to limit it to those cases where the action was brought within two years after the discovery of the disability." However, the committee, on a thorough examination of the evidence, were convinced that the regular common-law limitation of six years should be regarded in these cases instead of two years.

> I realize that in making this statement I ought to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Washingon [Mr. DILLI believed, as the Attorney General believes, that it should be limited to two years, whereas the other members of the subcommittee believed it ought to be six years, and there the controversy lies, if there is any, over this measure.

> Taking it as a whole, I ask whether the Senator who has objected to this measure will not withdraw his objection to it, so that this action may be taken in the interest of equity and honesty by the United States Government.

> Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not want unduly to delay the bill, but the bill has just been reported, and I am not prepared to discuss it without taking a great deal more time than if I were prepared. For that reason I think it had better go over for to-day, and by the next time it is reached on the calendar I will have my amendment ready.

> Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, before the bill goes over, I want to state that it had been my hope that the measure might be disposed of to-day. The Senator from Washington states that he desires to offer an amendment, and to submit some remarks touching the bill, and that he will not interpose an objection to taking it up later. I am not in sympathy with the amendment which I understand the Senator from Washington intends to propose, but favor the attitude taken by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary. With the understanding that the bill will come up shortly, I shall refrain from further remarks at this time.

> Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that the matter has been pending for a considerable time, and I do not think delay will make any very great difference. But I have some material which I should want to gather before I attempt to offer my amendment.

> Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My understanding is that the bill may be disposed of during the present session.

> Mr. DILL. I have no objection to that. I only want to say that practically all, indeed, I think all, of the personalinjury cases are covered by the admiralty provision. There is one big case which would not be covered by the admiralty provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is a very meritorious bill, but I shall have to ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COMPENSATION TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 3531) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] reported the bill.

Mr. McNARY. That Senator is not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NIAGARA RIVER BRIDGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4778) granting the consent of Congress to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "consent of Congress is hereby granted to the" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved June 17, 1930, to be built by the."

Page 3, line 12, to strike out the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved June 17, 1930, to be built by the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, a State commission, created by act of the Legislature of the State of New York, chapter 594 of the laws of 1929, across the east branch of the Niagara River, from the town of Tonawanda, about midway between the southerly city limits of the city of Tonawanda and the northerly city limits of the city of Buffalo, to Grand Island, in the county of Erie and State of New York, are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from June 17, 1932.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y."

TRANSPORTATION OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10598) to provide for the transportation of certain juvenile offenders to States under the law of which they have committed offenses or are delinquent, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of cooperating with rates (and for the purposes of this act the words "State" and Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of cooperating with States (and for the purposes of this act the words "State" and "States" shall include the District of Columbia) in the care and treatment of juvenile offenders, whenever any person under 21 years of age shall have been arrested, charged with the commission of any crime punishable in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia, and, after investigation by the Department of Justice, it shall appear that such person has committed a criminal offense or is a delinquent under the laws of any State that can and will assume jurisdiction over such juvenile and will take him into custody and deal with him according to the laws of such State, and that it will be to the best interest of the United States and of the juvenile offender to surrender the offender to the authorities of such State, the United States attorney of the district in which such person has been arrested is authorized to forego the prosecution of such person and surrender him as herein provided.

It shall be the duty of the United States marshal of such district upon written order of the United States attorney to convey such person to such State or, if already therein, to any other part thereof and deliver him into the custody of the proper authority or authorities thereof: Provided, That before any person is conveyed from one State to another under the authority herein given, such person shall signify his willingness to be so returned, or there shall be presented to the United States attorney a demand from the executive authority of the State to which the prisoner is to be returned, supported by indictment or affidavit as prescribed by section 5278. Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 662), in cases of demand on State authorities. The expense incident to the transportation, as herein authorized, of any such person shall be paid from the appropriation "Salaries, Fees, and Expenses, United States Marshals."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 3938, a similar bill, will be indefinitely postponed.

That completes the calendar.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before departing from the calendar, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Order of Business 640, Senate Resolution 174, for an investigation of campaign expenditures of presidential and senatorial candidates in 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in November, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 3. line 21, to strike out "$100,000" and to insert in lieu thereof $25,000," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various presidential candidates, vice presidential candidates, and candidates for the United States Senate, in both parties, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations subscribing, the amount contributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in tributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to the subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influence, including the promise or use of patronage, and all other facts in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the United States Senate.

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in November, 1932.

The investigation hereby provided for, in all the respects above enumerated, shall apply to candidates and contests before primaries, conventions, and the contests and campaign terminating in the general election in November, 1932.

Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee or any member of any subcommittee may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as Dale Davis

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

All hearings before said committee shall be public and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate on the first day of the next session of the Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I fear that $25,000 will scarcely afford an opportunity to the committee to do anything. I think it ought to be $50,000. May I inquire what calendar number it is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Calendar No. 640, Senate Resolution 174.

Mr. BLAINE. The original resolution provided for $100,-000. It was my understanding that the committee cut that to $50,000. I did not know the $25,000 provision had been recommended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I assume from the form in which the resolution appears in our calendar docket that the $25,000 is an amendment by the committee.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it is my recollection the Committee on Privileges and Elections substituted $50,000 for $100,000, and I think the Committee to Audit and Control made the further reduction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the action which was

Mr. BLAINE. I ask that the action recommended by the Committee to Audit and Control, reducing the amount to $25,000, be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment to strike out "$50,000" and insert " $25,000."

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment in order that Senators may know what is the pending question.

The Chief Clerk again reported the pending amendment, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before we determine how much we shall vote as a fund to make the investigation I think we ought to determine whether we are going to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. It would make a very great difference in the expenses, in my judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment can be taken up first by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that we complete the measure with reference to its terms before determining upon the amount.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair is advised that the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] was proposed but has never been formally offered. The Senator from Oklahoma is not present.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment had never been offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been printed, but not formally offered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then how does it get before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then no one is offering it. Mr. BORAH. If it has not been offered, I do not offer it. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. The Chair will state that unanimous consent was given to perfect the resolution before the committee amendment with regard to the amount is considered. The Senator from Oklahoma has an amendment which has been printed and is lying on the table.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, when in order. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order now.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

Provided, That upon application in writing made by any candidate requesting the appointment of a special agent or agents to observe the progress of any campaign with special reference to expenditures and practices, the said special committee is authorized to appoint a special agent or agents to represent such committee is authorized to appoint a special agent or agents to represent such committee in any such State: Provided further, That no expense, directly or indirectly, shall be incurred by such appointed agent or agents without specific instructions in the form of a special order of said committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as I view the matter, there should be no objection to the amendment. It does not limit the power of the committee. It only extends the power of the committee. It simply provides that in any State if any candidate for the Senate thinks he is being dealt with unfairly by the press or by any power, he has a right to appeal to the committee to appoint some one in the State to observe the practices in the State so that in the event something should be disclosed there will be some one there as the appointee of the committee checking up on appearances, if not upon facts, so that at a later date there will be something authentic that could be referred back to the committee-in other words, checking up on campaign expenditures, checking up on representations, checking up on activities of committees either in the open or in secret.

It provides that the committee shall be at no expense unless they specifically authorize expenditures. It is an unofficial matter. At the same time it gives the committee power to appoint some one within the State to represent them, without expense unless they authorize it, during the progress of the campaign. Personally I can see a vast benefit that might come to the committee and to the State by having this procedure permitting a method whereby this information could be secured.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I regret to find myself in a position of being unable to support the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. It has aspects which are not closely related to the provisions and purposes of the resolution under consideration. To make it incumbent upon the committee or to authorize the committee to appoint a special agent or agents on the application of any candidate to observe proceedings in districts and States would be going far beyond the purview of the resolution and would be imposing a supervisory function on the committee. The committee is authorized to ascertain all the facts about contributions and expenditures, but it is not authorized at the mere instance of a candidate to send out an indefinite number of agents to represent it in watching the election. It is a proposal to extend the Federal function a very great distance. I am unable to give the amendment my support.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the intent of the amendment no doubt is ideal; but I doubt very much whether the plan proposed therein is practical. I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] has stated one fundamental objection which I believe has a great deal of force. The amendment would empower the committee really to supervise elections. As there would be no obligation on the part of the committee to pay the expenses, it may readily be seen, it seems to me, that organizations, political or otherwise, or individuals interested in a campaign would be willing to pay the expenses of men who are selected by the committee for the purpose of supervising an election.

In addition to that, Mr. President, I want to state an objection that suggests itself to me. In the first place, a special agent or agents, if appointed, ought to be paid for out of the funds in the hands of the committee. Otherwise there would be grave danger, and I think in actual practice it would be the result, that persons interested in a campaign of some candidate or some party or a set of candidates would try to obtain from the committee the appointment of a number of agents who would in reality represent their candidates for office or parties or factions of parties or organizations or who would be interested in the election or defeat of some specific candidate or candidates. So, as a matter of fact, it seems to me, any agent ought to be selected exclusively by the committee, and he ought to be paid by the committee, which would mean a vast expenditure of money, much more, I think, than the Senate would be willing should

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

'The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are only two theories under which such a committee can operate: One is that the committee, appointed as this resolution proposes, after an election has been held and complaints have been made, shall go into the State and proceed to ferret out what has happened. That is one theory. The theory proposed by my amendment is that if trouble arises in a State or in a district prior to the election, the committee shall have some means of getting into that district or into that State and gathering information while the situation is being developed.

If the Senate does not desire to investigate until after the election is over and after to a great extent the irregularities are covered up, that is perfectly all right; but it occurs to me that this amendment, if adopted, would prevent much trouble. If trouble did develop, the committee would have the power and the means of going there when the development wast taking place and of getting on the inside. That is the theory I had.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I think if the committee shall be granted the authority to make investigation, every candidate will have the right to ask that that investigation shall be conducted before the election as well as after it.

I understand that the resolution, with the exception of applying to presidential electors, as now amended by the committee amendment, is in identical terms with the resolution that was submitted by myself and adopted by the Senate prior to the last election. The committee appointed under that resolution did a great deal of its work—indeed, most of its work—before the election. They investigated before the primaries were held. I think I am safe in saying that nine-tenths of the committee's work was done before the election, and I believe, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma, that all that authority is already delegated to the committee by the resolution as it now stands.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If this amendment should be incorporated; if I, being a candidate, knew that there might be agents in my State watching my expenditures and watching the people who are in the State working for me, and presumably being paid by myself or by my committee, inserting advertisements in the press, and so on; if I knew that some one was there checking up on those advertisements, ascertaining the cost of the different advertisements, getting information as to how much I was paying my different workers, I would be deterred, in all probability, from incurring an expense beyond that allowed by the statutes of my State. On the other hand, if this amendment should not be adopted, and the resolution were largely a blank, I might be influenced to expend more money than the law would allow, if I had the money and had the inclination to do so.

So, it occurs to me that the adoption of this amendment would have a good effect upon those running for various offices.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Oklahoma, I wish to say that, as I understand, this resolution as now framed authorizes the Senator in the case of which he speaks to go before the committee and make any charge that he may see fit in regard to the conduct of the campaign by anybody in his State, and the committee would give him a hearing. The resolution defines the duties of the committee. It provides:

Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

So it seems in the case the Senator puts, his rights would be fully protected.

I want to say to the Senate that, while it might not necessarily happen, the door would be open, if the Senator's amendment were agreed to, for the employment of an unlimited number of agents, paid for by private parties, snooping around, watching elections, trying to supervise and look after elections in every State where an election takes place.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That could only be done in the event the committee should appoint such agents and commission them to represent them especially, and I do not have that in mind, I want to assure the Senator from Nebraska. But I did have in mind that, in the event the committee should be convinced the public could be served by having an agent or two in a State to represent them, sub rosa it might be, to gather information which might not appear on the surface, that later they would have the data upon which to predicate action, perhaps in the Senate, as to whether or not a candidate elected was entitled to his seat.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that is all provided for. The Senator may complain in the case he speaks of, and at a hearing before the committee, if the committee believes that the complaint is well founded and material, it could send a subcommittee the next day or could send one of its agents—and it will have to have quite a number of investigators—to go out and look up the evidence so as to save the time of the committee when it comes to consider the case. It could do all that, but the agent would not be a supervisor of the committee. There would be a great deal of feeling, I think, over the country if we undertook in any way to infringe upon the rights of the States by trying to supervise their elections.

I would not want such a condition to prevail under the Senator's amendment, and, unless the committee paid the agents, I would not like to have the committee put in the predicament of employing agents who are going to be paid for by interested parties. They might do the very best they could, giving them credit for being perfectly honest and conscientious, but they would probably be deceived and get men as agents who really had a selfish interest in behalf of some candidate who was running for office.

I want to say to the Senate that if this resolution shall be adopted the very fact of its adoption, the very fact that the the expenditure of money in every State in the Union. I think that was true in the case of the Nye committee. There were many places where nothing wrong took place simply because it was known that the committee was diligent and that it would expose any wrongful act and would put on the witness stand persons who would have to testify under oath, with all the penalties that would come in the case of perjury or otherwise.

In my State two men were indicted for perjury after the Nye committee was there. One of them was tried last week, and, though the jury disagreed, it was as clear a case of perjury as I ever knew of, or read of, or heard of, in my life. It seemed that there could be no two views, but the jury, after being kept out for 27 hours, were discharged on failure to agree, although upon the principal and main count in the indictment they stood 11 to 1 in favor of conviction. As the Senator knows and as all others know who have had any experience in trying criminal cases, one of the most difficult cases in the world to try is a perjury case,

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in a moment. If the evidence is gathered even in that kind of a case by the agents appointed by the committee, but not paid for by the committee, the Senator can easily see how a shrewd attorney in the case of a trial of some one for perjury might prejudice the jury against evidence gathered by some one who probably at heart was really the agent of one of the parties to the controversy. I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it occurred to me that if this amendment could be adopted, its very language would have a deterring influence against the unwarranted and probably unlawful expenditure of very large amounts of money.

I want to say to the Senate that I strongly favor the adoption of the resolution, and whether my amendment shall be adopted or not will have nothing to do with my favoring the resolution. I know personally that in some States a vast amount of political advertising is carried with this sort of a notation underneath the advertisement, "Paid for by friends of the candidate."

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. While I do not know whether that notation is true or is not true, I do know in my own mind that practically all that kind of political advertisements are paid for by the candidate and that the line is put under the advertisement simply as a camouflage to try to mislead some one into believing that some organization or some real friends of the candidate are putting up the money, when I know that it is not true.

If there were some secret agent in the State representing the committee, an investigation oftentimes could disclose whether that practice was a genuine practice or a camouflage practice; but unless the amendment suggested has merit, I do not care to press it.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I think the point he makes is an excellent one. I realize that those things happen. In my opinion, however, that is fully provided for. The committee can investigate, either before or after the election, all such things as that.

In the case of the Nye committee—I happen to know about it, because it took place in my State—a thing similar to that happened. An organization, styling itself "the Loyal Republican League"-a beautiful name-sent literature all over that State. I think the evidence disclosed that they sent out three-quarters of a million copies of literature, and the only signature to it was the Loyal Republican League. The committee investigated that, and they discovered upon their investigation that that beautiful title applied to an organization that had just two men in it-just two. One drove a laundry wagon, and the other did some similar work. They were the only two members of the organization.

The Nye committee had no such amendment as the Sen-committee is appointed, will have a wholesome effect upon | ator proposes. They had no difficulty in developing the facts, however, and bringing them out. I think it is important that they should be brought out. I would not for a moment think of opposing the Senator's amendment if I thought it was necessary in order to achieve the desired result. But does not the Senator think that his amendment would put the committee at a disadvantage? I think it would, because the impression would go out that here are a lot of snoopers; here are a lot of fellows from the Federal Government looking after and supervising the elections in the States. I am afraid it would hurt the standing of the committee.

> Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am free to say that it was my idea that this proceeding would not be made public. I think perhaps what the Senator says would be true if minutes were made of the meetings of the committee, and if it were stated that John Doe had made application for the appointment of half a dozen agents in his State, and the committee had acted favorably on the application, and had appointed certain persons, and the names of these parties were given. I think that would be objectionable; but it is my idea that that would not be made

> Mr. NORRIS. Suppose they do the other way and do it secretly, and it is known over the country that a lot of secret agents are out. Would not that hurt more than the

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right. I realize, of course, the utmost good faith of the Senator in offering this amendment. He may be entirely right and I may be entirely wrong. I simply want to give the Senate the impression that strikes me.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Nebraska has been through all of these controversies and I regard him as an expert on this matter. I shall be very glad to defer to his judgment; and if he thinks this amendment does not in any way strengthen the resolution, I shall be very glad to withdraw it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will ask the Senator this question, Does the Senator think that this amendment does not add any force or good purpose to the resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I am rather of the opinion that it injures the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws the amendment. The question now is on the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on that I desire to be heard for a few moments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 21, the committee proposes to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered; and I think the proposition is a very important one.

As I understand, the resolution, when it was introduced, provided for the payment of $100,000 from the contingent fund to defray the expense of the investigation. The first committee that had the resolution was the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They reported the resolution back striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000"; and then the resolution went to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. They struck out $50,000 " and inserted "$25,000."

My own opinion is that it would be of little use to pass this resolution if we did not provide more than $25,000 for the investigation. If the Senate were to be in session during the campaign, this would not make any difference, because then the committee could come back and, on the proper showing, could get additional money. That will not be true, however. We shall probably adjourn now in a week or 10 days, and we shall not be in session again until after the | election is over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska what the expense of the Nye committee was in the last campaign?

Mr. NORRIS. I am informed by the chairman of the committee that it was $150,000. Some little of that was spent after election. Most of it was spent before election.

I believe myself that both amendments ought to be rejected and that the resolution, so far as this amount is concerned, ought to be passed just as the Senator from Iowa introduced it. But at least we ought not to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000." The moment it becomes known that this committee has no money and can not make any investigation, just that soon the moral effect, at least, if no other, of this committee for good and honest elections will disappear.

So it seems to me that we ought not to leave this committee in such condition that right during the campaign. perhaps, they will be shut off from making any further investigation. That is what I think this amendment will mean. We must understand that the committee's work will take it from Maine to California, and from Michigan to Florida. It will cover the entire country, and necessarily its investigation will cost a good deal of money. The committee will have to hire quite a number of investigators, and to get a competent man it will have to pay a pretty good sum, especially for work that will last only a short time. Necessarily the expense in such a case is much more than it would be if the committee were hiring a permanent employee.

The ordinary person, however, is not of much consequence as an investigator. The men selected will have to be of the very highest type, because they will be subjected to all sorts of temptations. They will be subjected to all kinds of offers of money and other things if there is any idea that by these offers they can be led astray. It will be necessary to have men who are absolutely unimpeachable and who can not be impeached, regardless of the prize that may be set before them. Then they must be men of ability. They must be men of good character, who will not deceive the committee, who will make honest and fair investigations. Again, the investigation will last but a few months. We can not expect to hire an ordinary person to go out and make the investigations that this committee will be called upon to make.

I believe that we ought to defeat both amendments, and let the committee be backed by $100,000-something that will last during the campaign, that will be known to all people who otherwise might try illegally to influence elections by the wrongful use of money or other methods. If what I suggest is done, they will know that this committee is equipped to investigate their acts, and that it has the money to pay for the investigation which it is necessary to make.

I hope, therefore, that both of these amendments will be defeated.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, do I understand that this resolution is being considered by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to make a very frank statement about it.

The theory is that three Republicans and two Democrats should be selected to serve on this committee. I have not yet been able to find three Republicans who are willing to serve. I have investigated very carefully, and I can not yet find Senators who are willing to serve.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

the personnel of the committee had been agreed upon by the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. The personnel was partially agreed upon; but when I came to talk to the Senators about it, they declined to serve. Three members of the majority party had been selected, including the Senator's colleague [Mr. Howell], but the other Senators declined to serve. Therefore at this time I desire to object to the further consideration of the resolution until I have an opportunity to look over the ground.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me ask the Chair whether the resolution is before the Senate in such a parliamentary condition that an objection puts it over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was taken up by unanimous consent. The objection can be made at any time before final action is taken.

Mr. NORRIS. It comes up under the ordinary rule in

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That means, then, that it will have to go

Let me say that, of course, I have no interest in this resolution or its passage except to help to bring about, if I can, honest elections. This will not fully accomplish that. I realize that; but I do not intend, if I can prevent it, to permit the Senate to adjourn without acting one way or the other upon a resolution of this kind. If it is known that no committee of investigation is to be appointed, we will see a great deal of fraud and corruption by the illegal use of money that can be prevented by this method.

I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana, before he makes his objection, if he will not permit us to pass on these amendments. Would that suit the Senator?

Mr. WATSON. I am entirely willing to have that done. Mr. NORRIS. A roll call has been ordered on the first

Mr. WATSON. I want to say that I am not seeking to interpose an objection to the final passage of the resolution

Mr. NORRIS. No; I understand that. Mr. WATSON. Not at all; but I do not think, as a matter of fairness, that the committee should consist of five Demo-

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not either.

Mr. WATSON. Of course the Senator does not. I do not think it ought to consist of five of what we ordinarily call insurgents.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not either.

Mr. WATSON. No; the Senator does not. Therefore, I am trying to get two of what I call regular Republicans, if the Senator will permit the use of the expression-

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection whatever to it.

Mr. WATSON (continuing). To serve with Senator Howell, from the Senator's own State, and with two Democrats that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] is all ready to name; but I have not found two Republicans, and I will say to the Senator that I have been quite diligent in my search.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose, then, that we have this understanding: Let us vote on these amendments now.

Mr. WATSON. I have not the slightest objection in the world to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator will withdraw his objection temporarily?

Mr. WATSON. Temporarily; until the final vote comes. Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the first committee amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there seems to be some misunderstanding. As I understand, there are two amendments to be voted on. The first is the amendment striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. NORRIS. My understanding was that in order to re-tieve the Vice President of any embarrassment in the matter, striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$25,000."

on the question of substituting it for $100,000?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be the vote. The first vote is on the amendment striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$25,000." The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent. I therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hasrings], and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I do not know how he would vote if present. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], who is necessarily absent. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], who is absent. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. COPELAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 30, as follows:

So the amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to the amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands it, the resolution will go over.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I want that understood, for the present.

Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senate adopted an amendment in line 21 on page 3 of Senate Resolution 174, being Calendar No. 640, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], by virtue of which the authorized expenditure for investigations

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and then after that the vote will be | conducted under the resolution was reduced from $50,000 to $25,000. I did not vote on that question. I now desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from West Virginia will be entered.

QUOTA EXEMPTION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this morning when Order of Business 707, House bill 10600, was reached on the calendar, my attention was diverted and I was not able to examine the bill before it was passed. Now, on my own behalf, and also on behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the chairman of the Committee on Immigration. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed may be reconsidered and the bill go back to the calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. REED. It is a bill to allow the entry, apart from the quota, of foreigners who marry American women in the future or have married them in the past.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote whereby the bill was passed is reconsidered, and the bill will be restored to the calendar.

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., WATER SUPPLY

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I introduced a bill, Senate bill 4791, proposing in effect better to preserve the supply of water for domestic purposes for the city of Prescott, Ariz. The bill was reported upon favorably by the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, and has been unanimously favored by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the Senate. I was directed by the committee to report the bill with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 781). It is somewhat in the nature of an emergency bill, and I should not ask the Senate to bear. with me on it now except that it ought to go to the other branch of Congress at the earliest possible moment if it is to become a law at this session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the bill proposes to guarantee fresh drinking water in the town of Prescott, which is the Senator's home town?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. DILL. It might affect the Senator's health if there were no fresh drinking water there, so I favor the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the words "an area of." to strike out "two" and insert "three." so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter mining locations made under the United States mining laws upon lands within the municipal watershed of the city of Prescott, within the Prescott National Forest in the State of Arizona, specifically described as the west half southwest quarter section 13; south half section 14; southeast quarter and east half southwest quarter section 15; east half and south half southwest quarter section 22; all of section 23; west south half southwest quarter section 22; all of section 23; west half section 24; all of sections 26 and 27; north half north half section 34; and north half north half section 35, township 13 north, range 2 west, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, an area of 3,600 acres, more or less, shall confer on the locator the right to occupy and use so much of the surface of the land covered by the location as may be reasonably necessary to carry on prospecting and mining, including the taking of mineral deposits and timber required by or in the mining operations, and no permit shall be required or charge made for such use or occupancy: Provided, however, That the cutting and removal of timber, except where clearing is necessary in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations with the rules for timber cutting on adjoining national-forest land, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining and prospecting shall be allowed except under the national-forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or obstruct other occupany of the surface or use of surface resources under authority of national-forest regulations, or permits issued thereunder, if such occupancy or use is not in conflict with mineral development.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all patents issued under the United States mining laws affecting lands within the municipal watershed of the city of Prescott, within the Prescott National Forest, in the State of Arizona, shall convey title to the mineral deposits within the claim, together with the right to cut and remove so much of the mature timber therefrom as may be needed in extracting and removing the mineral deposits, if the timber is cut under sound principles of forest management as defined by the national-forest rules and regulations, but each patent shall reserve to the United States all title in or to the surface of the lands and products thereof, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture.

Sec. 3. That valid mining claims within the municipal watershed

SEC. 3. That valid mining claims within the municipal watershed of the city of Prescott, within the Prescott National Forest in the State of Arizona, existing on the date of the enactment of this act, and thereafter maintained in compliance with the law under which they were initiated and the laws of the State of Arizona, may be perfected under this act, or under the laws under which they were initiated, as the claimant may desire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION-LEGAL EXPENSES

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that had charge of the selection of an attorney or attorneys to represent the Senate in the matter involving the right of George Otis Smith to retain his position as a member of the Federal Power Commission, have allowed expenses and attorney's fees in that matter which exceed by $395.40 the amount which the Senate allowed to be expended for that purpose. I offer a resolution to increase the amount to be expended in that litigation by $395.40, which pays all the bills and all the attorney's fees in the case. I ask unanimous consent, first, that it be read and then for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 222) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, authorized by Senate Resolution No. 415, agreed to February 5, 1931, to engage counsel for the purpose of instituting proceedings to secure a determination of the right of George Otis Smith to the position of member of the Federal Power Commission, and to pay the counsel fees and other expenses necessarily incident to such proceedings, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $395.40 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for said nurpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution would have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. NORRIS. I had not thought of that, but I believe the Chair is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 91, under "Transfer of Personnel Classification Board to Civil Service Commission," we have provided for the abolishment of the board and the position of the director of classification. I think we ought not to abolish that position. It ought to be available to the Civil Service Commission, so that the work can promptly be done by one party instead of having to have the cooperation of all three. I desire therefore to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 91, line 13, strike out the words "and the position of director of classification are" and insert the word "is", so as to read:

(a) The Personnel Classification Board is hereby abolished.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, strike out lines 21 to 25, and lines 1 to 9, on page 57, and insert:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, in so far as practicable, all overtime work, both day and night, and all Sunday and holiday work, shall be performed by substitutes or unemployed regulars in lieu of persons who have performed a day's work during the day in which the overtime work or night work is performed; or in the case of Sundays and holidays by persons who have performed a week's work during the same week: Provided, That this section shall not apply to compensation for overtime services performed by Federal employees under existing laws at the expense of private interests.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge] was interested in the proposition involved in the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from California is in accord with the amendment which I have offered. The language which is stricken out is the language of the House text. It was not the intention of the committee that the compensation for overtime work, for night work, or on Sundays and holidays should be affected, but that a restriction should be placed upon the use for overtime work at night of employees who were working during the day. The object of the subcommittee was to give employment to substitutes and to regulars for night work and for Sunday work. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] and I so stated to the Senate on the day the amendment was first offered to the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I ask the Senator whether it is true that the amendment as he has offered it in section 210, on pages 56 and 57, if adopted, would permit the extra pay for night work and overtime work whenever that is required?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; it does. The language of the House text is stricken out, so that the law will remain as it now exists.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope it will be adopted. It was not the intention of the committee at all to reduce the amount that may be paid for night work to those regularly so employed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, on yesterday a committee amendment was considered on page 56, known as section 208, and reading as follows:

Hereafter no law or regulation authorizing or permitting transportation at Government expense of the effects of officers, employees, or other persons shall be construed or applied as including or authorizing the transportation of an automobile.

The amendment was rejected upon the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], who advised the Senate that according to the information received by him from the War Department the total saving effected by that section would not exceed $3,000. This morning in the Appropriations Committee officials of the Navy Department testified that as a result of the elimination of that section we would have to appropriate $307,000 in order to transport automobiles for naval officers from place to place. The Senator from Pennsylvania was unaware of the effect on the Navy and advises me that he is rather amazed at the information. I do not think he would have any objection to the motion I now make to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was rejected, in order that the section of the bill may be reconsidered.

I note that the Senator from Pennsylvania has just at this moment entered the Chamber, and for his benefit I wish to state that I have moved to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was rejected relating to the transportation of automobiles.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon a vote immediately. I have been trying to call the War Department to get some information about it. The showing in the hearings on the Army bill was that their total expenditures for that item are about $3,000. I am told a showing in the hearings on the Navy bill was that ! the Navy is spending over $300,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is correct. It is $307,000 that the Navy expends. Further, as a result of my inquiry, I learned that this expense is due to crating and transportation and involves in great measure the freight upon railroads. I ascertained that if an officer is sent from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast his automobile is shipped and that the average cost of crating and shipping a machine is a little over $200, and that the total cost to the Navy last year was $307,000.

My intention in asking for reconsideration, I may say, is to ask the adoption of the committee amendment. It will then go into conference, and certainly it would be my purpose to work out a plan which would not work a hardship upon anyone, and yet at the same time would put a stop to the expenditure by the Navy Department of $307,000 for the transportation of automobiles across the continent. An automobile which has been used may not be worth more than $600 or $800. When it is shipped across the continent at a cost of $200, that is, in my judgment, a practice that is indefensible. This is the only opportunity we will have to correct it. If not corrected, we will have to add $307,000 to the Navy appropriation bill for the transportation of automobiles.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator that that is shocking. I can not imagine how there could be such a difference in administration in the two departments that one of them, with more officers-because there are more Army officers than Navy officers-should hold this item down to $3,000 and the other one spend $307,000. I wonder if we could not fix it in this way as a premium on good administration? Let us restore section 208 with a proviso that the Army and Navy may each spend for this purpose not to exceed $5,000 a year. That will get economy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know whether the Senator would be willing to let the matter go over until a further study can be made, but it occurs to me that probably the difference is due in large part to this fact. When an Army officer is transferred from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast he quite likely goes in an Army transport with his family and the automobile, and there is no transportation expense. If he goes by land he drives his own car. If a Navy officer is transferred from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast he is probably on board a ship and travels on the ship to the Pacific coast, and his family must go by train. In view of the fact that probably his family would not care to drive the car, it is quite possible that that may be the reason why in the case of the Navy the car is crated and shipped by train, whereas in the Army the officer would be likely to drive his own car. I ask the Senator if he will not let it go over until we can get further information about it.

Mr. BYRNES. Admitting that the information furnished by the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct, it would not be a very material matter, but I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that if the Senator will permit us to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was rejected, I should be glad to confer with him and I know the Senator from Connecticut will, too, and we can then work out a plan whereby this saving can be effected in a way to do justice to all parties concerned.

Mr. REED. Will not the Senator withhold his motion for a few minutes so as to afford me an opportunity definitely to get the facts?

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, when this bill was before us a day or so ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote whereby section 515, on page 95, was agreed to. I should like to make that motion now and to have that section taken up and reconsidered. I was called off the floor at the time the section was adopted; and if there is no objection, I should like to have it now reconsidered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator's motion will undoubtedly lead to some discussion. Before the Senator makes his motion to reconsider, will he permit me to make a request for the correction of a committee amendment, which I think will not lead to any discussion? If it does, I will withdraw the

Mr. DILL. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 45, subsection (b), from lines 12 to 20, the committee struck out the language of the House bill because in the bill as reported by the committee there were no exemptions whatsoever in the reduction of pay. Since that time the committee has adopted an amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] making an exemption of all salaries under $1,000. Whatever the exemption may finally be, it is likely that there will be an exemption in the bill as passed. Because of the fact that there is now in the bill an exemption, I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby section (b) was stricken out may be reconsidered and that the committee amendment may be disagreed to.

Briefly, Mr. President, the reason for that request is this: There are quite a number of persons employed casually, for a few days at a time, some of them highly paid experts, who receive as much as $25 a day. There would be no sense whatever in their receiving no exemption from deduction. Section (b) was drafted to take care of any exemptions that might be made and to place them on a basis of annual pay, so as not to relieve from deduction persons, for instance, who are engaged in appraising real estate at $10 to-day and enable them, merely because they only get two or three hundred dollars a year, to have no reduction. I think there will be no objection to my proposal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to reconsider the vote whereby subsection (b) on page 45, from lines 12 to 20, was stricken out.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if there is any objection to reconsidering the vote by which section 515 was adopted in order that I may dis-

Mr. JONES. I shall not object to the Senator doing so. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the motion to reconsider the vote whereby section 515 was adopted? The Chair hears none, and without objection the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask for a reconsideration of the vote whereby section 515, page 95, was agreed to, because I think that the adoption of that section is likely to lead to confusion, to say the least. In the second place, it would be bad legislation. That section relates to section 511, which provides for the transfer of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce to the Radio Commission. On page 93, subsection (c) reads, as follows:

(c) such of the officers and employees of the division as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the Federal Radio Commission, shall be transferred to such commission, and all other officers and employees of such division shall be dismissed.

I think that is a very proper provision, but section 515. which the committee added, provides:

SEC. 515. Such of the officers and employees of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce and the Federal Radio Commission as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the consolidated bureau, shall be retained, preference being given to length of service and efficiency.

In the first place, when Radio Division shall have been consolidated with the Radio Commission by the President it will all be under the Radio Commission, and the President should no longer interfere and have the right to say who shall be retained and who shall be dropped from the service. In the second place, the last line provides-preference being given to length of service and efficiency.

The length of service of those employed in the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce is greater than that of anybody in the Radio Commission, including the commissioners themselves. So, it seems to me, in the first place, that it is a useless and needless provision; in the second place, that it is an improper provision; and, in the third place, that it might be construed to give those employees of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce an advantage in holding positions over the employees of the Radio Commission.

I think the whole matter can be safely left to the commission once the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce has been consolidated with the commission. So I hope the amendment of the Senate committee will be disagreed to:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator propose to strike out the language at the bottom of page 93?

Mr. DILL. No; I have proposed to strike out nothing on page 93. I am in entire accord with the provision on page 93. I referred only to that to show that the President has full power in transferring the division in the Department of Commerce to drop employees who are not needed. However, the section on page 95, lines 3 to 8, inclusive, proposes to give the President the power to go into the commission after the consolidation and determine who shall be retained. I think that is improper.

Mr. DAVIS. The Radio Division of the Department of Commerce is the oldest organization of the Government so far as radio is concerned.

Mr. DILL. It is.

Mr. DAVIS. And I should think it would be wise, after the word "commission" on page 93 in line 19, to strike out the semicolon and insert a period and also strike out the word "and" and all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24. In that event section 515 will give the right to preference on account of length of service and efficiency, and the President may exercise his discretion.

Mr. DILL. He has that right before the transfer takes place to drop anybody he pleases, but after the transfer it is a matter for the commission to pass upon and not for the President.

Mr. DAVIS. It says here-

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield and, if so, to whom?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Section 515 reads:

Such of the officers and employees of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce and the Federal Radio Commission as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the consolidated bureau, shall be retained, preference being given to length of service and efficiency.

What I am trying to do is to give preference to those who have been in the Radio Division of the Department of Com-

Mr. DILL. I think they will have preference so far as that particular work is concerned.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it would make it a little more clear and give them that much more right if we should strike out the language on page 93 to which I have referred.

Mr. DILL. The Senator can make that motion if he sees fit. I am not making such a motion. I am now only addressing myself to the proposal to strike out section 515, which I consider entirely unnecessary and which I think will lead to confusion.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Let me suggest to the Senator that section 515 be amended by striking out the word "President" in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "commission," and in line 7, striking out the words "preference being given to length of service and efficiency," so that the section would then read:

Such of the officers and employees of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce and the Federal Radio Commission as, in the judgment of the commission, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the consolidated bureau, shall be retained.

Mr. DILL. I shall be entirely satisfied with that amendment, and I think in some ways it would be preferable to striking out the section; but as it stands now I think it is objectionable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico propose an amendment?

Mr. BRATTON. I propose what I have suggested as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am sorry to differ with my colleague on the committee, with whom I have worked in agreement as to most of the items in the bill; but if what is suggested shall be done, what will happen will be this: The Federal Radio Commission will decide, naturally, that its employees shall be retained, and those now in the Department of Commerce whom it does not like it will not have to retain. The commission will make the decision, of course, and if that is done we might as well strike it all out.

The reason the committee put this paragraph in was to try to protect the employees of the Department of Commerce who have been in the field trying to carry out the orders of the Government with regard to radio activities. The Radio Commission, as I understand, has had very few employees in the field. The Senator from Washington, however, knows much more about this thing than I do.

Mr. DILL. The fact of the matter is that the Federal Radio Commission has no inspection force as such, and it would have no employees in competition with the employees of the division in the Department of Commerce. So that, so far as that character of employment is concerned, there is nobody in the commission who has been doing such work. There will be some overlapping, no doubt, in the case of clerks who will handle the work; but, so far as the inspection service itself is concerned, undoubtedly the commission will keep the men who have been doing that work, because they have nobody to do it. It seems to me to be a mistake to have the President step in and interfere and decide who shall be retained and who shall be dropped by the Radio Commission after the radio division of the Department of Commerce has been consolidated with it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield. Mr. BRATTON. The thought I had in mind in offering the amendment was that there were not two inspection services; that, therefore, there would be no overlapping there, and there would be no dismissal of those in one group in preference to those in the other group. As I understand, the actual operation under the amendment will be for the Federal Radio Commission to take over bodily the inspection service, including the personnel, from the Department of Commerce; and, as the Senator from Washington has said, I think there will be an overlapping only in the matter of clerks and the indoor staffs.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I ask the chairman of the committee who it was that suggested this amendment to the com-

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the amendment was suggested to the full Appropriations Committee by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis]. I should like to suggest that I think the language of page 93 is really sufficient, where the President is authorized to make the transfer of those whose services are deemed indispensable, and so I think we could very well strike out the language on page 95.

There is one thing about which the Senator from Pennsylvania, I think, is very anxious, and that is to have stricken out, on page 93, the words "and all other officers and employees of such division shall be dismissed." Personally I | rules the provision for having matters decided in the Comsee no objection to striking that language out. I think if we would incorporate in the bill the words, on page 93, "such of the officers and employees of the division as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the Federal Radio Commission shall be transferred to such commission," that would cover both propositions. That would cover the proposition on page 95 and allow that section to go out, and also cover the point the Senator from Pennsylvania desires covered.

So I suggest that that section 515 be stricken out, and then on page 93, after the word "commission," in line 23, that there be stricken out the words "and all other officers and employees of such division shall be dismissed." Of course the President will keep all that he deems indispensable; and we need not say that he shall dismiss the balance, but their services will be dispensed with.

I think the motion of the junior Senator from Washington can very well be adopted.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment which I proposed relative to section 515.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. President, on page 93 I move to strike out, in line 23, after the word "commission," the words "and all other officers and employees of such division shall be dismissed."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] was rejected; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Reed Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Schall Hull Austin Bailey Bankhead Couzens Johnson Jones Kean Cutting Davis Sheppard Shipstead Shortridge Barbour Barkley Kendrick Kendrick Keyes King La Follette Lewis Dickinson Bingham Dill Fletcher Smith Frazier Smoot Borah Logan McGill McKellar Steiwer Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Bratton George Glass Glenn Broussard Bulkley McNary Bulow Goldsborough Townsend Trammell Gore Byrnes Capper Caraway Neely Hale Vandenberg Wagner Walsh, Mass. Walsh, Mont. Watson Harrison Hatfield Carey Cohen Connally Norris Hawes Hayden Nye Oddie Coolidge Hebert Patterson Wheeler Howell Pittman White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I dislike to take up the time of the Senate on what appears to be a technicality. I desire to have the motion which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] is making voted upon—at least, I have no objection to its being voted upon, although I shall vote against it—but I think it is establishing a very bad precedent to permit a Senator who was present when a vote was cast. and was paired on the nonprevailing side, to move to reconsider.

I admit that Rule XIII explicitly says now, as it was amended May 16, 1930, that a Senator who voted with the prevailing side, or who has not voted, may on the same day, and so forth, move a reconsideration. I remember very distinctly when the Committee on Rules was considering this whole matter. I think Senators will remember that it came up in connection with the fact that on the tariff bill there were so many motions to reconsider that we had three or four motions on one subject, and an effort was made to cut down the number of times we would have to vote on reconsideration. At that time we took out of the mittee of the Whole, and then later in the Senate, in order to prevent a duplication of reconsideration.

At that time the matter was raised in the Committee on Rules. I am not sure whether it was discussed on the floor of the Senate; but I remember that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] raised the question as to whether we should not permit any Senator to move to reconsider. It was my feeling at that time that perhaps that was a good rule; that there was no reason why any Senator could not move to reconsider. The committee, however, thought otherwise, and it was limited to Senators who voted with the prevailing side. An exception, however, was made for Senators who did not vote. The presumption is that they were not present. It is true that nothing was said about Senators who were paired; but it seems to me that it is not in accordance with the spirit of the rule that a Senator who was paired on the side which did not prevail should move to reconsider.

I wish very much, for the sake of the Senate precedents. that the Senator from Wisconsin would secure some one to make the motion who did vote with the prevailing side, or who was not present and did not vote. I dislike to make the point of order against it because I do not want to appear to be obstructing a vote on this question, which I am perfectly willing to have take place.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I flatter myself that I know just as much about the rules and the spirit in which they were written as the Senator from Connecticut.

When the procedure in the Committee of the Whole was done away with this change in the rule was made so that a Senator who desires to move a reconsideration, there not being a second consideration of the bill in the Senate after it passed from the Committee of the Whole, should be protected either if he were absent or if he did not vote.

The question came up in the consideration of the tax bill concerning the reconsideration of votes on the tariff items; and it was my contention, and I so advised in consulting with a number of Senators, that if they voted with the minority side, and desired to move a reconsideration, it was not necessary for them to register themselves permanently in the records of the Senate in a position contrary to the one which they wished to take, but they could accomplish the purpose of putting themselves in a position to move a reconsideration by simply withdrawing their vote.

I do not want the Senator from Connecticut or anyone else to put me in the position of having technically taken advantage of a rule. I have simply exercised the right which I have under this rule, under its spirit as well as its letter, in view of the fact that I did not vote, to enter this motion to reconsider.

The logic of the position of the Senator from Connecticut is that if a Senator had been quoted in the newspapers as having been opposed to a piece of legislation, and was not even in the Chamber, he ought to be foreclosed from moving a reconsideration if the position which he had publicly taken was one which happened to be with a minority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, the rule is very plain. It says that if a Senator did not vote he has a right to move a reconsideration. The RECORD shows that the Senator from Wisconsin did not vote, and therefore he is entitled to enter the motion. The point of order raised by the Senator from Connecticut is overruled.

Mr. JONES. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, just one moment.

I do not wish to detain the Senate long to discuss this matter, because it has been thoroughly argued, and I am sure every Senator is familiar with the proposition involved.

I merely wish to say that some question was raised, in considering the furlough amendment on a previous day, as to what was the attitude of the employees affected by these various amendments.

Under date of June 7 I received a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor which I beg the indulgence of the Senate to read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1932.

Washington, D. C., June 7, 1932.

Hon. Robert M. La Follette,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Notwithstanding the appeals which labor has made to preserve wage and living standards established through years of effort for Government employees, Congress now seems determined to reduce the income of Federal employees either through a horizontal reduction in wages or through the substitution of a furlough plan, which includes a provision for the 5-day work week

Labor firmly believes that the policy being pursued by Congress is economically unsound, because through a reduction in the earning power of thousands of Government employees the market for manufactured goods will be further reduced and most seriously curtailed. All of this, in my judgment, will tend to delay a return of normal conditions. I know there are millions of people who of normal conditions. I know there are millions of people who share this opinion with the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor.

Notwithstanding this fact, labor realizes that Congress is determined to pass an economy measure. Perhaps even at this late hour it would not be amiss if I would venture an opinion as to what in my judgment would be the lesser of the two evils. For this reason I am taking the liberty of sending you this communication.

It is my opinion that the 5-day work week furlough plan for Government employees, surrounded with such safeguards as labor's friends in Congress might be able to impose, would be more preferable and advantageous to Federal employees and to labor generally than a horizontal reduction in salaries and wages.

I therefore suggest that Congress adopt the 5-day week furlough plan for Government employees as herein referred to as a substi-tute for the proposal that the wages and salaries of Government employees be reduced 10 per cent as provided for by the pending economy bill.

I sincerely hope the friends of labor in the Congress of the United States will share with me this expressed opinion and will find it possible to follow the suggestions which I have herein made.

With my highest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

President American Federation of Labor.

I also received a letter to-day, under date of June 8, from Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, in which he said:

Please be advised that the National Federation of Post Office Clerks prefers the furlough plan in lieu of the Senate Economy Committee's bill for a 10 per cent reduction in wages. We opposed both pay cuts and the furlough plan until it became manifest that one or the other must be accepted. Of the two, the fur-fest that one or the other must be accepted. Of the two, the furlough is more acceptable, as it means a wider diffusion of available work, pointing the way toward a postal 5-day week; and also the maintenance of existing wage standards.

There is a serious unemployment situation in the postal service of which the public knows little. Twenty thousand substitute clerks and carriers are virtually without any work, due to a falling off in mailings. The furlough plan, provided service is given to the public at present standards, should provide work opportunities for these substitutes, many of whom are in actual distress and are being supported and aided by regular employees.

For these reasons we hope the Senate will adopt the furlough plan.

So much for the attitude of those most vitally concerned in this question which the Senate is about to determine.

Briefly, Mr. President, let me recapitulate the situation as I see it. The committee's plan is a plan for reduction of wages which will be taken as a precedent by industrial organizations all over the country, despite the fact that they have already reduced wages. Once the Federal Government acts, they will take its action as a justification for further reduction in the wage standards already so materially lowered in this country.

The committee's plan also embodies the furlough plan, as I pointed out on yesterday. If the Congress fails to provide sufficient appropriations, then it is, under the committee's plan, possible for any officer of the Government at the head of a bureau to require the employees in that bureau not only to take a 10 per cent cut in wages, which will be automatic, but to furlough them for an indefinite period of time.

A man may have his wages reduced 10 per cent for six months while employed, and then be asked on top of that to take a 6-month furlough in order to make up any deficit which may accrue due to the failure of Congress to provide sufficient funds for salaries.

This is an indefensible proposition. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] have tried to justify it on the ground that it was merely an admonition to the executive officers of the Government not to exceed their appropriations, and not to send up any deficiency estimates. That, in my judgment, is no answer at all. The question remains as to what Congress will do with the six appropriation bills which are yet to be passed by this body. We may err in the estimates, and, if so, there will not only be taken a 10 per cent flat reduction in salary from the employees, many of them in the very low income groups, but it is also proposed to give administrative authority to heads of bureaus and divisions in the Government service to put employees on furlough for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. President, the furlough plan has the further advantage that it commits the Government to a step in the direction of the 5-day week. I believe the 5-day week is an adjustment which must come in the employing practices of both public and private organizations in this country before we may remedy the discrepancy between our capacity to produce and the capacity of the masses of the people to Much is made of the fact that, according to the estimates of the enemies of the furlough plan, its adoption means a difference of $33,000,000 in economies. Granting, for the sake of the argument, such is the case, does any Senator maintain on the floor of the Senate that we are justified, in order to obtain that $33,000,000, in taking it out of the Government employees rather than making an honest effort to reduce some of the six appropriation bills which are yet to come before the Senate?

The Senate Committee on Appropriations, which recommends this bill and which up until yesterday was beseeching the Members of the Senate to follow it in its wisdom on this measure, has already restored, in the Army appropriation bill, 2,200 officers who were cut out by the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that I have learned that the deductions in the Army bill fall very much lower than those in other bills which have been agreed to both by the committee and the Senate, and I intend to make a motion to return that bill to the committee, with instructions to reduce it 10 per cent, as in the case of all other bills.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand; but the Senator will find, when he comes to make that motion, that he will not have the support which he had to take savings out of the salaries of the low-income groups in the Government employment, many of whom have no opportunity to vote or to register their will in this body. He will find it more difficult when he comes to move to reduce the Army or Navy appropriation bills by 10 per cent.

So it will be, Mr. President, with the other bills which will come along. There will be greater resistance to the economies in those bills, and that is the reason why the members of the Committee on Appropriations have taken the position that the only way by which they could get this money was to fry it out of the salaries of the low-income groups in the Government service.

Mr. President, I do not subscribe to that position. I say that the Senate should not admit that it is impotent, that it is incompetent, in passing upon a $4,000,000,000 Budget, to find $33,000,000 of economies in order to make up the difference between the two plans.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to extend the debate unduly. Virtually every aspect of the matter has been discussed. Every consideration has been canvassed.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that under the committee proposal, in addition to the 10 per cent cut, a furlough may be imposed. Let me remind the Senator that under the furlough plan, sponsored by the Senator from New Hampshire, if the Congress fails to appropriate sufficient money to operate the furlough system as contemplated-that is to say, to furlough the employees only so many days throughout the year-the moment the money becomes exhausted there will be more furloughs and less employment. In other words, under either system the employees will be paid what Congress appropriates. When the appropriations are exhausted, the employees will be off the league the junior Senator from Connecticut were present he pay roll, furlough plan or no furlough plan. So that in that respect the one proposal has no advantage over the other.

As I undertook to say on a recent day, it was the thought of the committee that the Congress should appropriate enough money to continue the pay roll uninterruptedly at the 90 per cent rate, but anticipating that through oversight or miscalculation, Congress might fail to do that, the furlough provision was inserted in the bill to prevent dismissal of employees.

Mr. President, the real purpose I had in mind in addressing myself to the pending motion was to inquire whether, if the motion is adopted, it will bring before the Senate the entire proposal, that is to say, whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be open to amendment.

For instance, the Senator from Michigan offered an amendment superimposing graduated reductions on the furlough system. If we are going into the matter at all, we may as well go into the whole matter; and if the entire matter is to be reopened and recanvassed from all viewpoints, the consideration of the bill will probably be extended indefinitely. If it were passed with the furlough provision in it, the difficulty presented by the fact that the body at the other end of the Capitol rejected the proposal by an overwhelming vote will have to be met and solved if possible.

I have already said everything within my power with respect to the justice of the 10 per cent cut, with respect to its uniformity, with respect to its fairness, with respect to the manner in which it exacts an equal toll which all of us regret to require. I hope that after the committee has labored with the matter long, after the Senate has recorded its judgment upon the proposal, at this late hour we will not reverse our attitude on the question.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as has been stated before by various members of the subcommittee, the matter of the furlough plan was laid before us almost at the very beginning of our study of the entire question. One of the reasons why we adopted the other plan instead of the furlough plan was the very large difference in the amount of savings, something like $40,000,000. Another was the difficulty of putting the furlough plan fairly into effect.

It happens, through coincidence, that this very morning I received a letter from an official of one of the relief funds conducted by the post-office clerks, in which I find these

The furlough plan is real bad, and the men are bitterly opposed to it. It can't or won't be done equally, and is the opening wedge to break down the civil service laws. We could get thousands to write you letters protesting-

And so forth.

That letter states one of the reasons which led us to adopt a simple cut right along the line instead of adopting a plan which would be extremely difficult to operate, and one which would be bound to result in injustices and irregularities, with the best will in the world. As was stated yesterday, there are a number of employees in the Government service and in the service of the District of Columbia to whom it could not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is necessarily absent. On this question I have been released from my pair by the arrangement of a special pair of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] with my colleague the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. I understand that if the junior Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "nay," and if my col-would vote "yea." I vote "nay."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. Black's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is necessarily absent. I am not informed how he would vote on this question.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. I am not informed how that Senator would vote if present. I therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PITTMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who is necessarily absent to-day. I am not advised how he would vote on this matter if he were present. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], who is necessarily absent from the Senate, I withhold my vote. If free to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black]. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], who is detained in connection with the Geneva conference. If he were present, I understand that he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHEFLER (when his name was called). On this matter I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN]. I am not informed how he would vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. On this matter I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], who is absent on important business. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote, being unable to obtain a transfer. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BULKLEY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and therefore withhold my vote. If that Senator were present, he would vote "yea," and if permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. Hastings], who is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and if the senior Senator from Maryland were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], if present and not paired. would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. La Follette's motion to reconsider was agreed to. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses].

Mr. MOSES. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. HOWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. GORE. I rose to make a motion to lay the substitute on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator was not recognized for that purpose. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, we indeed are passing through the worst depression in the history of this country. During the first three years of the depression of 1837, prices declined 23 per cent; during the first three years of the depression of 1873 prices declined 18 per cent; but during the first three years of the depression of 1929 prices declined 30 per cent. These comparative figures are the result of a study of the Duration of Major Panics in the United States, by Doctors Warren and Pearson, professors of economics at Cornell University, and published in the May, 1932, issue of Farm Economics issued by that institution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield. Mr. ASHURST. I have observed the able Senator from Nebraska rise from day to day with appropriate demeanor. He has moved me. He has convinced me. I want to know what is the bill he desires the Senate to pass? I am anxious to vote for it. Will he please tell me what is the bill for which he wants me to vote?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate long. I am speaking in behalf of agriculture.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield. Mr. ASHURST. I believe the Senator is sincere. Other Senators are also sincere. This session is making some signs of drawing to a close. I want to vote for some bill to relieve agriculture. Will not the Senator, able as he is, name the bill and give us an explanation of the particular bill to which he refers, so that those who are with him in this movement may have a chance to vote on the same?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I rose for a purpose, and I will express that purpose at this time. I rose to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 780, a bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929. This bill was introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may receive consideration immediately following the close of the final vote upon the economy bill now before us.

Unless something is done, and done immediately, we will have no chance at this session to do anything for agriculture. That must be evident to all. We can not wait for the various appropriation bills to be passed by the Senate. The bill to which I have referred must be considered, it must be passed by the Senate, it must go to the House and receive consideration there. Let us not avoid the situation. Let us face exactly what is before us and act as we should act. That is the reason why I have risen to speak here to-day upon the subject of the depression and agriculture, and to point out definitely why we should act, and act now.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the Senator's request for unanimous consent should be granted, as I understand the parliamentary situation then created would not interfere with the privilege of considering the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill in case that report should be submitted to the Senate before the bill proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] should be disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A conference report is always in order; it is a privileged matter, but it does not displace whatever may be pending.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Nebraska now make the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HOWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration, following the final vote upon the economy bill, which is now before the Senate, of Order of Business 780, being the bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act approved June 15, 1929.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, during the coming week there will be quite a number of appropriation bills ready to be considered by the Senate, and I shall, therefore, object to the request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses].

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it must be evident to everyone that there is not the will on the part of some to consider a constructive measure for agriculture. We are now entering the seventh month of the present session, and we have not had on the Senate Calendar until two weeks ago a bill contemplating any constructive relief for agriculture. Now, with adjournment at hand, if my request for unanimous consent is refused, it must be acknowledged that there is not the possibility for the passage of an agricultural relief bill.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my intended remarks may be printed as if delivered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, that can not be done under the rules.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, this study by Warren and Pearson, to which I referred before being interrupted, further shows that there is little prospect for improvement in the present situation unless something is done to check the fall of commodity prices. I quote the following conclusion from their study:

The United States has had no previous experience with a panic of this severity, and no one can foresee what social and political disturbances may occur if the policy of deflation continues. Not only is the decline in prices far greater than the declines in 1837 or 1873 but the credit structure is far more complicated. In 1873 farms were much more nearly self-sufficient than they are to-day. No large debts were incurred for the purchase of machinery. A much higher proportion of the city population was self-employed. There were relatively few public services, and taxes were therefore less important. The more highly developed the civilization the more serious the results of unstable money.

The price decline after the panic of 1837 lasted six years, and the price decline after the panic of 1873 likewise lasted six years. Unless something is done to check the presentcourse of deflation, it may last even longer on account of its greater severity.

Yet what has this Congress done to cope effectively with this situation? Has it passed any effective, constructive measure to check the decline in commodity prices? Has it passed one measure to restore the purchasing power of agriculture, the basic industry of this country? Has it passed one constructive measure to stabilize values so that these recurring booms and panics will be prevented or greatly minimized in their disastrous effects?

We are now entering upon the seventh month of this session of Congress, yet we have not passed one bill to restore the purchasing power of agriculture and place it on | ago to-day-the McNary bill designed to restore the puran equality with other groups. We have not even been permitted to vote upon any such measure.

To-day it is exactly two weeks since the Senate Committee on Agriculture reported favorably the McNary bill amending the marketing act as desired by the national farm organizations of the country. Several distinguished Members of this body have given assurances of their desire for the enactment of such legislation before adjournment. But when are we to have a vote on this measure? Must agriculture be continually pushed aside until every other interest in the country is served? It has waited for six months for Congress to act on this legislation, but so far it has had to stand aside and see this measure and that measure for other industries given preferred status and prompt action, while the measure for the restoration of the agricultural buying power still awaits a vote, with no definite assurance of early consideration.

I appreciate the fact that we have been engrossed in the passage of the revenue bill and, following that, the so-called economy bill and therefore have had no opportunity to consider the McNary bill during the past two weeks. But I repeat, how much longer must agriculture wait for action? When we get through with the economy bill, why not give agriculture its day? Why delay any longer discharging our pledges to restore equality to agriculture? What more constructive action could we take to check the depression and restore prosperity to this country than to restore the purchasing power of agriculture on which 44 per cent of our population directly depends? What more constructive action could we take to reopen our closed factories and put to work our 8,000,000 of unemployed than to restore the buying power of 44 per cent of our population to consume the products of industry?

That is what the McNary bill proposes to do-to restore the purchasing power of agriculture and to give the farmers control of their marketing system to the end that they may receive fair prices for their products.

Mr. President, while the Congress is putting agriculture aside and withholding action to restore its purchasing power, the desperate condition of agriculture is daily growing worse and worse. Last November, just before Congress convened, the farm price index was 71. In December, it had declined to 66, or a drop of 5 points, the lowest point in the history of such records kept by the United States Department of Agriculture. Farmers were paying an average price of 119 per cent of pre-war prices for what they had to buy, leaving them a buying power of 55. The farmer's dollar therefore was worth 55 cents in exchange for what he had to buy. Yet Congress did nothing about it.

In January the farm price index sunk below the record low of December, dropping 3 more points to 63, and the purchasing power of agriculture dropped to 53. Still Congress did nothing.

In February the farm price index sunk 3 more points, dropping to 60, and the purchasing power of agriculture dropped to 52. Still Congress did nothing.

In March the farm price index made a temporary recovery of 1 point, but in April this gain was lost and a new low record of farm prices was reached, the farm index dropping to 59. But still Congress did nothing.

In May the farm price again sunk to a record low level, dropping to 56, with its purchasing power approximately 50 per cent of the pre-war level.

All during the months the farmers were beseeching Congress to act upon the measures recommended by them to correct this inequality. Through their organizations they presented early in the session-nay, even before the session began-several constructive proposals to restore the purchasing power of agriculture. A little later they agreed upon a joint program, which included, among other measures, the principles now embodied in the McNary bill. But yet we have had no vote on these measures.

I want to give the credit due to the Senate Agricultural Committee. Under the leadership of its distinguished chairman, it reported favorably to this body in May-two weeks chasing power of agriculture.

Why should we longer delay action on this important measure, when the condition of agriculture constantly grows more and more acute?

Notwithstanding the facts I have brought to the attention of the Senate, unanimous consent is refused to make this bill the unfinished business at about the only time it is possible, before adjournment, to consider it, pass it, and get it over to the House in time for consideration there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Since the request of the Senator for unanimous consent has been denied, I suggest to him that, as soon as the pending bill shall have been disposed of, he move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which he refers. The Senator has that right; such a motion would be in order parliamentarily; and in that fashion the Senator could immediately have a test vote on the question as to whether or not the Senate wished to consider the bill. I am sure the Senator will find some gratifying results if he will only make such a motion.

Mr. HOWELL. I thank the able Senator from Arizona for his suggestion; and I give notice now that I will ask for a vote on a motion to consider this measure immediately following the disposal of the economy bill. It must be done, for, Mr. President, agriculture must be rescued.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNES, Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate for a few minutes with reference to the vote which has just been taken in this Chamber.

When this so-called Economy Committee was appointed we entered upon our duties with the sole desire to effect a reduction in the expenditures of government. At no time during the consideration of this bill was there ever any political discussion or any partisan difference among the members of the committee.

On the first day that the committee entered upon the consideration of the various proposals, we were asked to visit the White House. There we were assured of the cooperation of the President of the United States. We relied upon that cooperation. It was our aim to effect a reduction in expenditures amounting to at least $250,000,000. Certainly that was the goal set by the committee.

We worked day and night in an effort to bring about such a reduction in expenditures. We knew that the President had proposed the furlough plan. There were members of the committee who looked with favor upon it before we entered upon the consideration of the bill and analyzed its provisions. I was one of those members.

As we entered upon the consideration of the furlough plan, we saw its weaknesses. We knew that its advocates asserted it would not effect a saving of more than $80,000,000. We recognized that it would open the door to favoritism; that under the provisions of that plan it would be left to the head of a department to say that one man was indispensable and therefore should be exempted, while others should be furloughed for a month without pay. We knew that it placed upon the rural carriers a deduction greater than was placed upon any other employees of the Government. We knew that inevitably, throughout the service of the Government, there would be men who could not be furloughed without injury to the service, and that no matter what estimate might be submitted by the Bureau of the Budget the total savings would be speculative in any event. We knew that district attorneys, marshals, collectors of internal revenue, and other political appointees could not be furloughed and would suffer no reduction.

At most, I say, it was estimated that the furlough plan would accomplish a saving of $80,000,000. We concluded to agree upon the plan known as the committee plan, with a cut of 10 per cent affecting all from the President to the porter in the service of the Government. That plan, when agreed upon, was submitted to the President by one member of the committee. He reiterated that he was in favor of the furlough plan, but expressed no intention to oppose the plan agreed upon by the Economy Committee.

Thereafter the minority members of that committee, together with the minority members of the Finance Committee, were invited to the White House. We informed the President of the result of our deliberations. We told him that the only question was as to whether there would be a saving of $200,000,000 or $250,000,000, and that that decision depended upon the action upon what was known as the veterans' provision.

The President made no comment, other than regret that we could not accomplish a greater saving than that which the committee was finally able to agree upon. The President never once intimated to us that his pride of opinion in the furlough plan was such that he would oppose the agreement of the Economy Committee and insist upon the adoption of his furlough plan. On the contrary, on the day following the conference at the White House the President came to the Senate, and referring to the work of the Economy Committee, he told the Senate and told the Nation:

I do know that the committee has made honest and earnest effort to reach a just reduction in expenditures, and I trust, therefore, that despite any of our individual views or the sacrifice of any group, that we can unite in support and expeditious adoption of the committee's conclusions.

He gave his unqualified indorsement to the report of the committee. He asked the Senate to adopt it expeditiously. He told the Nation that he was in favor of the adoption of that report.

The members of the committee made their fight on the floor of the Senate—the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bincham], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton]. As that fight proceeded and amendment after amendment was offered seeking to make an exemption there were certain Members of the Senate known to be close to the administration who voted with the committee on every vote, until finally, on Friday, a change came over their dreams. On Friday for the first time I learned that the President of the United States, after making this declaration to the Senate and to the Nation that he was in favor of the plan adopted by the Economy Committee and pleading for its expeditious adoption, was anxious to have his own pet furlough proposal adopted by the Senate. After declaring that individual views should be sacrificed and the committee plan adopted, he was working against that plan and for his own individual view.

I am violating no confidences; I now mention no names; but I was advised by more than one Senator that on Friday the President requested a Member of this body to introduce his furlough proposal. When that Member of the Senate did not offer the furlough proposal it was submitted to another Senator. That Senator likewise refused to offer the furlough proposal. It then was presented to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], who offered it.

Up to that time the Senator from New Hampshire, the President pro tempore of this body, had supported the committee on every motion that was made, so far as my recollection goes, with reference to the committee proposal of 10 per cent. On the last vote on the adoption of the committee proposal the Senator from New Hampshire voted against it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson], the leader of the Republican Members of this body, voted against it, and for the first time cast a vote against the recommendations of the Economy Committee. If the other Republican Members had followed them, that amendment would not have been adopted, and no plan recommended by the Economy Committee would have been adopted by the Senate.

Since that time there has been considerable delay. Somehow, somewhere, somebody has been at work. All that we who labored to bring about a reduction in the expenditures of the Government know is that the President, having on Tuesday asked the Senate to adopt the plan of the Economy Committee, on Friday began his efforts to have his furlough proposal adopted; and, failing to follow the advice that he gave us to sacrifice our individual views, he has insisted upon his individual view to have this furlough proposal adopted. He succeeded; and by the action of the Senate a few moments ago the vote whereby it was defeated has been reconsidered, and it is before this body.

Mr. President, we may as well understand what this means. The President of the United States told us what it means, for after he publicly begged the Senate to do that which he now privately opposes being done—namely, to adopt the committee plan—he said that he counted on savings of $250,000,000 being effected by this committee. If he counted on that, we might at least have had some cooperation from him in effecting savings of $250,000,000. Instead of that, we find him pressing his furlough proposal to reduce by $40,000,000 the amount of savings that were contained in the bill. He has cooperated with the Economy Committee by privately urging his own proposal and thereby causing a reduction of $40,000,000 in the savings effected by the Economy Committee.

The President told the Senate this:

As this sum-

The sum total of the savings recommended by the Economy Committee—forms the basis of calculations as to increased taxes necessary it is essential that no matter what the details may be, that amount of reduction must be obtained or taxes must be increased to compensate.

Now, Mr. President, we can congratulate the President of the United States on having caused a reduction in savings of $40,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. KING. Appreciating the fact that the torpedoing of this program will necessitate an increase in taxes, I have requested the chairman of the Finance Committee to call the committee together for the purpose of levying more taxes in order to balance the Budget.

to the administration who voted with the committee on every vote, until finally, on Friday, a change came over their dreams. On Friday for the first time I learned that the President of the United States, after making this declaration of the United States advised the Senate that that amount of reduction must be obtained or taxes must be increased to compensate. If, by reason of his action in forcing the adoption of the furlough proposal, there is a reduction in the savings, the only fair, the only straightforward, manly thing for him to do is to demand that taxes be levied to supplant the amount of money taken from this bill by reason of his action. He said that saving was necessary to balance the Budget. He has now prevented that saving in order to promote his personal view.

Mr. President, the President of the United States knows what the action of the House was on this matter. The furlough proposal was submitted and was voted down by the House. The House voted in favor of a straight cut in the salaries of Federal employees. There is a difference between the Senate Economy Committee plan and the House plan, because the House had an exemption of $2,500, and there is an exemption of salaries below a thousand dollars in the Senate bill as the provision was first adopted. The Senate plan saved $121,000,000, the House plan $9,000,000.

Now, if anything is plain, it is that the House considered this bill, and after a vote was taken the furlough plan was voted down. If the furlough plan should be adopted by the Senate and go to conference, there is every reason to believe that the House will insist upon its position, that there will be no reduction at all in the salaries of Government employees, that the plan worked out by the committee will be utterly wrecked, and when it is wrecked the country should know that it was wrecked by the President of the United States insisting upon the adoption of his pet scheme, the furlough proposal.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I call attention to the fact that the vote in the House was nearly 2 to 1.

Mr. BYRNES. Against the furlough proposal?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I thank the Senator from Washington for that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the furlough plan is incorporated by the Senate and is not agreed to in conference, what will be the difference in the economies which will result?

Mr. BYRNES. The furlough proposal would represent at most a saving of $80,000,000 as against the $121,000,000. If the furlough plan is adopted, and not agreed to in conference, the Senate will agree to the House proposal with savings of only $9,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the Senator made a mistake in saying that the total amount of savings under the bill as reported by the committee would be $120,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. I meant in the salary reductions.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is merely in the salary reductions. In addition to that, there are some $47,000,000 in veteran reductions, and about $90,000,000 of other reductions.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Connecticut has labored unceasingly to effect economies, and there never has been a time when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] have not worked with the Members on this side of the Senate, having but one object in view, to bring about a reduction in expenditures and in such a way as would not impair the efficiency of the service.

When the Senator from Washington refers to the vote in the House, it brings to the attention of the Senate forcibly the situation now confronting us. If the House, by a vote of 2 to 1, voted against the furlough plan, what use is there in the Senate adopting the plan and going to conference with it, knowing in advance the attitude of the House? The only result will be that we will have nothing left in the bill at all except the minor savings which would be effected by some of the permanent legislative proposals which are in the bill. So far as I am concerned, I have had no pride of opinion about any one provision in the bill.

Mr. President, I am more disappointed in the attitude of the President of the United States than I ever thought I could be disappointed in the attitude of any man. I relied upon his cooperation, cooperation which we had a right to expect of him after his public statements, and particularly his address to the Senate. I regret exceedingly that at the last minute, when members of his own party and of the Democratic Party have worked faithfully to bring about some economies in expenditures, he should make appeals to Members of this body to vote against the very provision he urged the Senate to adopt only Monday of last week.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina, skilled in parliamentary procedure, what better method could be adopted for wrecking the whole bill by those who are opposed to any reductions at all than to have the Senate adopt the furlough plan and the House adopt the other plan?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, we know that the adoption of this plan will mean no reductions, and if any man is in favor of no reductions, he ought to vote for the substitute. There can be but one result, and we may as well recognize it. When we adopt the furlough plan and this bill goes to conference, there will be no reduction of salaries, and when that is accomplished, I want the Record at least to show that it is not due to any fault of the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Iowa, or of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, the Senator from Tennessee, or the Senator from New Mexico, but the blame for the failure of this plan will lie at the door of the President of the United States, because of his pride of opinion in a pet proposal.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will include the statement that it is no fault of some of us who are merely privates in the ranks, who are trying to follow the Economy Committee, and when we think we have passed a bill which in a way meets the wishes of the President, for this whip to be popped and gentlemen to jump, and then the Senate is going to be held up to the scorn of the country as having failed to perform its duty, when, as a matter of fact, from what the Senator from South Carolina says, it is because the President has "butted in" and kept the Senate from performing its duty.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the members of the committee have been actuated by but one thought, that of reducing expenditures, and there has been no partisanship in the matter. It was not until the last 48 hours that there was any evidence of it. During that time I have seen it, I have known what was going on. I hoped that the result we now see would not be accomplished. It was accomplished. The bill has been wrecked, and it has been wrecked by the President of the United States.

If the President of the United States lives up to the statement he made to the Senate, he should insist upon the levying of taxes upon the people of the United States to take the place of the savings which we had effected and which he has defeated. Throughout the United States there has been an opinion, a general opinion, that all of the balancing of the Budget should not be effected by levying taxes. States, counties, municipalities have been appealed to by the people of the United States for a reduction of taxes. In every instance they have responded. The Federal Government has responded, not with a reduction in taxation but with additional taxation amounting to more than a billion dollars. When the people look to Congress for a reduction in Federal expenditures, our answer to them is that we can do nothing about it, that we can levy an additional $1,100,-000,000 of taxes, that we can take that much from the pockets of the people, but we can not reduce expenditures. The President of the United States appeals for a balancing of the Budget, but he seems to think that the only way to balance the Budget is by the levying of taxes, and not by reducing expenditures. It makes no difference what a man says speaking from the rostrum of the Senate; what I want to know is what he is saying to those who are willing to follow him when he appeals to them to defeat the Economy Committee program. I wish he had openly opposed the committee plan instead of publicly urging its support and privately urging its defeat.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate to detain the Senate with an expression of my views on this subject, but as I have sat here from day to day trying as best I could to cooperate with the Members on both sides in an effort to meet what I know is the overwhelming judgment of the American people, and then see almost all of our efforts come to naught, I am overcome with a sense of profound humiliation.

From 1929 until this hour the income of the American people has declined from $85,000,000,000 to about $45,000,000,000 per annum. Yet, during that time of declining income the cost of government in the United States has gone up from about $12,000,000,000 to about $14,000,000,000. While our national income has declined $40,000,000,000, the expenses of government in the United States have increased $2,000,000,000.

The cost of operating government in the United States to-day is more than 30 per cent of all of our income. We voted the other day to tax the American people more than a billion dollars a year in the face of a decline in national income of more than $40,000,000,000. We voted to put upon their backs, already overburdened with taxes, an amount equal to one-fortieth of the entire decline in the American income in the last two years.

We did that, Mr. President, on the theory and with the promise in our hearts and on our lips that we would reduce the expenses of the American Government in some proportion to the amount of taxes we were having to levy. We justified these increased taxes by the statement that we would drastically reduce Government expenses.

In my judgment—and I have said this outside of this Chamber, and I repeat it here—not only will Members of Congress as a whole but Members of this body as a group have a difficult time defending the levying of a billion dollars a year on the American people, and yet go before them with no decrease worth speaking of in the expenses of the Government.

I recognize that the entire $14,000,000,000 which it costs now to run the governments of the people of this country is not all made up of national expenses but more than a third of the $14,000,000,000 taken from the pockets of the American people to-day is involved in the expenditures of the Government of the United States. More than one-third of the total cost of all government in the United States is for the National Government.

We can not do anything about a reduction in the costs of running the State governments and the county and municipal governments in the United States; but certainly we can set an example of undertaking to bring about economies in the operation of the Government of the United States.

How can we, in the face of unemployment of more than 8,000,000 of our people, justify our refusal to make any reduction in the expenses of operating the Government of the United States, toward which contributions are made by them, as well as by those who have work and who have incomes?

Mr. President, I voted the other day to reduce my own salary and the salaries of my colleagues by 25 per cent—not because I do not think I am worth every dollar I draw, not because this depression has not already taken a heavy toll from me, but because I am willing for it to continue to take a toll from me as it is taking a toll from every other American, whether he is employed or unemployed, whether he is in the Government service or out of the Government service. Yet, when we are asked to pass a bill which merely scratches the surface of economy, even the committee's proposal making merely a pitiful gesture toward economy in proportion to what the American people have made in their own private affairs, our efforts are to come to naught.

How can we face 8,000,000 men out of work in the United States who are pounding the sidewalks to-day in search of employment? We may assume that each man who is out of work represents a family of four, and that means that more than 30,000,000 of the American people, more than a fourth of our entire population to-day, are without visible means of support and are objects of public charity or may become so.

Mr. President, with the reductions in the cost of living in the last two years, how shall we compare any Government employee with the 8,000,000 of those who are out of work and can not find it in this time of depression? Those in this body who do not know that the American people have become intensely tax-minded ought to leave Washington for a few days and go out among them. So far as I am concerned, I feel that if after having voted an additional billion dollars onto the backs of American business and American labor and American agriculture and American consumers, we go back to them with no more of an economic program than is represented in this presidential proposal, we ought to apologize in sackcloth and ashes to 120,000,000 of our people for our failure to recognize our supreme duty in a great crisis in the history of the American Nation.

We might as well pass no bill at all, so far as economy is concerned, as to pass this substitute. Suppose it does work an economy of $80,000,000? What does $80,000,000 amount to in the face of a national expenditure of $5,000,000,000, which represents an increase of $1,500,000,000 in the last four or five years in the total expenditures of the American Government? What does $80,000,000 represent in a system of attenuated economy as compared to the $1,000,000,000, which we have just voted upon the backs of the American people in additional taxes?

We have been told here that we ought to balance the Budget. It has become a sort of shibboleth, a sacred slogan in the last few weeks. Although, for 150 years as a Nation, we did without a Budget and did not know what a Budget was, now that we have one we do not know what to do with it. We can not balance it and we can not leave it unbalanced. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not wish to be harsh in anything I shall say about anybody in connection with the whole matter, but it seems to me it is a lack of good faith toward the American people to come before the United States Senate and say that in order to balance our Budget we must tax them $1,125,000,000 and then, in addition to that, reduce Government expenditures $250,000,000, and on the heels of that, bring secretly into the Chamber a bill that works an economy of only $80,000,000. We are either going to balance the Budget or we are not going to balance it. If we are not going to balance it, we ought to be honest and frank with the American people and say that while we were considering our efforts to balance it by adding to their taxes and their burdens, by making it more difficult and more impossible for them to meet their own family expenses because of the extravagance of the National Government. yet when it came to the proposition of reducing the expenses of our Federal Government and making our Government exercise the same degree of sacrifice that we require of the 120,000,000 people of the land, that is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be defeated. I hope we can go before the people of the country without regard to party, because this is not a partisanship question. It is not a question which ought to arouse any differences between Democrats and Republicans. It is a question that ought to be viewed in the performance of a most solemn obligation. I hope we may be able in some fashion so to bring down the burdens of our Government, even though all of us make sacrifices in order to do it, that we can say to our people that in our efforts to balance the Budget, in our efforts to make income and outgo equal each other, we have been willing not only that we shall levy burdens upon the private citizenship of our land, but that those who are engaged in the processes of government have been willing to make the same sacrifices that we require of everybody else in the United States. Unless we do that we have been guilty of hypocrisy and deception and of perpetrating a sham upon the people and have failed miserably in the performance of our duty. So far as I am concerned, in my capacity as a Senator in this body I do not propose to be guilty of that duplicity. In an effort upon my part at least to perform what I conceive to be my duty to the people of the United States and those who have honored me with membership in this body, I propose to vote to bring the people's Government into some semblance of harmony with their own condition and their imperative demands.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rose to address a question to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] at the conclusion of his remarks. I wish to ask him a question after I have made one or two statements.

The Economy Committee devoted a good deal of time and a good deal of thought to this measure. I have closed my eyes and followed that committee implicitly. I have voted to cut down salaries. I voted for amendments that were wormwood to me. I think all Senators join in a feeling of gratitude to the Economy Committee both for the efficiency and for the courage of their labors. I think that ought to be said with peculiar reference to the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], whose political fortunes are at this time in the balances.

There has been no partisanship injected into the economy measure. I hesitate now to say even a word that might be considered as giving a partisan turn to the controversy. But I remember that only a short time ago the Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Glover, I believe, made an address in the State of Missouri to a number of postmasters. In that address he urged the postmasters to support President Hoover for reelection. He gave them that advice notwithstanding the civil service law and the rules and regulations made in pursuance of that law. He gave the postmasters that advice notwithstanding the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department against pernicious activity in political controversies. He said to the postmasters that if his advice was not acceptable to them, their resignations would be acceptable to him. I thought that the President of the United States ought to have removed Mr. Glover from office the next day. His failure to remove him at least implies his consent or his acquiescence in that threat.

As I understand the furlough provision, it makes the head of every department a Mussolini, so far as his department is concerned, and to the extent of the furlough gives him the power of life and death over the employees in his department. He can reward those who will submit to political dictation, and he can punish those who refuse to submit. I would like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if that power of coercion is not implicit in this measure? I do not mean to imply that the President's acquiescence in Mr. Glover's threat has the same motive of urging the adoption of this measure, but it is at least a matter worthy of consideration.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I do not care to comment upon the action of the Assistant Postmaster General, but I gladly answer as to the provisions of the bill.

The provisions are that no officer or employee shall be exempted from the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) except in those cases where the public service requires that the position be continuously filled and a suitable substitute can not be provided, and then when authorized or approved in writing by the President of the United States. Every position presumably must be continuously filled. That applies to everyone. The President of the United States manifestly can not act in that respect and it is to be left to heads of departments. It is therefore to be left to the head of a department to say when a position should be continuously filled and a suitable substitute can not be found.

Inevitably the result is that the constituents of the Senator from Oklahoma who are in the service are going to come to him and urge him to see the head of this, that, or the other department and have the head of the department recommend that he be exempted from the furlough provision. That plea will be made to every Congressman and every Senator. From the date of the approval of the act, indeed from now on, the time of every man is going to be taken up in listening to appeals to have this employee or that employee named as employees to be exempted from the provisions of the act. Whenever one is exempted in an office, every other clerk who will have to suffer the reduction is going to be dissatisfied, and I would not blame him for being dissatisfied. It opens the door to favoritism, and that is one of the reasons why the Economy Committee, after carefully considering it, determined it would be unwise to adopt it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the furlough provision opens a Pandora's box of evils. As suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, it will subject every Senator and every Congressman to interminable pressure to protect the employees against threatened furloughs and loss of salary. The furlough provision invites favoritism. It invites coercion. I fear coercion may be resorted to. But even if it be administered with absolute and poetic impartiality, free from any favoritism in fact, we can never free its administration from a suspicion of favoritism. Take a dozen employees working in the same room at neighboring desks. One is certified to be indispensable and is not furloughed. Every other employee in his section will suffer a depression in his morale. He will regard it as favoritism whether it is or not. It will tend to demoralize the service and reduce its efficiency.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there has been a great deal said on the floor about the great inequity of the 10 per cent flat cut in pay and in salaries over $1,000, but it could not be said it was going to lead to great suffering. In reply the argument has been used that the purchasing power of the dollar has increased in the last two years to such an extent that 90 cents to-day buys considerably more than one dollar did two years ago. That can not be contradicted.

Mr. President, recently the National Industrial Conference Board has made a careful study of employment and rates of wages throughout the United States. They completed their survey a few days ago with complete returns from 1,718 business concerns who in 1929 employed 3,258,666 persons. In 1932 the number employed by those concerns had dropped to 2,391,000, a falling off of 26 per cent.

In those concerns that have had to let so many people go the decline in wages has also been severe. In those 1,718 concerns executive salaries have been reduced on an average by more than 20 per cent; other salaries, other than wages and exclusive salaries, by nearly 16 per cent; and wage rates by nearly 14 per cent.

The board has made a weighted average in connection with the purchasing power and the weighted average discloses that the wage rates have been reduced 11.1 per cent; other salaries, 13.1 per cent; and executive salaries, 14.9 per cent.

Mr. President, it is from these enterprises and others that the taxes must come. On them the taxes bear heavily.

Of the taxes raised by the United States Government, about $1,000,000,000 go to the Veterans' Administration and $1,329,000,000 go to the employment of persons in the Government service. All those persons—and they number several hundred thousand—are paid out of money raised from taxation. The taxpayers are suffering. Of the taxpayers of this group, some 26 per cent lost their jobs between 1929 and 1932; of those who held their jobs, the average rate of reduction in their compensation was more than 11 per cent, even on a weighted average; and on an average like 10 per cent, which the committee proposes, the lowest wage reduction was nearly 17 per cent.

In the face of those figures, Mr. President, I can not understand why there has been such a tremendous opposition to having the salaries of those who are the direct beneficiaries of the money which the taxpayers contribute to the Government reduced to an extent somewhat comparable to the reduction in the money earned by the wage workers in the great industries of the United States.

It is true that some industries have suffered more than I have others. The National Industrial Conference Board report shows that in some industries, such as extractive and refining, wholesale and retail trade, and public utilities, the reduction of employment has only been about 5 per cent; in the railroads about 19 per cent; but in the manufacturing industry in the States of the Northeast, which have been held up often on this floor to criticism because of the prosperity of their factories-in the manufacturing industry of the Northeast, and wherever in the South and West there are factories, the average decline has been 63 per cent.

Mr. President, the taxpayers all over the country have had to take a substantial reduction in their incomes. Notwithstanding that, we have asked them to take a very material increase in what they must pay in taxes; and the special committee, without any partisanship whatever, a committee on which three members were of the Republican Party and three of the Democratic Party, unanimously agreed that the fairest thing to do was to ask Government employees, excepting the enlisted men in the Army and the Navy, who can not get out of the service if they are not satisfied without incurring punishment and imprisonment-to ask every civilian employee and the commissioned officers of the Army and the Navy to take a 10 per cent reduction. That is a fair and simple thing to do. Furthermore, it will cause less suffering than any other plan, because it means a loss of fewer jobs all through the Government service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. As to the attitude of many Federal employees. I can make a statement from my own experience, and I imagine other Senators have had a similar experience. Many Federal employees in my State have told me that they realize the situation which faces the country and that they are willing to take such temporary reduction in their compensation as may be necessary to tide over the situation. I have personally had very few protests from my State against the horizontal reduction which we have put into the bill. It ought to be said to the credit of hundreds and thousands of Government employees-not necessarily all in Washington but scattered all over the United States-that they are patriotic enough to recognize the seriousness of the situation and to accept whatever burden they ought to accept in connection with it.

I think the majority of them if they were conferred with. would prefer the horizontal cut, so that they would know precisely what they are to get and what they are not to get, rather than the makeshift in the form of a furlough now brought in here.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator, and I desire to say that I think the same sentiment on the part of many Federal employees exists in my own State and in other States with which I am familiar. When the Senator was not in the Chamber I read part of a letter received to-day from a Federal employee, connected with the Connecticut State Branch Relief Fund of Post Office Clerks in which he

If the Senate is bound to cut the low-paid carriers and clerks, let them exempt the first $1,0000 or $1,500; but in the opinion of the men, the Senate should leave them alone and get the money from big-paid men, or from further taxation.

The furlough plan is real bad, and the men are bitterly opposed to it—it can't or won't be done equally and is the opening wedge to break down the civil service laws.

After all the study which the committee made of the furlough plan I feel convinced that it will not work fairly; that it will be extremely difficult of operation; that in many branches of the Government service it will not operate at all. The furlough amendment also applies to the District of Columbia, and in the hearings which we had on the bill the head of one department after another said the furlough plan would not work in his department. I therefore hope that this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is recognized by Senators that I am opposed to reducing the pay of employees. I am now driven to adopt one of two alternatives. I am convinced that the furlough plan is illogical and unjust and is unworkable. I do not by any means intend to reflect upon the literary or the parliamentary ability of the present occupant of the chair. Indeed, it is not regarded as unparliamentary or offensive to refer to a measure as unworkable or as impracticable, and such a reference implies no criticism of its proponent; indeed, I am exempted from any penalty flowing from such a reference, because I do not regard the President pro tempore of the Senate as the proponent of the pending amendment. But whoever may be its proponent, or at least its putative father, the keen, pungent, analytical mind of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses | does not make itself manifest in this amendment. If he were drawing an amendment, he would not have drawn such a monstrosity, such an unworkable measure.

Mr. President, whilst I have never said a word for the civil service I wish it understood that I have never had sympathy with the cynics who criticize the civil service. A Vice President 50 years ago referred to it as the "snivel service"; and we remember the bitter criticism of Roscoe Conkling, the proud and imperial Senator from New York a half century ago, who stated that when Doctor Johnson talked about the infinite possibilities of injustice wrapped up in the word "patriotism," Doctor Johnson did not know of the still greater possibilities of injustice wrapped up in the civil

I have no patience with that sort of magnified speech. The civil service of our country has grown; the people believe in it; notwithstanding some of its abuses, it is a part of the administration of the affairs of this Government, and is at this time well administered.

This so-called furlough plan, however, would devastate, disembowel, wreck, and disrupt the civil service. If some powerful Machiavelli who was opposed to the civil service were behind the scenes moving, though quite concealed in his movements, to cripple the civil service, he could not do better than to adopt this furlough plan.

Before the ides of November shall have come we shall see that the furlough plan, if adopted, will have injured the civil service. If Senators desire to do that, peace be with them.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it has already been stated by those who preceded me in the discussion that the bipartisan committee worked on this phase of the legislation without any partisanship whatever. We were actuated by a common purpose and that was to effect economy. We brought a measure to the Senate not carrying economies to the extent we desired, but the best that could be effected in the short period of time at our command.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King] said a few moments ago that he had requested his colleague the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], chairman of the Committe on Finance, to convene that committee in order that additional taxes might be imposed upon the American people so as to overcome the loss in savings which will be occasioned by the adoption of the furlough plan instead of a flat 10 per cent cut. Mr. President, 120,000,000 people in this country are more interested in economies than they are in additional taxes, and the vote which we shall cast in a few moments will not ring down the curtain upon that desire. The situation in the country is one which will remain with us until we have survived the crisis, until expenditures of Government have been reduced, until the tax burden has been lightened, and that will not be accomplished by the junior Senator from Utah calling upon his colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, to convene that committee and levy additional taxes upon the American people.

Mr. President, during recent years too much time has been devoted to increasing revenues and increasing expenditures of Government. That period has ended. The American people from now forward will see to it, in an orderly fashion, that has characterized our Republic throughout her 150 years and more of existence, that the tax burden is | lightened. They will employ orderly but effective methods to accomplish that end. I deplore the day when I hear one Member of this body say that he has called upon a colleague to convoke a committee in order that the tax burden may be increased. I do not mean to criticize the Senator who uttered those words; far from it; I mean to challenge a situation which requires such a declaration on the floor of the Senate. We have such a situation at hand.

Mr. President, we brought a bill here which carried a reduction on this one score of $121,000,000. By the adoption of an amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] that saving was reduced to about $117,000,000. Now, by the pending amendment, sponsored by a spokesman for the Administration, it is proposed to deduct about $40,-000,000 more, thus we are confronted with the situation which may require that additional taxes be levied in order to overcome that loss.

There is not a Member of this body, there is not a Member of the body at the other end of the Capitol, there is not a well-informed individual in the country, who fails to realize that the expenses of the Government must be reduced: that ways and means and methods must be found and employed to accomplish that end. The members of the Economy Committee have acted with perfect good faith in dealing with each other, in responding to the call made upon them when they were named to that bipartisan body to evolve means of reducing expenditures from the Federal Treasury. Aside from other things, let it be said that perfect good faith has characterized the members of that committee. Vote as you will; reduce the saving if you will; impose a heavier burden upon the taxpayers of the country if you are so disposed; that is the effect of the amendment now pending, if it should be adopted. The loss must be supplied from some other

Let the responsibility rest where it should. Let it rest upon the shoulders of those who sustain the amendment, and who strike from the bill an economy of $40,000,000-and that is merely an estimate. That is somebody's judgment. No man can foresee, no man can foretell, no man can forecast with certitude, how many substitutes will be employed, nor how many certificates of indispensability of service of those already in the ranks will be granted. As those certificates increase, the savings will be reduced. As additional substitutes are employed, the economies will decrease. When we say that the adoption of this amendment will decrease the savings $40,000,000, that is just somebody's judgment. It may exceed $50,000,000. It may strike the major portion of economies from the measure.

Not only that, Mr. President, but, as the chairman of the committee so well said a few moments ago, the body at the other end of the Capitol rejected this proposal by a majority of about 2 to 1. Without any prophetic vision, I opine that the adoption of this amendment may imperil the entire bill. If it fails, and we achieve no economy, let that responsibility rest where it should.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the action of the other body, which is said to have effected an economy of $42,000,000, will not the adoption of this amendment create a situation where the difference between the two Houses will be so narrow that the result of any conference will be practically no economy to speak of in the expenses of the Government of the United States?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it will be a sham and a mockery under the guise of economy, and nothing more, and the American people will know it.

This legislation hangs in the balance. Its lifeblood depends upon the vote we shall record in a few minutes. I have no hope that anything I say may change a single vote on the floor; but, despite that fact, after having collaborated with my colleagues upon the committee during more than three weeks, after having brought here a measure that was the best we could devise through our concert of action, I am unwilling to see its very lifeblood spilled by this vote without raising my voice in protest against that action, against its effect here and elsewhere.

Adopt it if you will, Mr. President; defeat the legislation if you will; but in the future let the responsibility rest where it should, upon those who support the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just one word before we

I want to read from the President's message an excerpt that I believe has already been read; but I desire to read it again for the purpose of emphasizing it.

In the message which the President delivered to the Senate in person on May 31, last Tuesday, he said:

An earnest nonpartisan effort was made to secure these purposes in a national economy bill in the House but it largely falled. That subject is under review by the bipartisan committee appointed from the members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and I am informed it has tentatively agreed upon a recommendation which would aggregate savings of $250,000,000 recommendation which would aggregate savings of $250,000,000 together with a number of undetermined further possibilities. I am not informed as to details of these recommendations, although I learn that my own suggestions in many instances have not been accepted.

And here is the crux of his statement:

But I do know that the committee has made honest and earnest effort to reach a just reduction in expenditures, and I trust, therefore, that despite any of our individual views or the sacrifice of any group, that we can unite in support and expeditious adoption of the committee's conclusions.

Was there ever a clearer or a more direct request of the Senate to adopt the committee's conclusions? And that was supposed to be what the Senate would do until the last day or two. I have been informed-and if it is not true. Senators can say so-that within the last two or three days the President of the United States, notwithstanding this statement, has called Senators before him or has conversed with them and urged them to vote against the very proposal that he indorsed last Tuesday.

Senators, do you believe that that is good faith? Do you believe that that is fair to the Senate of the United Statesjust about a week ago urging the Senate to support the recommendations of this bipartisan committee, indorsing the action of the committee in its efforts to reduce expenditures, and then afterwards without saying a word to the Senate, fighting the very proposal that he publicly recommended

Mr. President, it seems to me that if it were anybody else in the world but the President of the United States there would be but one characterization that could be applied, and that is, bad faith; and even in the President it is certainly lack of good faith.

Here was a committee that was fairly and impartially trying to reduce expenditures for an administration that some of us did not support, in order to balance the budget. We thought the President was behind us. He publicly stated in this body that he was behind us. Yet in the last day or two we find that instead of being behind the committee he was undertaking to wreck what the committee had done. I want to say that I believe that if the President's latest undertaking is carried out, if this substitute is adopted by the Senate, it will wreck the entire measure, and that part of the deficit will have to be made up in some other

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, when I came down here last fall I felt satisfied that it would not be necessary to reduce the salaries of any of our Government officials or employees. I think I wrote letters to that effect. I think I said I would not vote to reduce them. I hoped very earnestly that there would be a change, that things would have started for the better; but things have been getting worse, and they have kept getting worse. Lack of employment has spread throughout the land. Wages have been reduced everywhere. Unemployment has become worse and worse. The bill came over from the House making a reduction in the compensation of Government officials and employees.

I have become convinced that it is necessary-not for the welfare of the Government officials and employees, of course, but for the welfare of the country, and for the purpose of creating a better sentiment throughout the country—that Government officials and employees should stand their part of the reduction that is going on everywhere.

Some say that this reduction will encourage private enterprise to cut the wages of their employees. Private enterprise does not need any encouragement along this line. Private industry has been doing that for months, more and more. So I have become convinced that the Government officials and employees should stand some part of the reduction that all of our people must endure.

Coming to that conclusion, the only question for me when this bill came over was to determine what was the wisest plan to follow—whether it should be done by the straight 10 per cent reduction or whether it should be done by this proposed other course. If we must cut wages, what is the best way, what is the most equitable way?

My good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] wants the 5-day week to come. So do I. It is coming; nothing can stop it. This bill, however it is passed, will not hasten it or hinder. Necessity will compel it. He reads a letter from Mr. Green, of the American Federation of Labor. I am just as friendly to labor as he. I have done as humble work as he. I have as warm sympathy for it as he. I have toiled as humbly as he. We only differ as to what is best in this great trouble.

I came to the conclusion that a 10 per cent reduction applying to everybody was the best course, on the whole. There are objections, of course, to any program of reduction that could possibly be worked out. There are inequalities in any plan that we may propose. I concluded, however, that this plan was the best. I was glad that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] was adopted, although I cast my vote against it. I stood by our committee's work; but I was glad when that amendment was adopted. It improved the program that we proposed to follow. We should have proposed it ourselves.

I visited the President this morning. This matter was not mentioned in any way, shape, or form. I say that because I know that some may conclude that because I visited him he probably discussed this matter with me. He did not. The President of the United States has never discussed this matter with me, nor I with him. I have gone along the lines that I felt were the best lines to follow. He has never sought to influence me one way or the other. I say that in justice to him, as well as, I think, in justice to myself, and especially in view of what has been said to-day and taken place since yesterday.

I have no complaint against the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who made this motion. He does not believe that the wages of our employees should be cut at all. I wish they need not be. That is the difference. There are many Senators on this floor even under the present circumstances who are not in favor of any cuts in the salaries of any of the officials or employees of the Government, whether high or low. That is all right. I do not complain about that; but it does not look just exactly right that the Senators who may believe in some form of reduction in the compensation of Government employees to be necessary should unite with those who do not believe any reduction is necessary, and possibly bring about a condition of things where we will really accomplish nothing. That, of courseand I do not complain about it-will please those who do not want to cut salaries at all.

What is the situation? We know what the vote was in the House. I do not think it is inappropriate for me to refer to that. This proposition was dealt with squarely by the House of Representatives. The vote was nearly 2 to 1 against what is proposed here in the United States Senate. Do Senators think that by sending this matter to conference upon a proposition that the House has rejected, 2 to 1, there is any hope of our accomplishing anything? I am afraid not.

Of course, as I said a while ago, this is very satisfactory to those who do not want to cut the salaries of the Government employees; but it is a great disappointment to those who feel that there should be economy in the Government expenditures, and that the Government employees should bear their part of that economy. If the people of the country, many of whom are walking the streets or going along the highways without any income or anything to do or anything to eat, should see that we have not asked the Government officials or employees to bear any part of the reduction in the Government's expenses, they will feel that things are not going right; just as I said the other day, that will create a feeling throughout this country among our people that should not exist, and which I think myself is far more important even than the matter of dollars and cents.

Mr. President, I want this bill to pass in some form to-day. The verdict of the Senate is always my verdict although I may not agree with it. We will go to conference, and we will be met by the situation I have pointed out. I shall stand to the limit for the decision of the United States Senate, whatever it may be. But what action may Senators expect the House of Representatives to take after the vote they have already taken upon this very matter? The chances are that this bill will come back to the Senate for its further decision if the Senate votes in accordance with the vote cast on the motion to reconsider. I want the Senate to consider that phase of the matter, too.

This is not said by way of a threat. It is simply telling the Senate what it may expect. The Senate decree will control me in the conference we must have, and I shall not recede from what the Senate does, or something along those lines, until this body says it wants to recede.

What may the Senate expect the other body to do after the vote it has taken? That situation confronts the Senate, and it confronts us now, and it confronts us upon the vote we are about to take with reference to the provision we are asked to put into the bill covering the matter of furloughs.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee and to other Senators who have spoken upon this subject that I have not seen the President of the United States upon this matter, and the President has never said a word to me in relation to any vote I have cast upon it. What action I have taken has been the reflection of my judgment and what I believed would be for the best interests of our country and in the best interest of the employees.

I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I know what a difficult task the subcommittee has had, although I was not a member of the subcommittee. I believe with all my soul that they have reported to us what the majority of the committee thought was the best plan to be adopted.

I think otherwise, Mr. President. I think the furlough plan is the proper one to adopt. I think it is fairer to all the employees of the Government, taken as a whole. If there were no other way of raising the necessary funds than by reducing salaries, I would gladly vote for the report made by the committee; but when my judgment tells me that the furlough plan is the best plan devised for all of the employees—not one class, but the employees as a whole—I find it my duty to at least vote my convictions in the matter.

My vote will be for the furlough plan as it has been offered; and whatever comes from the conference, I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I will be perfectly willing to abide by. But I do not feel justified, under the conditions, in voting for what I believe is not the best plan.

I do not care to say more. I have stated my position on the question, and I am ready to vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COPELAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. Not knowing how he would vote, in his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how he would vote, in his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], who is absent. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote " yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I would vote " yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] is necessarily absent and is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall]. I am not informed how my colleague would vote on this question.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], who is absent. If the Senator from Kentucky were present. I understand that he would vote as I have voted. and therefore I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PITTMAN. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who is unavoidably absent. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I understand that if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings].

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], if present, would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 35, as follows: YEAS-38

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amend-

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, line 5, after the word "cost," strike out the remainder of the section and insert the following:

Thereof as determined by the Public Printer plus 50 per cent: Provided, That a discount of not to exceed 25 per cent may be allowed to authorized book dealers and quantity purchasers, but such printing shall not interfere with the prompt execution of work for the Government. The surplus receipts from such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. The Superintendent of Documents shall prescribe the terms and conditions under which he may authorize the resale of Government publications by book dealers, and he may designate any Government officer his agent for the sale of Government publications under such regulations as shall be agreed upon by the Superintendent of Documents and the head of the respective department or establishment of the Government. The selling price of publications as provided for herein shall be in lieu of that prescribed in the public resolution approved May 11, 1922 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 72 and 220), and section 42 of the act of January 12, 1895 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 114).

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, this is an amendment which I feel quite sure the Senator in charge of the bill can accept. It is designed merely to extend the sale of Government publications by making them more readily available to people in all parts of the country through having them placed on sale with authorized book sellers in different sections of the country instead of having every purchase made through the Superintendent of Documents in Washington with the attendant delay and difficulty which attends their purchase by mail.

Last year there were sold $701,000 worth of such documents, and $218,000 of that represented profit. This is a matter which the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], when he was chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing; the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], when he occupied the same office; and I, now that I hold that office, have been working on for a good many years. It is a practical plan of getting the documents more readily into the hands of the people who wish to purchase them. I have here a great many letters from educational and other institutions suggesting that some plan of this sort be worked out. I am quite sure it is an amendment which the Senator can accept.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the relationship of the amendment to the subject matter of the legislation?

Mr. MOSES. On page 66, at the top of the page, the Senator will find in section 306 a section fixing the price at which additional copies of Government publications are to be offered for sale to the public. My amendment merely provides that the added price, which by the bill is 30 per cent, to the cost of printing shall be made 50 per cent, and that that sum shall be divided with authorized dealers throughout the country who buy the books and sell them to local purchasers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a mere administrative matter and not presented as an item of economy?

Mr. MOSES. I would say to the Senator, to his amazement I have no doubt, that I am now offering an amendment which is designed to bring money into the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe this will mean additional money in the Treasury of the United States to the extent of between $300,000 and $400,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we could only adopt this plan, and then stop the everlasting printing in the RECORD of communications, petitions, editorials, and speeches that anyone wants to have there inserted, we would save another $300,000 or $400,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when it became apparent that the purpose to destroy the pending bill would succeed, I suggested to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee that the committee be reconvened for the purpose of considering what steps should be taken to raise additional revenue in order that the Budget might be balanced. I understand, of course, that revenue legislation must originate in the House; but I thought that both the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee should be in readiness to draft another tax bill, when the work of destruction now in progress-so far as the pending measure is concerned-was consum-

It is now manifest that the work of the Economy Committee is to be torpedoed, the result of which will be that the economies promised and expected will not be realized. When the tax bill which passed the Senate a day or two ago was under consideration it was conceded by the President and the Congress that it would not meet the expenditures for the next fiscal year, and that several hundred million dollars were to be realized from economies which would be effected and carried into execution, under the terms of the so-called economy bill.

The committee having the latter bill in charge brought to the Senate a measure that was to raise between two hundred and fifty and three hundred million dollars. In my opinion, the bill as reported had serious defects but it represented an honest effort to meet the needs of the Government. It has been so mutilated and changed that it is certain that it will utterly fail to produce the expected revenue.

With the shrinking revenues of the Government there must be at least between three hundred and four hundred millions of dollars made available to supplement the revenues derived from taxation if the Budget is to be balanced. It had been supposed that the "economy bill" would yield this indispensable and precious amount. No other fountain was in sight, and to it the country looked for succor.

But we are destroying the fountain and the result is certain—that without additional taxes or drastic cuts in pending appropriation bills there will be a deficit that will be a menace to the credit of the Government.

In my opinion, this bill should be recommitted in order that it may be so framed as to effect reductions in the Federal Budget for the coming year of at least $300,000,000. I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he does not think this course should be pursued?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, we will take the bill to conference, and if we can not work out a satisfactory agreement then we will come back to the Senate and the Senate will have an opportunity to act on it again.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill by what sum the amount which the bill as presented to the Senate has been reduced from the estimate made of savings as the bill was presented?

Mr. JONES. Of course, we do not know exactly. There have been various estimates with reference to the change the Senate has just adopted. We thought we would realize about $230,000,000 as the bill was reported to the Senate. Estimates relating to the amendment just adopted range from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000, that it will save. We figure now that the bill as it is will save about $150,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As against $230,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, by the amendments adopted by the Senate the amount to be saved has been reduced by about $80,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Something like that. There are several provisions in the bill that are entirely indeterminate. They may raise more and they may raise less.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, we understand the figures can not possibly be entirely accurate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the so-called furlough plan was first presented in the House by a committee headed by Congressman Wood. They presented a detailed statement prepared by the Bureau of the Budget claiming it would effect a saving of $81,000,000 outside of the legislative establishment, and their guess at the savings in that establishment made a total saving of $83,000,000. The savings affected by the Economy Committee plan were $121,000,000 after making the deductions as a result of amendments, so that by reason of the action of the Senate this afternoon $40,000,000 is taken out of the bill and as the bill goes to conference the question will be between $80,000,000 saving claimed to be effected, but which I am satisfied never will be effected, and the saving claimed by the action of the House.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The answer is that practically $150,000,000 is the total saving accomplished by the bill as it now stands, being $80,000,000 less than the bill as it was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it is a little more than that. Yesterday the Senate, in taking out all of the matters referring to veterans, reduced the amount in the bill by nearly $48.000.000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senate seems to put itself very much in the position of the hound.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; the Senate has not done it; the President has done it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say just a word about the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. Of course, this is the first time I have seen the whole amendment or heard it read, but it seems to me it is right along the line of probably bringing into the Treasury more money than we are getting now and more than we will expend; so I am glad to accept the amendment so far as I can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all of sections 101 and 102 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation of the Members of the House and Senate and all other Federal employees whose salaries are $10,000 a year or more is hereby reduced 15 per cent of the amount thereof.

Mr. NEELY. The sole object of the amendment is to place the entire burden of salary reductions upon the Members of the Congress and other Federal office holders and employees who receive $10,000 a year or more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment as offered would have to be changed to follow the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. NEELY. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted immediately after the amendment which, upon the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, was adopted by the Senate after my amendment had been printed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be read again and will the Senate please be in order so Senators may hear.

Mr. NEELY's amendment was again read.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, is that amendment in order in view of the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] was adopted referring to the same question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not advised as to the provisions of the Senator's amendment and whether it does cover salaries. If it covers salaries, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MOSES. My amendment has a provision in it reducing, by 10 per cent, the salaries of Senators.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, my proposal is to reduce the salaries of the Members of the Congress 15 per cent. I ask for a vote on my amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The other amendment having been agreed to, the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is not in order.

Mr. NEELY. That is very unfortunate for the underpaid Federal employees whom I should like to protect.

Mr. COPELAND, Mr. COSTIGAN, and Mr. ODDIE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me invite the attention of the Senate to the following telegram:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., June 6, 1932.

Hon. M. M. NERLY, United States Senate:

Due to present law a number of supervisors in this State will be reduced $200, effective July 1, account reduced receipts of their respective offices. On this account 10 per cent additional reduction as voted will create hardship. Suggest amendment that one or the other be eliminated.

LEWIS NEARMAN, State Secretary National Association Postal Supervisors.

Mr. President, in order to prevent the injustice to which this message directs attention I had intended to request that the following be added to line 11 on page 45 of the bill: "In lieu of all other reductions authorized by existing law"; but the adoption of the furlough amendment, proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, makes this language inappropriate in the place in which I had intended to request that it be inserted. Therefore, may I not urge those in charge of the bill to protect the postal supervisors from the double penalty in question?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I have an amendment to offer covering that amendment, which will probably be accepted by the committee and will accomplish the purpose he has in mind.

Mr. NEELY. If the matter is to be taken care of in the way the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, then I withdraw my request.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the proper place in the bill, the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to insert:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to postal employees who will be automatically reduced 10 per cent or more in salary on July 1, 1932, by reason of reduced postal receipts for the calendar year 1931.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, under existing law, on the 1st day of July of this year the salaries of groups of postal employees will be either raised or decreased, depending upon the receipts of the particular offices in which they are employed. At the end of December each year the Post Office Department makes up a record, so that it is known now just what officials will have their salaries reduced or increased on July 1 next, assuming that the pending measure is not enacted into law. These officials include postmasters in first-class post offices, assistant postmasters in first-class post offices, supervisors in first-class post offices, and special clerks in first-class offices; and also assistant postmasters in second-class offices. In some instances the reduction which some of these postal officials will receive automatically under existing law will amount to $500 or $600, and if the reduction proposed in this bill is also applied to them the total reduction they will suffer will amount to nearly $1,000 in some cases.

All postoffice employees will at least have a reduction of 10 per cent in their compensation, but the amendment provides that in cases where, in addition to the automatic reduction, there would be a further reduction due to the operation of existing law equal to or greater than 10 per cent, the reduction under this proposed act shall not apply because of the fact that these employees will already have had their salaries very materially reduced. I will say now to the Senator from Washington that the matter might well go to conference and be worked out there, because there appears to be an inequity here.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Chair if this amendment is in order. The substitute amendment, which is known as the furlough plan, definitely provides for the furloughing of all employees except certain enumerated employees. There is no reduction in the salaries of the great body of employees except through the furloughing of those employees. I do not understand, therefore, how the amendment can now be

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. This amendment exempts from the operation of the act certain employees, and, of course, exemptions can be made. It has reference to employees whose automatic reductions are more than 10 per cent of their wages.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the amendment in the form of a proviso to the language of title 1 which we have just adopted

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order to that title. The question is whether it would be in order to some other part of the bill, for instance, to the House text. The amendment, as proposed, indicates that it is "to be inserted at the proper place." It does not indicate whether it is an amendment to the House text or an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. It is not in order if it is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire or to any committee amendment without such amendment being reconsidered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment can not be applied to anything other than the so-called furlough plan, which has been adopted as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I was going to say I did not know whether it was in order; but, if it was, I was perfectly willing to have it go to conference. It seems to me the whole matter is covered, however, by what has already been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to section 319 on page 73. Did the committee estimate that this section would save any material sum of money?

Mr. JONES. We did; we thought it might save a considerable sum of money. It was suggested by the Comptroller General; and, while he did not know what it would save. he thought it would save several hundred thousand dollars probably, and the saving might run to more than that.

Mr. REED. It might be several million dollars.

Mr. JONES. It might be; yes.

Mr. COPELAND. My attention was called to this matter to-day by Major Heath, in charge of public buildings. He said the adoption of this amendment as written would seriously embarrass, if not make impossible, the erection of the two Federal buildings in New York City, the new post-office building and the Federal courts building.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The buildings to which the Senator refers are under way now, are they not?

Mr. COPELAND. The contracts have not been let. If the contracts had been let, it would not matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Was there not a direct appropriation made for the two buildings in New York City?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I do not think this section will affect them.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the interpretation which the chairman of the committee gives to the section that it does not affect the two buildings to which I have referred?

Mr. JONES. Has the appropriation been made for the buildings?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Then I do not see how this section would apply to them. The section provides "for a reduction of 10 per cent of the limit of cost as fixed in such authorization."

Where the money has been actually appropriated for the work there is a different situation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.
Mr. BINGHAM. Let me say that in line 5 he will note the words, "whether an appropriation therefor has or has not been made."

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. BINGHAM. I may say to the Senator from New York that the committee was informed that most contracts that have recently been entered into for Government buildings have been at least 15 per cent below the limit of cost provided at the time the authorization was made, due to the great reduction in the cost of construction. Therefore, the section to which the Senator refers would really not work any hardship. What actually has been happening is this: Where an authorization of, say, $100,000 was made for a Government building, and a contract for it was let for only $90,000, great pressure has been brought to bear upon the department to add various attractive features, such as shower baths and other pleasant devices which were not contemplated in the original plan at all but which could be provided, because they could all be added under the original authorization of cost. The provision in the bill is an effort to take advantage of the great decrease in the cost of construction and save the Government money which otherwise might be wasted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I realize that the purpose was to take up the lessened cost of construction, but Senators will bear in mind that in great buildings such as are the buildings in New York to which I refer, the estimate is more or less of a guess, to begin with; it is not until pen and pencil are put to paper that it is actually ascertained what the cost is to be.

With reference to these two buildings-and they are not local buildings but have to do with the Federal court, and so forth, in New York-it was found that it was the lessened cost of material which made it possible to go forward with the projects on the original estimate. Now, if, in addition, it is necessary to take off 10 per cent, Major Heath assures me that it is going to work a very serious impairment of those projects.

Mr. JONES. When were the estimates made for these buildings?

Mr. COPELAND. The estimates were made some time ago.

Mr. JONES. Two or three or four years ago?

Mr. COPELAND. Not that long ago.

Mr. SMOOT. They were made a couple of years ago.

Mr. JONES. A couple of years ago?

Mr. COPELAND. A considerable time ago.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that for these buildings, like all the other buildings throughout the country, while the estimates originally were much higher than now, a 10 per cent reduction would be very light.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say just a little bit more about that. It is a very simple matter to make an estimate on a building costing $100,000 or $200,000, but when it comes to a building that costs $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 it is a different proposition. Major Heath assures me that when they came actually to get the bids they found their estimates to be all wrong, and it was only because of the lessened cost of construction that it was possible to go forward with the appropriations available. Now, if upon top of that comes a further reduction of 10 per cent in those great buildings, it will make a very serious interference with the projects.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think there is any doubt that this section will not affect such buildings as those to which the Senator refers. If he will take the authorizations for buildings even as late as last year and the bids upon them, he will find that the estimates were a great deal higher than the bids which were received. In some cases the bids received were 20 per cent less than the estimate; in other cases 10 per cent less; but certainly under the conditions which will exist this year and next year-and most of the work will have to be done next year-we will save more than 10 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator must bear in mind that we have had legislation that relates to copper, for instance, so that the cost of copper roofing and other materials going into the buildings will be increased.

Mr. President, I have no interest in the matter beyond the fact that my attention was called to it to-day by Major Heath, who is supposed to be the authority on this particular matter; he assured me that this is a grievous mistake and that it will seriously impair those building projects in New York City.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that if it appears a year or two later that it is a serious mistake, of course, it will take a long time to construct those buildings, and in the meantime, if necessary, Congress can take care of that matter. I think, under the circumstances, this is a very reasonable proposition.

Mr. COPELAND. I think, in the generosity of his heart, the Senator has promised me that if it is found that more money is needed as we proceed, in his powerful position as chairman of the Appropriations Committee he will help us to get it.

Mr. JONES. There will have to be a very strong showing of need.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

On page 55, paragraph (c), line 13, I move that "$2 per day" be increased to "$3 per day."

I will read paragraph (c):

(c) The traveling allowances provided for in the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 633), shall not exceed $2 per day.

Mr. President, this refers to the travel allowance. I have here two statements which illustrate the effect of the provisions of the economy bill, now before the Senate, upon railway postal clerks. One statement illustrates the effect of the 10 per cent pay cut plus the other deductions, and the other statement illustrates the effect of the proposed furlough system plus other deductions.

From the viewpoint of the railway postal clerk, the furlough system is preferable, provided the annual vacation be not surrendered. It might be held that the annual vacation would not be a cash loss. If so, the net cash loss under the furlough system, plus other deductions, would be less than under the 10 per cent deduction. The railway postal clerks believe that the furlough proposition is preferable.

However, I see no justification in penalizing railway postal clerks not only by reductions in salary but by loss of nightdifferential pay and the 33 1/3 per cent deduction in traveling expenses. Even with full allowance under basic law for traveling expenses, the railway postal clerk only receives $3 per day after the expiration of the first 10 hours that he is on duty. For the first 10 hours he does not receive any expense allowance. The pending bill proposes to reduce that allowance 331/3 per cent, or to $2 per day, so that this employee would only have $2 allowed for expenses for the first 34 hours that he was away from his initial terminal.

The night differential is paid at the rate of 10 per cent of that of those working daytime, and that is certainly not excessive or unreasonable. The employee working nights should receive that little consideration. That is a very small thing to ask. It is simply a humane act on our part to allow the night postal clerks what the law has previously allowed them, and which is little enough.

I ask that the amendment be adopted. I also ask unanimous consent that the two statements to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate economy bill, as it affects the Railway Mail Service. Ten per cent reduction in salary, plus loss of night differential and travel allowance.

Total number of employees in Railway Mail Service, approximately 22,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, what is the amendment the | activities, the President is authorized and requested to pro-Senator proposes?

Mr. ODDIE. It is on page 55, line 13, that the amount be raised from $2 to $3 per day.

Mr. JONES. I hope that amendment will be voted down at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE!

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 78, line 5?

In order to make this section conform to other sections, and to fulfill what is understood to be the purpose of the committee, I move to insert, after the word "and," the words "or any of," prior to the words "the functions."

Mr. JONES. I think I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 78, line 5, after the word "and," it is proposed to insert the words "or any of," so that it will read:

STATUTORY AGENCIES

SEC. 406. Whenever, in carrying out the provisions of this title, the President concludes that any executive department or agency created by statute should be abolished and/or any of the funccreated by statute should be abolished and/or any of the functions thereof transferred to another executive department or agency or eliminated entirely the authority granted in this title shall not apply, and he shall report his conclusions to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to understand this proposal.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is assumed that the purpose of this section is to provide for the transfer of statutory duties by the President, subject to the approval of Congress

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; and what the Senator is doing is undoing exactly what we do. The Senator wants to make the provisions which apply to an entire executive department apply to any part of it, and, therefore, that would prevent the President from transferring a part of one department to another department under another provision of the bill.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not my intention-

Mr. JONES. I did not understand that is was the intention of the Senator from Colorado to do that. Of course, we would not want to do that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My understanding is, Mr. President, that if the Senator from Connecticut is upheld it will be possible to achieve a transfer of a department piecemeal to Congress rather than fulfill the original purpose of the section, which is to bring back the question of a transfer to the Congress. If I am in error, I desire to be corrected.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there are provisions in the bill which give the President the right to make certain transfers during the recess of Congress, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado would prevent those transfers from becoming effective.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, inasmuch as this particular part of the bill seems to be the joint resolution which I drew, and which was approved by the committee, and which is now on the calendar and has been for some time, I beg to say that I do not think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado affects the matter at all. The President is not authorized to abolish any agency created by statute, nor to transfer the functions of such agency, unless he shall make his report to Congress. I think that the reference to the transfer of the functions thereof would necessarily include any part of the functions of an agency created by statute. So I do not think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado would have the effect which the Senator from Connecticut seems to think it would

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, on page 79 there is a proviso that "in order to expedite the merging of certain ceed, without the application of this section," and so forth.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true with respect to certain specific agencies.

Mr. BINGHAM. Those agencies were created by statute. Mr. GEORGE. Those are named in the bill specifically, and, of course, they fall outside of the general rule which is laid down in section 406.

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado either restricts the President's power or is not necessary. The Senator from Georgia thinks it is not necessary and is covered; but, if it is not covered, then it restricts the power of the President to do that which he is authorized to do in the other parts of the bill.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if there is a provision in this bill, and, if not, whether we could not insert a provision in the bill in connection with the clause to which he refers, that when the President does abolish a bureau or an office or a job, the salary of the employee shall not be reduced without the employee's consent. [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I think, in view of the action of the Senate in some of its votes, the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma is well taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I propose an amendment on page 63, line 4. A word of explanation before I send it to the desk. It deals with the make-up of the Shipping Board.

The present law requires the board to be made up from particular localities. One commissioner is required to come from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean; and that provision, as the Senate will see, is retained in line 4, page 63. of this bill.

Some genius—it took genius—has held that the State of Pennsylvania is not a State touching the Atlantic Ocean, in spite of the fact that Philadelphia, its chief port, is probably, next to New York, the most important port from the standpoint of tonnage and general commerce upon the Atlantic Ocean fringe of the United States. Therefore, it seems only reasonable to insert at that point a provision which would make it clear that Pennsylvania is on the Atlantic Ocean. The commerce of the world knows it, if the Attorney General does not; but if we could put something in there that would make him know it, then everybody would be happy.

So I send this amendment to the desk and ask to have it

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment:

On page 63, in line 4, after the word "Ocean," insert "or a navigable river directly tributary thereto."

Mr. JONES. I myself have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, would that put Pennsylvania on the Gulf of Mexico? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it must be apparent to all of us that the so-called economy program has broken down.

As first presented it was a modest program, contemplating reductions aggregating $231,000,000. By the action of the Senate between $88,000,000 and $100,000,000 have been stricken from the bill, so that the probable amount which will actually be realized in reductions will be between $140,-000.000 and $150,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. A while ago I made the statement that it would possibly be $140,000,000. I overlooked the fact that in the bill there is a provision which reduces the annual leave of all employees to 15 days, by which a saving of $20,000,000 was claimed. By reason of the furlough plan now, furloughing everybody for 30 days, that must necessarily go out; so $20,000,000 additional will go out of the bill, reducing the saving to $120,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I accept the figures of the Senator from South Carolina. Then if the furlough plan goes out of the bill, as I believe it will, by reason of the refusal of the House of Representatives to accept it, there will be nothing of very great importance left in the measure.

We might just as well recognize the fact that this is no triumph. It is a signal failure—a disgusting failure in view of all the talk that has occurred regarding this subject. If the figures of the Senator from South Carolina are approximately correct—and I believe they are concurred in by the able chairman of the committee—

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the saving will be about $150,000,000. Of course that is only a guess.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Washington what will be the net amount of reduction if the furlough plan is rejected by the House?

Mr. JONES. The Senator means, if it is finally rejected in conference?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. JONES. That depends upon what we may accept in place of it in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the trouble about that is that there will be very little in conference. The only matters that will be in conference will be the $9,000,000 reduction contemplated by the House with respect to compensation—

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I have been consulting with some who seem to know something about conferences, and they appear to think that it may be possible for us to bring back to the Senate a proposition covering a different amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, under the well-known rule of the Senate, new provisions can not be reported by the conferees, except at the risk and peril of having the conference report sent back to the conference committee.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. But the question is, What will be done?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it true, may I ask the Senator from Washington, that the adoption of the furlough plan cuts out the leave item referred to by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so. I do not see why it does. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator from Washington say that we can adopt a bill furloughing every employee for 30 days without pay and then have a provision in it that will entitle them to 15 days with pay?

Mr. JONES. I am not going to commit myself now as to exactly what is within the limits of the bill as the Senate has agreed upon it. I am inclined to think that something of that kind can be done. We may not want to do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ar-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If either the House of Representatives or the conferees eliminate the so-called furlough plan, can any substitute that would reduce salaries be offered in lieu of that under the rules of the Senate or of the House governing the conduct of conferees?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Not unless it is in either the bill as it passed the House or the bill as it passes the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not in either.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then I think not.

Mr. BYRNES. It is between $9,000,000 and nothing.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. If the chairman of the committee will give me his attention, I want to call his attention to the item of $22,000,000 referred to by the Senator from South Carolina. That is found in section 213 of the bill, on page 59. It is a part of title 1, part 2. It embraces a saving of $22,000,000. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, which is a substitute for all of title 1, part 2, that item of $22,000,000 goes out.

Mr. JONES. No-

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think my good friend from New Mexico is mistaken. It is part of title 2, as he will find, if he will look at page 50, and is not a part of title 1. The sections which are under title 1 all begin with the numeral "1," as section 101, and those in title 2 begin with the numeral "2," as section 201.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it not only appears that we have done very little, but it is also apparent that we do not know what we have done. [Laughter.]

I know we laugh, Mr. President, but it is a deplorable failure. It is one that will reflect itself in great disappointment to the country. I am speaking now without regard to the relative merits of the amendments which have been presented. The fact is, that for many days the Senate has been dealing with the question of reducing Federal expenditures. It has come to a conclusion which, stated in its most favorable light, must be disappointing to every man here who believes in reductions. There are some Senators who frankly say that there is no occasion to cut Federal expenditures, that the United States can afford a four billion or a four billion and a half dollar a year Government, and that new sources of revenue can be found to meet whatever deficit may arise. The people of the country who expected a $300,000,000 reduction or a $500,000,000 reduction, when they realize that a reduction of about $100,000,000 or $120,-000,000, as it will finally come out, has been approved by the Senate, are going to feel that it is doubtful whether the result has justified the effort.

Mr. President, as a protest against this miserable failure to function with a fair degree of efficiency, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], but I have been released from that pair on this bill, and, therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman], and vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Steiwer], and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called), Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Fletcher

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings].

I also desire to announce that if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CUTTING. I have a pair for the evening with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], and vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan]. I find that I can transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott], and I do so and vote "nay." I do not know how the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] would vote on this question.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 43, as follows:

	YE	AS-23

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, earlier in the day the Senator from South Carolina entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which section 208 was stricken from the bill. Since then we have made some inquiry as to the amount spent by these various services in the shipment of automobiles privately owned to where officers were assigned to different stations. We find that the exact amount spent by the Army in the last fiscal year was $3,541.30, and I urged the elision of the amendment on the ground that it would not affect a material saving, which was the ground on which the Senate acted yesterday. That was entirely true as far as the Army was concerned, but we have learned this morning that the Navy spent on an item for the same service rendered to a smaller group of officers the astonishing sum of $307,000. That seems to come from the fact that the Navy ships all of the automobiles of officers in crates by commercial steamers and by railroad. The cost of crating is very high, and the cost of shipping of the crated automobiles in that manner is very high.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think it is fair to state the reason why the Navy ships automobiles by commercial ships is that they have not the transports the Army has and therefore they have to do it in that way.

Mr. REED. The Navy has some transports.

Mr. HALE. The Navy has two transports in all. Mr. REED. The Army has not very many.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Could not the Navy ship their automobiles by Army transports?

Mr. REED. They could and I think should.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course they should.

Mr. REED. I know the Army would be glad to render that service for its sister arm in the military defense.

Mr. President, I am making this statement because it is not fair of me to ask the Senate to sustain its action yesterday, which was made after I had stated that the saving was negligible. It is obvious that the saving is not merely negligible and that the section ought to stay in the bill. At the same time, in order that the service may be rendered to those officers if it is kept within reason, I have agreed with the Senator from South Carolina that I would join him in asking the restoration of the section with this proviso:

Provided, That not more than $5,000 in any fiscal year may be expended for such purposes by the War Department and not more than $5,000 in any fiscal year by the Navy Department.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I entered the motion to reconsider because the facts as developed show that the Navy is shipping automobiles at a cost of $200 each for crating and for freight. I hope the amendment will be adopted with the proviso suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I hope it will be acted upon at this time, because I fear if we wait until to-morrow, the same influences which have heretofore been at work might prevent us from saving $300,000.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I may say that I have talked with the Navy officers about the matter and I have no objection whatever to the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will this item finally succeed in balancing the Budget? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, line 16, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not more than $5,000 in any fiscal year may be expended for such purposes by the War Department and not more than $5,000 in any fiscal year by the Navy Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I inquire if that still permits the Army to send in Government transports, automobiles of officers ordered to the Philippines?

Mr. REED. Yes; it does.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 9, strike out "$60,000," and insert "$74,790."

Mr. NYE. That is the item with reference to the legislative reference service in the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment has already been agreed to, and that action would have to be reconsidered.

Mr. NYE. Then, I move to reconsider the action by which the amendment on page 31, line 9, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is too late with the motion.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, yesterday an amendment was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] to the provision found on page 57, section 211, and it was adopted. Thereafter the Senator from Florida [Mr. the moment, offered an amendment in lieu of subsection (b) on page 58. That amendment was voted down. Thereupon the Senator from Florida asked the Senate to disagree to the committee amendment striking out subsection (b).

I was somewhat active in opposition to that motion. On consideration and in view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania in section 211, I feel that some injustice would be worked to those officers who had retired as lieutenants and officers in the lower grades who had not advanced very far. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in agreeing to the committee amendment striking subsection (b) on page 58 may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator's thought is exactly correct, but I believe that he can accomplish the same result more simply and without helping persons who do not deserve to be helped. I am thinking of those in the Veterans' Bureau-if he would put in, on line 4, page 58,

This section shall not apply to any person whose combined retired pay and civilian pay amounts to less than $3,000.

That will then take care of those cases he has in mind and will not result in giving undue benefit to the highsalaried officers in the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may have unanimous consent to offer the amendment, I shall then offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should be glad to offer the amendment suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania because it does accomplish what I believe upon examination is substantial justice as applied to these officers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, at the end of line 4, insert the following:

This section shall not apply to any person whose combined retired pay and civilian pay amounts to less than $3,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I would like to add to that an amendment in the nature of a further proviso. reading as follows:

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to emergency officers retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States.

I am informed that there are 18 emergency officers retired for battle wounds, shock, and shell, many of whom are maimed and 5 of whom have been awarded the distinguished-service cross, who now work for the Government and who have been placed upon the emergency officers' retired list. In view of the small number and the fact that many of them are maimed and are in the class just suggested, I move that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia be further amended by adding the proviso which I send to the desk.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I will accept his amendment so that it can go to conference and then the matter can be ironed

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I would like to say just a word about that so our silence will not be construed as too much acquiescence.

Everyone pays honor to those officers who were wounded in action, but they do not deserve any more honor than their fellow officers who underwent great hardships beside them in the trenches in France, and many of whom incurred diseases that still cripple them. I think one is entitled to just as much honor and just as much consideration as the other. The wound received from the elements-frozen feet, for example, in the trenches—is just as much deserving of our sympathy as the wound caused by an enemy bullet.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, a few moments ago a viva voce vote was had on an amendment of mine to raise allow-

FLETCHER], who, I regret, is not present in the Chamber at | ances from $2 a day to $3 a day. I ask that that vote may be reconsidered in order that we may have a rising vote. I do not think the purpose of the amendment was understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote referred to by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that would simply give us another vote, and I must object,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. There is a motion pending by the Senator from California [Mr. Short-RIDGE] to reconsider the amendment on page 46, line 15.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the subject matter, I think, has been satisfactorily disposed of by the Senate, and therefore I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The question now is on the third reading of The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have another amendment which I should like to offer. I ask unanimous consent that it may be offered. My attention was distracted at the moment when proper opportunity came for offering it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Pennsylvania proposing an amendment which will be sent to the desk and read for the information of the Senate?

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, line 18, strike out the words "or noncivilian."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will not delay the Senate five minutes in explaining it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COUZENS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES. I yield. Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 822, the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I was standing here and addressed the Chair before the Senator from Pennsylvania addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington was recognized, and he yielded to the Senator from Pennsylvania. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I stated a short time ago to the Senate that I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929. I stated that I should make a motion that that be made the unfinished business of the Senate. If this measure is not considered before the appropriation bills are considered there will be no chance at this session for agricultural legislation. Therefore I object to the request of the Senator from Pennsyl-

EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a day or two ago notice was given that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the bill which has just been passed, a motion would be made to proceed to the consideration of the so-called emergency relief measure, which is on the calendar. Since that statement was made the committee has reported a provision relating to that subject carrying $300,-000,000 for advances to the States upon certain conditions. I should like to have that measure taken up as soon as practicable. Of course, there is necessity for the passage of the appropriation bills, and all other measures, but I am wondering if the Senator from Pennsylvania, in view of the objection that has been made, would yield to a request that upon the convening of the Senate to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4860, which was reported this morning from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and which carries $300,000,000 for emergency relief.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hesitate to do that. We can discuss that question after the Army appropriation bill shall have been taken up. I do not think it will take over an hour to pass the Army appropriation bill. Then there will be a sufficient opportunity for the bill to which the Senator refers. The naval bill will not be ready to be reported tomorrow.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I want to say that the Banking and Currency Committee did take final action on the bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], as the Senator from Arkansas has said, but it took action on merely one-third of the bill. The other two-thirds of that bill are still in the making and will probably be reported to the Senate to-morrow. My thought was that it might be better to get the whole subject of relief together before taking up any part of it. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The two-thirds to which the Senator from South Dakota refers are in a separate bill; we can not consider both of them at once; and the measure referred to by the Senator from Arkansas is considered more emergent than the measure carrying the other two-thirds.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to say, in connection with what the Senator from Arkansas has just said, that the Senator some days ago asked unanimous consent to have the bill taken up in substitution for another bill on the calendar. I think it was generally agreed that that should be done. I objected and asked the Senator from Arkansas to withhold the request until the Committee on Banking and Currency could pass upon that section of the original Wagner bill. The Senator from Arkansas did withhold the request for unanimous consent until the committee had brought in its report. The committee has reported, and I think, in justice to the Senator from Arkansas, that we should grant the consent he has asked now, because everybody was in agreement at the time, practically on both sides of the Chamber, except as to the details of the bill.

Mr. REED. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not think so.

Mr. COUZENS. I mean in giving the Senator from Arkansas consent to have the bill taken up.

Mr. REED. I do not think so at all. There were a number of Senators who would have objected if objection had not been made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania in just a moment.

Mr. REED. I merely want to say that I think we could pass both these bills to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me to reply to the statement he has just made, I do not think there was any objection indicated to the arrangement which I requested. The Senator from Indiana at first stated that he would probably object, but later, as I understood him, receded from that position; and the Senator from Michigan, as he has just stated, asked that the second request be deferred, as he has explained. I think it is entirely true that both these bills may be disposed of to-morrow, and I certainly do not wish to get in the way of an appropriation bill or of a farm relief bill, but this is an emergency matter.

Mr. REED. I know that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We all agree about that, and it is my thought that it probably would not require more than a couple of hours to dispose of the bill.

Mr. REED. Let me suggest this to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator be so kind as to yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I was going to ask the Senator from Oregon if the Army bill can now be taken up, to let us recess at once to 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. There is not anything controversial that I know of in the Army bill. The committee, as I recall, was unanimous in every decision. I feel confident that we will be out of the Senator's way by 12 o'clock to-morrow, so that he will accomplish his desire by letting us do that and we will have the advantage of getting over to the House a message as to passage of the Army appropriation bill, having the conferees appointed, and starting the conference to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not interrupt this agreeable conversation were it not for the fact that I did not want by my silence to give acquiescence to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania that if we take up the Army bill at 11 o'clock to-morrow we shall probably finish it by 12 o'clock. I doubt very much whether we shall be able to do that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma and Mr. McNARY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have on the table an amendment to the Army appropriation bill which proposes to limit post exchanges on Government reservations. At the present time such exchanges are developing department stores and selling everything; and unless the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, I shall be prepared to discuss it at some length, because I want the Senate and the country to know the extent to which these exchanges are being developed in competition with private industry. If the practice is to continue, I am wondering where people are going to make the money with which to pay the taxes that are being levied upon them. I merely want to suggest to the chairman of the committee that this matter is of some concern, and I propose to use some time in discussing it, unless I can get an agreement in advance that the amendment may go to conference.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I think it is fair to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow when the time comes to take a recess, but I think I should state, so long as we are considering a program, that to-morrow I shall ask to call up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill. I do not think that will take long, but I want it to be known to all Senators that that is my intention.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he move now to take a recess. We are not going to agree upon anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. I have moved to take up for consideration Order of Business 822, being House bill 11897.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not heard that motion. If the Senator made the motion, that is the pending motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understood I had the floor, and I had not yielded for a motion to be made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I made the motion before the Senator from Arkansas was recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, if that is true.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to have a recess taken with that motion pending.

Mr. McNARY. Very well, I move that the Senate-

DISTRESS OF COAL MINERS IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Frank Keeney, president of the West Virginia Mine Workers' Union.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., June 8, 1932.

Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE,

Senator Robert La Follette,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Six hundred starving coal miners, women and little children among them, are now encamped on Kanawha River at edge of Charleston, W. Va., where they were driven by State police on orders of Mayor Devan on June 4. They had gathered State house lawn to petition Governor Conley for relief. Conley refused to act, saying State can do nothing for its starving unemployed citizens. County funds exhausted. After three days and nights on the river bank these destitute people are now no nearer relief than when they came. Their numbers being increased hourly by other starving miners from the camps. We urge you to bring this disgraceful affair to the attention of Congress in behalf of national unemployment relief. unemployment relief.

FRANK KEENEY. President West Virginia Mine Workers' Union.

RADIO ADDRESS ON TAXATION BY HON. WESLEY L. JONES

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of an address delivered by the distinguished senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, over Station WRC night before last on the subject of taxation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Radio friends, our people to-day are interested as never before in their Government and its operations. They look to it for help and relief, and its legal limitations are forgotten in the emergency of a situation such as confronts our country now.

Nearly 40 years ago we went through times like these. Conditions were worse. Strikes and vious heavight bloods had an administration of the confidence of the c tions were worse. Strikes and riots brought bloodshed and death to our land while hunger and starvation stalked through the countryside. The lesson learned then served us well. Only sporadic spells of short duration have halted our progress as time has gone on.

The World War began. We were not involved in it. Our industry, however, was stimulated in every line. We were the granary of Europe, not only for war supplies but for the world's food supplies. Then we entered the war. Not only were we called upon for men, for more war supplies, but agriculture had to be intensified and to broaden its efforts to supply the food needed by the armies at the front. Prices were curtailed by law. Naturally, at home, people of every class and occupation prospered.

The war ended. Industrial activities continued to expand, develop, and grow. Agriculture stopped; demand for its products ceased. As other industries continued to expand, it kept on shrinking—proportionately as it shrunk, industry seemed to prosper. Speculation of every kind and character was rampant. Stocks and bonds soared. People became rich overnight. The making of money became a frenzy. One class of our people was delirious with gain, another class was in the depths of poverty and despair. This could not go on. The one must fall or the other rise. Industry slowed down. With its fall it has brought agriculture lower, and both must arrive at a common level. We ourselves must arrive at a common plane of living. I hope we have reached it now, and that hand in hand we will start upward on the road of prosperity.

We have learned many lessons that we will remember for years

We have learned many lessons that we will remember for years to come. One of them is to live within our income as individuals and as a nation, and one essential of that lesson is that, while income may decrease, debts and obligations do not grow less—they remain steady and even more difficult to meet.

In our day of great prosperity we were reckless in our expenditures, not that we wasted our money, although that criticism is made time and again, but we took upon ourselves obligations that could have been delayed and others that were not absolutely necessary. The cry "reduce taxes" can not be met now as many would have us meet it without repudiating our obligations or taking action that would cause more harm and loss than it would do good.

The direct burden of taxes from which our people are suffering

The direct burden of taxes from which our people are suffering comes from city, county, and State taxes with which Congress has nothing directly to do. We should consider them, however, in taking on obligations by the National Government. In the heyday of prosperity we are apt to forget that the reckoning is bound to come and that it may come when we are not prepared, when the burden will be heavy.

My concern to-night is especially with the national expenditures and obligations. We are a peaceful people, and yet our national burdens from which we suffer come largely from war. Sixty-five or seventy per cent of our taxes are a direct result of war or preparation for war. When war is over its burdens do not cease—in days of adversity like these they do not lessen. If we were careless in our day of prosperity in fixing those burdens, we may correct them now in time of adversity, and no one, I am sure, will more cheerfully aid in correcting them than the soldiers themselves. We can not, however, bring about reductions to any great extent. We must not overlook, either, the fact that those who bore the brunt of the battle and who endured its privations must continue to aid in carrying its burdens. They are among our best citizens—they are more and more taking on the duties of the State and its responsibilities.

Our people are complaining at the increased cost of government. There is greatly increased cost. Why? Is it through waste or extravagance? If so, it must be stopped at any cost. Let us see:

In the present fiscal year we are appropriating $945.438.878 for many years to come.

Let us see:

In the present fiscal year we are appropriating $945,438,878 for the Veterans' Administration. A sum even larger, $990,410,600, for sinking-fund requirements and interest on the public debt must be provided. These two amounts, representing practically $2,000,000,000, are a direct outgrowth of the World War, which has been one of the main factors in our increased appropriations and which will remain a chief reason for our large appropriations for many years to come many years to come.

One of the most necessary and needed appropriations we have is for the Postal Service. It is the heart of our very existence—it reaches the hearthstone of every citizen, whether rich or poor, In 1913 this service cost us $273,054,249; in 1932, $841,483,777, or three times as much. What has made this increase? Not waste or extravagance, but the needs and welfare of our people. Their wants have increased, their needs have multiplied. The service wants have increased, their needs have multiplied. The service has been expanded, and with it have come increased conveniences for our citizenry. Would you have this development stopped?

Rural delivery of mail is another service the cost of which has mounted steadily. In 1913 we spent for it $47,000,000, while this fiscal year we are spending $107,550,000. Would our people be willing to curtail this service? I think not.

Again, in 1913 we spent for public buildings $10,057,432. Now we have a program upon which we are spending $87,924,450 annually. In normal times that would be considered good policy. Now, there is a difference of opinion. This program, of course, gives employment to labor of various kinds, but the money expended must be raised by taxes on the people. Another fact, too, is overlooked—the site for the building is taken off the tax roll forever. Local taxes are increased from year to year. This may pended must be raised by taxes on the people. Another fact, too, is overlooked—the site for the building is taken off the tax roll forever. Local taxes are increased from year to year. This may be why we see in the press from time to time that cities and towns are beginning to ask that appropriations heretofore made for public buildings be not expended. Expenditures for productive works may well be made, but is it wise during these times to spend the people's money for public works that are not only unproductive, but deprive the community of some revenue to defray its own expenses? Here we might make some savings for the time being if the people would look with favor upon it.

I will mention one other service that has greatly expanded. In 1913 we spent $525,000 for Federal-highway work, while now we are following a regular program that calls for an annual expenditure of $125,000,000. That is wise policy, but I can not help but think more real good would be done if we used this money, or a substantial part of it, for a few years in cooperation with counties or the States in making better the local or feeder roads. This would help communities to get their products to market rather than simply aid outside people to pass through. This kind of road program would help the farmers to and from market in addition to providing good post roads, which are badly needed, especially in some sections of our country.

These are a few examples that show why our appropriations have increased from $1,021,349,990 in 1913 to $4,674,073,917 in 1932. They may indicate where or how some reductions can be made if the people are willing—they indicate, too, how difficult it will be to make substantial reductions. These difficulties are many and exceedingly hard to overcome. The ambition of our people is, justly, great. Their cumulative demands, through their representatives, are tremendous. In a forward-looking country such as ours it is easier to accede to this pressure than to curtail Federal activities by cutting the total appropriations.

Do away with bureaus, commissions, and other governmental Do away with bureaus, commissions, and other governmental bodies, we are told. Probably we can dispense with some. Howmany, and what are they? What will become of their activities? Will they be abandoned? If not, who will perform their functions? These are questions that are never answered. We are effecting one or two changes along these lines by our economy bill, but we are told it will bring little, if any, economy. We are going to give the President authority to abolish some, consolidate some, and submit plans to Congress for other reorganization. We will have to wait and see what economies are effected under that authority. We will hope for many.

We will hope for many.

I need not say that we have to do many things we do not like to do. That comes to all of us. I do not want to cut any like to do. That comes to all of us. I do not want to cut any one's wages. We have to do it, however, in one way or another, but we are going to make it as easy and for as short a time as possible. I earnestly hope it will not need to be extended.

Let me tell you how carefully our appropriation bills are studied so that no unnecessary or undesirable item may be included. The executive departments and independent governmental establishments first present their needs to the Bureau of the Budget. Hearings are held there and every demand scrupulously examined with a view to excluding those estimates lacking in merit. These estimates are submitted to the President. This year I understand he made an arbitrary cut of 5 per cent. The Budget Office. he made an arbitrary cut of 5 per cent. The Budget Office, through the President, then sends these estimates to Congress for its consideration. The Appropriations Committee of the House for its consideration. The Appropriations Committee of the House holds extensive hearings on each bill, examining each item, and reducing or striking out sums as it deems wise. This year it has followed the rule of increasing no item above the Budget estimate. The bill then undergoes the scrutiny of the whole committee, is reported to the House, and is considered item by item before passage. After passing the House, the bill goes through the same process in the Senate although not in so much data! What additions or charges are made there are to conformation. through the same process in the Senate although not in so much detail. What additions or changes are made there go to conference and are most carefully studied and worked out by the representatives of the two Houses. This year the bills, thus far, have been cut in the Senate arbitrarily 10 per cent in the aggregate below the House figures, and these cuts are generally accepted. Is it possible to use more care? As a matter of fact, I am afraid we have cut too deep but these are times that require extreme economy.

I want to say to our people we are making an earnest effort to economize. I have never known a more determined or more honest attempt to reduce appropriations than has been put forth honest attempt to reduce appropriations than has been put forth during the first session of the Seventy-second Congress. We know the conditions throughout the country. We appreciate the difficulties our people face. We want to help all we can.

I am not complaining, nor am I scolding, but when I get a strong letter from a constituent urging a proposition and then, in the same mail, an equally strong letter from a second constituent earnestly opposing the identical proposition, what am I to do? Let me say that this is no uncommon thing. It often occurs with matters affecting economy.

We do the best we can. We want our Government run as economically as possible, especially now, and we are going to so run it. I trust that when our people and our country are on the road of prosperity as they are going to be, the lessons of the past will not be forgotten and that the future may escape the suffering and hardships we have endured and are enduring now.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from W. A. McCartney, president of the Gate City Building and Loan Association, of Texarkana; Southern Building and Loan Association, by Charles A. Gordon, secretary, of Pine Bluff; D. T. Hargraves, mayor of Helena; Helena Real Estate Board, by J. B. Lambert, secretary; the Helena World; and the Guaranty Loan & Trust Co.; all of Helena, in the State of Arkansas, praying for the prompt passage of the home-loan bank bill, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a telegram from D. M. Burford, of Pine Bluff, Ark., relative to section 5d of the bill (S. 4822) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to authorize loans for the purpose of providing additional employment through the construction of economically sound projects, and for other purposes, authorizing and directing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to allocate and make available to the Federal Farm Board sums not exceeding in the aggregate $50,000,000, to enable that board to make additional loans to cooperative associations and stabilization corporations, etc., and protesting against the making of such appropriations and requesting a full investigation thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 9, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 8, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We look again to Thee, Heavenly Father, for light and guidance; show us Thyself. What is entire justice, entire fidelity, and entire beneficence? O let us receive a broad conception of duty and government. Our deep desire is that there may be no continuance of uncertainty, no unrest, and no temptation. On every side may there be harmonious wisdom, and may we patiently wait and work for its consummation. We would that our souls were caught up into the knowledge and beauty of the heart of the great Teacherled by His truth and have His love pulsating in our breasts. Bring it to pass, Father in Heaven. Then it will be bright above, bright beneath, and bright through the years to come. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, and I trust there will be no objection to it, that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough] may have permission to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough] have permission to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object to this, but I shall object to any further request of this kind after that.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like very much to have some one tell us what the program is going to be for the afternoon, after this address.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the program is. He understood that the Committee on Labor has the call. Just how long it is going to take that committee to finish the Chair does not know. The next committee on call as the Chair understands is the Committee on Patents. If it is called, and it has business, the Chair presumes that would be in order for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the majority leader to say last night that the Committee on Patents was not to take up anything to-day.

Mr. RAINEY. I did state that, but they want to take something up. They are entitled to it under the rules, unless the House determines otherwise.

Mr. SNELL. Then they are going to take it up, and it comes in immediately after the Labor Committee?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And that will not take very long, and I presume we may depend upon that for the remainder of the

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader tell us what the Committee on Patents is going to take up? Mr. RAINEY. I do not know. The gentleman will have to ask the Committee on Patents that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire how many bills the Committee on Labor plans to call up?

Mr. CONNERY. Two bills, the Senate bill 3847, the Metcalf-Connery bill, and the Black back-to-the-farms bill. Mr. UNDERHILL. And may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Labor if there will be opportunity during the consideration of those two bills for Mr. Goldsborough to get time from the chairman, and address the House in that way?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think so. Mr. STAFFORD. It is much better the other way, because under the rules of the House on Calendar Wednesday the discussion must be confined to the bill, whereas Mr. Goldsborough's discussion is not upon these bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] may address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I think if there is no other program, this better be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from North Carolina is trying to get recognition to make an announcement that we are all very much interested in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from North Carolina for two minutes to make a statement. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama the Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pow] for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOME LOAN BANK BILL

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I simply seek this opportunity to announce that on Friday next I shall call up the rule providing for the consideration of the so-called administration home loan bank bill. [Applause.] The hearings which have been had before the Committee on Rules were concluded only vesterday.

THE GOLDSBOROUGH STABILIZATION BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] may have 30 minutes to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on May 2 the House of Representatives passed H. R. 11499, known as the Goldsborough stabilization bill, a bill providing that the general wholesale commodity price level should be raised to that existing between 1921 and 1929 and afterward maintained at that point. The duty of carrying out that policy was placed on the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury. As will be remembered, the bill passed the House by a vote of 289 to 60. A few days ago the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency adopted an amendment to that bill, the amendment being known as the Glass amendment, it having been introduced by the distinguished Senator from Virginia, Senator Glass. Up until this time no report has been filed covering the Glass amendment. Therefore it is impossible for me to discuss from the standpoint of the report just what the theory is upon which the Senate committee proceeded when it adopted that amendment.

However, I can say, quoting from the New York Times, the New York Herald Tribune, the Baltimore Sun, the United States Daily, the Philadelphia Ledger, and the Philadelphia Record, that after the meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency, at which this amendment was adopted, Senator GLASS-I am reading from the New York Times of June

Mr. Glass said that he did not believe his or any other legislative device was necessary for such an end at this time—

That is, inflation-

but that he had offered the plan in order to stop the Goldsborough bill, which he opposes.

Quoting again from Senator GLASS:

I dissent from the view that there is any need of artificial inflation of the credits or currency of the country, but nevertheless if there is to be any more inflation it should be brought about by a simple method which everybody may understand and not by the roundabout process which is being vainly tried by the Federal reserve authorities. Again he said.

I distinctly disavow the belief that any of these legislative devices is necessary at this time. I simply offered the bill in question as a substitute for the Goldsborough bill, which I regard with utmost aversion.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia who offered this amendment, and who evidently feels that he has no confidence in his own legislative proposal, did not attend any of the hearings, which took place before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Neither did he appear at the hearings before the House Committee on Banking and Cur-

In my limited time, and it is very limited for the ground I feel it necessary to cover, I shall not read his amendment, but I will be very careful to tell you exactly what it means. His amendment means that if it becomes law it would be possible for national banks to issue nearly $1,000,000,000 in currency, on the basis of Government bonds owned by them. There are plenty of 4 per cent Government bonds in the market. The 2 per cent consols have all been used up. If this currency should be issued, it would be issued after the banks had purchased 4 per cent bonds—unless they already hold them—and put them up as collateral for the currency.

It costs about 11/2 per cent to issue this member-bank currency, so that it would cost the people of the United States about $40,000,000, assuming that this currency was all issued. About $25,000,000 would go principally to the large national banks which would issue the currency. About $15,000,000, 1½ per cent, would be taken up in the cost of the issue.

Now, that is the proposal of the Senate committee, and that is all there is in the proposal. It does not undertake to say how much of this currency shall be issued. It does not undertake to say what economic end shall be reached by the issue. It does not undertake to say that any price level or any position of business shall be achieved before there is a cessation of the issuing of this currency, and it does not undertake in any way to indicate what will be the effect of

So I think the distinguished Senator from Virginia is thoroughly justified in saying he has not any confidence in his own proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to digress from this issue, but it seems to me to be necessary in order to make the issue clear and plain. About two weeks ago the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. REED), stated that what this country needs is a Mussolini. A few days ago, in an address to the Senate of the United States, in speaking of the Congress, the President said:

In your hands at this moment is the answer to the question whether democracy has the capacity to act speedily enough to save itself in an emergency.

On last Sunday in an address to the graduating class at Notre Dame University, Mr. Owen D. Young made this statement:

It is quite explainable, therefore, that a government of powers widely distributed into carefully segregated and insulated compartments should function under normal conditions and should fail us altogether when the avalanche comes on. It may be that we shall have to consider some method of putting extraordinary powers in the hands of the President in times like this.

That article is headed "Young Would Give President Power to Combat Crisis."

Within the last week, I am sure you have received, as I have received, numerous letters from individuals requesting a support of the President. So that there seems to me a calculated design to discredit the American Congress, and to minimize its efforts in this great emergency.

Now, leading up to the passage of the Goldsborough bill, I want to go over some of the things which the American Congress has done.

First we pass the farm loan act, an administration measure.

Second, we passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, an administration measure.

Third, we passed the Glass-Steagall Act, an administration measure, but a measure, my friends, which did not emanate from the executive branch of this Government, but emanated from the House of Representatives.

On January 19 I introduced in the American Congress a bill, H. R. 8026. I sent a copy of that bill, with a covering letter, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, to every member of the Federal Reserve Board, and to the Comptroller of the Currency. That bill included, in section 1, what, in substance, is known now as the Goldsborough bill, and in sections 2 and 3 it contained the real substance of the Glass-Steagall bill.

On the 11th of February, 23 days after this bill was sent to the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the other officials whom I have mentioned, the Glass-Steagall bill was introduced in the House and in the Senate, and not until the day after, on the 12th of February, more than three weeks after I had written to the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, did he acknowledge the receipt of my letter in which I inclosed to him this bill.

I had no idea of ever mentioning this fact, although I knew I had written him a personal letter and I was certain he had received it. However, when the time comes that the American Congress is discredited in favor of the executive branch of the Government, I think it is time for the American Congress to show just where these legislative suggestions of the administration originated. [Applause.]

Now, then, what was done with the Glass-Steagall bill after it was passed? Was it utilized by the executive branch of the Government? Was anything done to carry out its genius and evident purpose? For seven weeks the Federal reserve system bought $25,000,000 of bonds a week, and as fast as rediscounted notes were paid off they retired Federal reserve notes. So the net result was absolutely nothing.

Then what happened? Hearings were about to be held upon the stabilization bill in the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it began to appear that the bill was going to be considered seriously by the American Congress. Then, and not until then, did the Federal reserve system, acting under the direction of the administration, begin to buy bonds to any appreciable extent. The records of the Federal Reserve Board will show the exact date when these accelerated purchases began.

Let us consider the evidence before the subcommittee. When I questioned Governor Harrison of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York as to when they began to really utilize the Glass-Steagall bill he said: "Day before yesterday"; that is only two days before he and Governor Meyer appeared before the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. For a very brief question only.
Mr. McFADDEN. I was interested in the gentleman's statement that the administration directed the action of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I presume it did.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman from Maryland be a little more specific and say what branch of the administration directed the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that as far as I am able to ascertain the Federal Reserve Board's activities have been in very close relationship to the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury and after consultation with the President of the United States.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I find that some of the larger banks in the country are buying up Government bonds, and in turn selling them to the Federal reserve system at some profit. So, they are flying in the face of the theory advanced by the Federal Reserve Board that they should make themselves more liquid and thereby be enabled to lend more money to commercial endeavors, because instead of selling their bonds, they are buying them from the small banks and in turn selling them to the Federal Reserve Board. Has the gentleman any information on this?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I can not go into a detail of that kind. It is perfectly natural that if banks know the Federal Reserve Board is in the market and the banks think they can make a profit on bonds they will buy them, and then sell them to the Federal reserve system. That is unavoidable. The point, however, is that every effort has been made by the American Congress to induce the executive branch of the Government to use the tools it has readily at hand in order to stop the depression, and that these tools have not been effectively used in spite of the fact we have available, if necessary, without reducing our gold reserves, the power to issue some four billions of dollars of Federal reserve notes, and by doing away with our reserves, as the Federal reserve system has the right to do, about nine billions of dollars worth of Federal reserve notes.

The Federal Reserve Board has up to this time purchased only some $700,000,000 worth of bonds which, obviously, can not take care of a situation where over $1,200,000,000 has been hoarded. There has never been enough bonds bought even to replace money hoarded.

There has been absolutely no courage shown in the policy of the Federal Reserve Board. There has been no imagination developed. There has been no recognition of the fact that unless this condition of depression is stopped by bold steps that the country has got to go through a condition of bankruptcy. None of this has been visualized by the Federal Reserve System, and so when we come to the stabilization bill passed in the House of Representatives on May 2, not a piece of mushroom legislation, not a piece of legislation conceived in an emergency and ill considered, but legislation the fundamental principles of which have been studied in the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives for 11 years, and upon which speech after speech has been made in this body for the information of its Members, a measure of direction to the Federal reserve system as to how to use their vast resources, the administration came out in advance and said that if the Senate passed that bill and it was put up to the Executive he would veto it.

Then what did the House of Representatives do? The House of Representatives passed the Steagall bank guaranty bill. This great popular body which springs from the soil and represents the people themselves can not do any thing more than pass legislation which would immediately relieve the great masses of the people from their suffering condition. The House can not force the support of the Executive.

So, the question at this time, Mr. Speaker, is not the fault of the legislative branch of the Government, but whether the executive branch has utterly failed to visualize the needs of the people in this great emergency.

Now, the statement may be made that whatever the value or lack of value of the Glass amendment, it was inserted by a Democrat.

I will call your attention, my colleagues, to the fact that the Democratic Party does not control the Senate, and I call your attention to the further fact, which is a fact, that if this stabilization legislation had the support of the administration it would pass the Senate without five dissenting votes, and I know exactly whereof I speak.

The National City Bank's bulletin, the bulletin of the Chase National Bank, and every piece of economic literature I have seen in the last month states that we must have an expansion of the currency. The last thing I saw was in the Washington Herald of June 8, this morning:

Bankers now agree to need for arresting liquidation.

Great God: some of the rest of us have known it for a year and a half and now the bankers are reaching that conclusion. The great banking houses have reached that conclusion. Why? In order to save the country, in order to protect the people, in order to give work to the great masses who are suffering for something to eat and a place to sleep? No. It is because they know that unless liquidation is arrested the obligations due them can not be paid, and not until they reach that conclusion do they suggest an arresting of liquidation.

Mr. Speaker, it has been impossible for me, in the very serious, prolonged, and trying study I have made of this matter, to disassociate the action of the great bankers of this country from the point of view of the executive branch of this Government.

As far as I know there are only two economists worthy of any consideration whatever who do not think that this policy is feasible and that it would produce the desired results. One of them is Doctor Anderson, the special pleader of the Chase National Bank in New York, and the other one is the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Some 10 days ago the distinguished Senator from Virginia stated on the floor of the Senate that he would not be willing to give the power provided in this bill to any seven men that God ever made. Does not the Senator from Virginia know that the Federal reserve system is now exercising these vast powers in an absolutely uncontrolled manner, and does he not know that this legislation would be a limitation upon their powers and their discretion? Does he not know this would be a direction to them which would prevent them from exercising their own judgment instead of the people's judgment as to how the people's money should be employed for the people's welfare? Is it possible that the distinguished Senator from Virginia is so enamored of the mechanics of the Federal reserve act that he has ceased altogether to visualize its possibilities for the welfare of the people? During the present Congress, since we met last fall, they have had in the Senate what they call the Glass bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This Glass Bill provides for certain changes in the administration of the Federal reserve act, including an extension to the banks of the privilege of branch banking, a controversial question which has no relation whatever to the great emergency that is facing the American people. Yet all winter the distinguished Senator has been engaged in deliberating a measure of that kind.

Now then, my colleagues on the Democratic side, I want to take this opportunity to make a suggestion which, of course. I do not know that you will approve. This great body, irrespective of party, passed this stabilization legislation. It is true that the measure was made a part of the House Democratic program for legislative action, but it is also true that some of the most distinguished Representatives on the Republican side supported the legislation. So up to date, whatever merit the idea of stabilizing the people's medium of exchange may have, redounds to the credit of both parties in this House. But, gentlemen, let me make this suggestion to you: The question as to how the production of the people gets out of the hands of those who produce the wealth of the country and into the hands of the great bankers is one with which the minds of the people of this country is now filled. It is the solution of that question-of how the people's money shall be so treated as to redound to the interest of all the people-that is the crying issue of the day and, in my judgment, if the great Democratic Party should follow the lead of the House of Representatives and make stable money a principal plank in its platform-if those who speak for the party would take as their textbook the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate and the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, if they would go before the country on this issue the solution of which will enable producers to produce so that the 8,000,000 people now walking the streets can obtain employment-if that sort of legislation, which involves human justice, were made a serious part of the Democratic platform and carried on to the hustings in every district in the United States, this great party of the people would undoubtedly, in my judgment, come back into power. [Applause.]

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] requested me to ask that he may have consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the War Department bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, as reported to the House of Representatives on the 5th of May, 1932, the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1933 (H. R. 11897) provided for appropriations totaling $386,793,861. This sum represented a reduction under the President's Budget of $24,569,901.

As passed by the House of Representatives on May 19, 1932, the bill carried $392,586,146, amendments adopted in the House, contrary to the recommendations of its Committee on Appropriations, having added to the bill a total of $5.792,285.

This addition involves three propositions, all pertaining to the so-called civil components of the Army, and I have been deluged with inquiries as to the considerations which influenced the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives to advocate reductions in such activities. The report on the bill and explanatory statements made when the bill was under consideration, appearing in the Congressional Record, express the committee's position, but I realize the inconvenience of turning to many places to assemble the complete picture, and I therefore resort to this method of presenting the facts to those who may be interested.

ORGANIZED RESERVES

For the expenses of the Officers' Reserve Corps the Budget included $6,354,348. The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives proposed to reduce this amount by $2,109,768.

The Budget figure contemplated active-duty training for 14 days for 20,000 reserve officers and active-duty training for a longer period for 722 officers. The national defense act—section 37a—authorizes active-duty training "to the extent provided for from time to time by appropriations for this specific purpose."

The proposal of the Committee on Appropriations was simply this: Among the 20,000 reserve officers slated for 14-day training are 1,000 Air Corps reserve officers. The committee provided, in accordance with the Budget, for the training of these 1,000 Air Corps officers, and, as to the other 19,000, it allowed the estimated amount to send them to training camps, including all incidental expenses, but provided that if they should elect to go—and it is a matter of election—they should go without pay but be given an allowance of $1 per diem for subsistence. This action permitted the subtraction of $2,109,768 from the Budget estimate, justified, the committee maintained, by our economic situation.

Under the committee's proposition those willing to go to camp would have been put to no expense. They would have been paid or furnished their travel and they would have been reimbursed for their subsistence while at camp. They merely would have been required to forego at this time compensation which, no doubt, in a majority of cases, would have been supplemental to their regular compensation, usually continued in cases of military leave.

What great harm would result if any or all of the 19,000 officers refused to go to the 14-day camps without pay? They are all men who have had previous military training or training in the branches to which assigned. Many served during the World War, others have had service in the Regular Establishment, while others are products of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the civilian military training camps. A very large majority of all, I dare say, are identified with the business houses and industrial concerns that have been besieging this Congress to economize—to balance the Budget.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

Section 40 of the national defense act authorized the President to establish and maintain in civil educational institutions a Reserve Officers' Training Corps as a feeder of officer material to the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Under the law, besides supplying uniforms in kind or commutation therefor and military instructors and equipment, students identified with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in their junior and senior years are paid 30 cents per diem, and ex-juniors and ex-seniors, who are required to go to camp for 42 days following their junior and senior years as a condition precedent to a commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps, are paid their transportation expenses to and from camp, are furnished subsistence in kind, and are compensated at the rate of 70 cents per diem. To send 7,200 of these students to camp would cost the Government $1,080,773.

For all expenses of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps the Budget included $4,079,484. The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives proposed to reduce this amount by $1,080,773, or the cost of the camp

As a measure of economy, the House committee concluded that these camps should be suspended for one year without impairing the right of a graduate to a commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps. It did not propose to disturb in any way, shape, or form the school training of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps students. The House committee provided the money for uniforms, the money for instructors and equipment, and the money for paying 30 cents per diem to students during the last two years of their college courses.

The boys who graduate this month have been to one camp. The boys who finish their third year this month will have an opportunity to go to camp at the close of their senior year, and from this very date until that time, under the bill as submitted to the House, they would continue to draw 30 cents a day from the Government.

It was the thought of the House committee that $1,080,-773 could be saved by suspending these camps for one year for college students who have had from three to four years' instruction in military tactics.

CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

The third economy proposed by the House Committee on Appropriations, which the House refused to adopt, relates to the least important of all the civil components, and yet the saving proposed was $2,603,624.

For the citizens' military training camps the Budget included $2,603,624, and the House committee omitted the entire amount, proposing that the entire activity be suspended as an economy measure for one year.

Section 47d of the national defense act, as amended, provides in part as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, schools or camps for the mili-tary instruction and training, with a view to their appointment as reserve officers or noncommissioned officers, of such warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilians as may be selected upon their own application. * * * The Secretary of War is authorized application. * * * The Secretary of War is authorized her to prescribe the courses of theoretical and practical infurther to prescribe the courses of theoretical and practical instruction to be pursued by persons attending the camps authorized by this section; to fix the periods during which such camps shall be maintained; to prescribe rules and regulations for the government thereof; and to employ thereat officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Regular Army in such numbers and upon such duties as he may designate."

In consequence of the foregoing, camps are maintained quite generally throughout the country for a period of 30 days without any expense to the trainees, including transportation to and from the camps.

the camps.

The Budget estimate for this activity for 1933 contemplates the training of 37,500 boys.

I shall repeat here from my speech in the House on May 10, 1932:

With regard to this activity I asked General Bridges—and you will find it in the hearings—if any serious harm would be done the Government if this activity should be suspended for one year, and he said, "No; not for one or two years"; and he is in charge

It seems to me his opinion ought to be worth something. eral Summerall in his last report, before he left as Chief of Staff, said that in his judgment about the only worth-while good that the Government got out of the citizens' military training camps is the opportunity that the camps afforded the Army officers in charge to contact with the civilian population.

There is no disposition on the part of the committee to discontinue this work indefinitely, but we do feel that this year it ought to be suspended. If times get to provide for its resumption. get better, I assume we will be asked

Now, let us see about the purpose of this component. This particular activity has been going on about 11 years, and the purpose is, according to the national defense act, to make officers for the Reserve Corps.

"During the 11 years we have trained 223,198 of these boys. Only 10,562 have taken the 4-year course—that is, four training

"Now, with regard to those who did complete the course and went into the reserve, how many officers did we get?—1,441. And, listen, we would not have gotten the 1,441 had we not stopped giving the boys an examination at the end of the four years, giving the boys an examination at the end of the four years, because they could not stand the examination. So we adopted a new method and told the Army officers to pick out the likely boys and say, 'Son, you can go into the reserves.' If we had not done that, you would not have got the 1,441. During that particular length of time we spent on that activity $24,022,000. That means that every officer that we have gotten out of it has cost the Government, individually, $16,670, and if we add to that the cost of the Army officers and the civilian and enlisted men that we have used in the training of these it will increase that amount we have used in the training of these, it will increase that amount to $27,000 plus per officer. In other words, we can train a boy to $27,000 plus per officer. In other words, we can train a boy at West Point or Annapolis for about half of the cost to train one in this activity. In view of that fact, at this particular time I think we can forego this activity for at least one year."

The question before the House was whether or not $2,603.624 would be saved on this activity alone, or, contrary to the judgment of military men, to spend that amount to send 37,500 boys, mostly in their teens, to camp for 30 days, not primarily to train them as soldiers but to improve them physically and to instruct them in citizenship. I regret to say that the House chose to spend the money, which, in my judgment, might better be expended in helping the physical condition of those who are hungry and in raising the confidence of those whose faith in their Government has been shaken through long deprivation. But precious few of the sons of these unfortunates will be in the citizens' military training camps.

REDUCTION IN THE NUMBER OF REGULAR ARMY OFFICERS

A substantial economy recommended by the House Committee on Appropriations, in which the House concurred, relates to the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army. The House committee proposed to place on the retired list 2,000 of the 12,000 officers of the Regular Army, permitting of an immediate saving of $3,784,414. The method of removal was changed in the House. That is, instead of retiring officers most advanced in age, as the committee had recommended, the House agreed to their retirement upon the basis of efficiency.

As the War Department appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate on June 7, 1932, strikes out the proposal of the House to reduce the number of commissioned officers on the active list, for the information and assistance of those in sympathy with the action proposed by the House I shall quote from the House committee's report on the bill and from my speech in the House on May 10, 1932, with respect to this proposition:

[From report]

This step is proposed in the interest of economy and efficiency. This step is proposed in the interest of economy and efficiency. As an economy measure, the saving is not all reflected in the amount the committee has deducted. There is an indeterminate amount realizable in travel, in clerical services, in office space and office expenses, in rental allowances by releasing quarters, possibly some freeling of enlisted men, administrative overhead, and probably in other directions. These savings will continue to be reflected in future years, augmented by between $16,000,000 and $17,000,000 that would need to be provided in the future on the basis of the minimum requirements of construction based on the War Department study of the housing program as of May 15, 1930 (hearings, pp. 460–461), and augmented by the large saving that would accrue from relieving to the extent proposed the stagnation in promotion that now confronts the Army. in promotion that now confronts the Army.

As to the efficiency side of the proposal: The commissioned strength of the Regular Army is divided between what are termed promotion list and nonpromotion list branches. The strength of the former, including major generals, brigadier generals, and colonels of the line, is fixed by law at 10,930, and of the latter at 1392. The committee's action applies ways layed to the former 1.392. The committee's action applies very largely to the former. The nonpromotion-list branch is composed of doctors, dentists, veterinarians, and chaplains. As to the promotion-list group, promotions to the grades from first lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, are made as vacancies occur, by seniority in the order in which officers are arranged on a single promotion list. The appointment to this list and the precedence given to a large group of World War officers (roundly 5,000) not only militates against those later commissioned but a large number of such officers themselves may never expect to attain a rank above major. Quoting from the report of the interdepartmental pay-personnel board (S. Doc. 259, 71st Cong., 3d sess.), the Army representative on which was Brig. Gen. G. S. Simonds, United States Army, at that time chief of the war plans division, War Department, General Staff:

"These World War officers constitute the outstanding abnormality in the promotion list. Although they comprise nearly one-half of the promotion-list strength, they vary by less than 18 months in date of entry into the Federal service and are largely of the same age. Under normal conditions, the procurement of so large a number of commissioned officers would be spread over a large a number of commissioned officers would be spread over a period of 15 to 20 years and they would be uniformly graded among themselves according to age and length of service. The problem presented by the presence of this group on the promotion list is the outstanding obstacle to the establishment of a satisfactory promotion system which will conserve the interests of the Government and the individual officer."

promotion system which will conserve the interests of the Government and the individual officer."

Quoting further from such report:

"* * On the World War group the impending conditions will have a very damaging effect. The bottom of the group will not become majors until about 1950, after more than 30 years of service in company grades, with the inevitable loss of initiative which will result from such stagnation. Due to the relatively large number of World War officers, the grades from captains to lieutenant colonel, inclusive, will become greatly overaged during the next 25 years. Furthermore, this group will practically fill the field grades from 1950 onward, at which time those at the top will be colonels, eligible for selection as general officers, while those at the bottom, though of practically the same age and length of service, will be approaching retirement far down among the majors. Such inequality of opportunity, due to a difference of a few months in date of entry into the Federal service, can not fail to have a disastrous effect upon morale. Since the officers of the postwar group are younger than those who precede them on the promotion list, they will eventually reach the top of the list by the operation of the provision for the compulsory retirement of their predecessors at 64 years of age. They will, however, spend unreasonably short periods in some grades and will become colonels with only a short time to serve and lacking the well-rounded training that would result from a properly distributed career.

"* * The problem which it (postwar group) presents at this time is that of securing such a rate of promotion for the officers who compose it that they will not deteriorate from injurious stagnation in lower grades and later be advanced suddenly in rank, shortly before retirement, to positions of responsibility for which they have received no adequate training.

"To summarize the future working of the present personnel system in the matter of promotion, it can be said that it fails utterly, exc pre-war group, to provide the reasonable and regular progression through the various grades that is so essential to the maintenance of morale and professional enthusiasm. This condition has a direct influence on the efficiency with which the Regular Army can be expected to fulfill its mission in national defense. In any emergency which calls for even partial mobilization the commissioned officers of the Regular Establishment will be called upon to assume greatly enlarged responsibilities. If stagnation has held them for unduly long periods in the lower grades, they will have been denied the opportunity for a properly rounded training that will fit them for the discharge of these responsibilities.

"The conditions just described will be accompanied by a constantly increasing cost of commissioned personnel which will be stantly increasing cost of commissioned personnel which will be incurred by the Government with none of the compensating adincurred by the Government with none of the compensating advantages that would be derived from a well-regulated system of promotion. Some officers in the lower grades, notably that of captain, who at present count for pay purposes various kinds of service other than active Federal commissioned service, are receiving compensation that is out of proportion for that grade under the pay schedule now in force. As time passes this condition will become more and more widespread until finally the captain's and major's ranks will be filled with officers who are drawing the maximum rates of pay for their grades but whose professional enthusiasm and efficiency are impaired by the stagnation which prevents their advancement."

prevents their advancement."

What is the remedy for such a situation? The former Chief of the War Plans Division of the War Department General Staff has stated that it has a direct influence upon the efficiency with which the Regular Army can be expected to fulfill its mission in national defense. He also has stated that without corrective measures the Government will be confronted "by a constantly increasing cost of commissioned personnel." The committee believes that there is no better time than right now, when we are seeking ways and means to save money, to initiate a program looking to the correction of the intolerable condition that now obtains, and it submits that this can be accomplished without materially, if at all, lessening available officer strength in the event of war or national emergency. It is not proposing, as will be seen from the provision commencing on page 10 of the bill, the elimination of any officers from the Army. Its proposition generally is to retire those of the most advanced age in the several grades, not all of whom, but many of whom, according to their position on the promotion list, constitute a hindrance to the orderly advancement of their juniors. Those who may be retired will continue to be subject to recall.

Attention is invited to the table on page 104 of the hearings showing the destribution of the line and promotion officers by age and grade. Under a well-ordered scheme of promotion a second lieutenant should become a first lieutenant after 3 years, a captain after 10 years, a major after 17 years, a lieutenant colonel after 22 or 23 years, and a colonel after 28 years of service. Company officers must be young men. According to such order of advancement we find in the table referred to 478 second lieutenants above the age of 27, 1,088 first lieutenants above the age of 34, 1,860 captains above the age of ants above the age of 27, 1,088 first lieutenants above the age of 34, 1,160 captains above the age of 41, 286 majors above the age of 47, and 175 lieutenant colonels above the age of 52. The table speaks for itself. It is these overage officers, too, who are building up the appropriation for pay of the Army. Many of them formerly were enlisted men. Their longevity gives them pay at a rate in excess of some of their seniors and, in some instances, as much as officers two or three grades above them.

The course the committee is proposing is not original. The Interdepartmental Pay Personnel Board recognized the need to resort to enforced retirement. In its report the board stated:

"It can not be expected that any increase in attrition that can be produced by lowering the retirement age or liberalizing volunbe produced by lowering the retirement age or liberalizing voluntary retirement will result in sufficient elimination to produce a desirable rate of promotion. A certain number of compulsory removals from the active list will still be necessary, and these removals, in order to produce the desired effect, must be confined removals, in order to produce the desired effect, must be confined largely to the officers appointed on or before July 1, 1920; i. e., to the pre-war and World War groups. * * The proper method for obtaining the number of compulsory terminations of active service that are necessary after the resources of retirement for age and physical disability and voluntary retirement have been exhausted, is by having a representative, disinterested, and impartial board select annually the officers who are to be removed from that board select annually the officers who are to be removed from the active list in order to bring about the total attrition that is required. Provided such a board is allowed due latitude in the discharge of its task, the result so obtained can be expected to be in the best interest of the service."

[From my speech of May 10, 1932]

Mr. Chairman, we have over 12,000 officers in the Army. appropriated for the present fiscal year under "Pay of the Army," for 12,000, and there are, in addition, 60 paid out of river and harbor funds and a number of officers professors at West Point; say, all told, about 12,100 Army officers. We have 118,750 enlisted men, aside from the Philippine Scouts. The situation as it confronted us was just this; There came into the Army after the war a lorge number of men. a large number of men.

Mr. Chairman, the ages of those men are getting so high that they were keeping the younger men in the Army from reaching positions of responsibility, and that condition will continue until 1950, so that a lieutenant in the Army has very little hope for the future left, because it is certain he is going to remain a lieutenant and certainly will not advance beyond the grade of major before the date of his retirement. Those men, to a very large extent, were all huddled together in the grades of lieutenant to major, inclusive. We have lieutenants 62 years old in our Army. We have captains 61 years old.

This is how it happened: Immediately after the war a great many ex-soldiers, sergeants and corporals, and so on, had a chance to join the Army as commissioned officers. Field clerks, clerks in the departments, had a chance to get into the Army, and they went into the Army. They, in conjunction with many others taken in from civil life, are in a hump, with the result that that hump is destroying the efficiency of the Army. I am not concerned as to whether the Army has 12,000 officers or 10,000 officers. No patriotic citizen can say that we ought to have the 12,000 that cerned as to whether the Army has 12,000 officers or 10,000 officers. No patriotic citizen can say that we ought to have the 12,000 that we have now, because we all know, and everybody has testified time and again, that many of those officers are overage, and they are preventing, according to their position on the promotion list, the proper flow of promotion for officers junior to them, upon whom we must depend in a future war.

I see my good friend Tilson sitting here, and I want to say to you that I do not have a better friend in this House than the gentleman from Connecticut, and there is no man in this House for whom I have greater respect than the gentleman from Connecticut. [Applause.]

necticut. [Applause.]

The gentleman told me the other day that he talked to a major general who is now in the United States Arms. general who is now in the United States Army. I shall not tell you the officer's name or where he is stationed, but he asked this major general, "Where can a cut be made in the War Department appropriation bill?" And the general told him to take out 2,000 Army officers.

If you look at the interdepartmental pay-board reports—a board made up of Army officers and Navy officers—you will find that they propose reductions in order to make our Army efficient. Do not let our sympathies and the propaganda that is coming to us deter us from doing our plain duty. What are the proper ages for Army officers? West Point graduates should be first lieutenants in 3 years, captains in 10 years, majors in 17 years, lieutenant colonels in 22 years, and colonels in 28 years.

My friends, if an officer in the Navy falls of selection, if he be a captain, which is comparable to a colonel in the Army, he is taken out at about 57; a commander at about 50; and a lieutenant commander at about 43. We are not doing anything in this bill you look at the interdepartmental pay-board reportsmander at about 43. We are not doing anything in this bill which we are not already doing. Why is it right to do it in the Navy and wrong to do it in the Army? Have we lost our sense of proportion merely because some old general says that what we are doing does not suit him?

These young men in the Army have no chance whatever unless these overage officers are eliminated. General MacArthur, in his promotion scheme which he submitted to this House, does identically the same thing as is proposed here, except that he carries them as dead weight, while here it is proposed to place them in a retired status. Mind you, an officer is just as much an officer in the United States Army after he is retired as if he were in the Army on the setting list and his services are available to officer in the United States Army after he is retired as if he were in the Army on the active list, and his services are available to us at any time. I had a colonel tell me not long ago that he did not have enough work to do to make his job respectable. He said he could do it in 10 minutes a day.

Now, then, do you not know that we do not need more than 2,500 officers for the troops we have? A man is lucky if he has an opportunity to serve with troops every six or seven years, and, therefore, every year he is away from them he is going backward rather than forward, and we are permitting the entire mass to become more inefficient day by day.

Now, then, let us do a little figuring. The national defense act, which these gentlemen say they are approving, provides for an enlisted strength of 280,000 men and 15,035 officers. That is 1 officer for every 18½ men. Those estimates were made and submitted to the Congress after deliberate thought on the part of the department. Using that proportion of officers to our present enlisted strength it would give us a maximum of 6,500 officers, yet we have over 12,000. In the Hawaiian Islands we have 734 officers and 14,000 men. Certainly we have enough officers over there, because it is an attractive place in which to live. That is 1 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 395 officers and 14,000 men. In Panama we have 395 officers and 14 officers and 1 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 officer to every 22 men. In Chine, we have 535 officers and 14 of need only about 5,500 officers. In Panama we have 395 officers and 8,630 men, 1 officer to every 22 men. In China we have 51 officers and 901 men, 1 officer to every 18 men. On that basis we officers and 901 men, 1 officer to every 18 men. On that basis we find we need 5,900 officers in our Army.

General Pershing in his book figures a division during the World War at 979 officers and 27,082 men. That is about 1 officer to every 30 men. He figures a brigade at 258 officers and 3,200 men. That is 1 to about 35. He figures a company at 6 officers and 250 men. According to these compilations it is necessary to have less than 4,000 officers in our Army, but allowing that we need 50 per cent more back home it would still be less than 6,000 officers.

What is the situation with reference to enother country?

What is the situation with reference to another country? Our Army has been built up on the same plan as the British Army. I have made a table showing the British Army and our own Army. The British have 550,000 men in their army, in their overseas possessions, including Canada, Australia, and so on. own Army. The British have 550,000 men in their army, in their overseas possessions, including Canada, Australia, and so on. The total of the army of the British Empire is 550,000 men, and how many officers? Twenty-three thousand and twenty-nine, all told. What about our own Army? We have, eliminating the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, about 550,000 men, too, and how many officers have we? One hundred and twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and ninety-two. It looks as though everybody in this country has gotten to be an officer, and if it keeps on we are going to reach the day of the milk-white flag, with a company composed of 100 men, 99 officers and 1 private, and all of the officers taking their turn in drilling him. all of the officers taking their turn in drilling him.

Now, then, we have something which the British do not have. We have the National Guard, which is one of the most efficient military organizations on this earth. The British have no component in their army that even approaches in effectiveness the officers from our Army. What did Mr. Good, when he was Secretary of War, say to my good friend on the Republican side, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Summers], 11 days before his death? He stated when he was Secretary of War that he was going to propose to the President the taking out of the Army of 5,000 officers. He was unable to do this because of his untimely death.

Now, what is the effect of this reduction? It will take out of the Army the overaged officers, so that promotions will flow for the younger men and give them a chance to be promoted. The method we have adopted this method is because we do not some the description of the Army the overaged officers, so that promotions will flow for the method we have adopted this method is because we do not some the final budgets. know of anything in the world that affects a man's usefulness in the Army so much as senility.

There is not a man that I know of in the Army who wants There is not a man that I know of in the Army who wants them taken out in any way except by order of the legislative body, and this method is prescribed because they do not want any politics in it. They say that if we adopted any other method every Member of Congress and every Member of the Senate practically, would be down there saying. "Do not touch this man," and many incompetent men, because of political influence, would be retained in the Army.

I would like to call the attention of the Congress to the expenditures of the United States and the other large countries for military-defense purposes. It is obvious that our expenditures are larger than those of any other country. Under these circumstances, therefore, I fail to appreciate the motives of the groups in this country who oppose any reduction in military costs, especially at this time when so many of our citizens are actually in need and the remainder suffering as a result of excessive taxes and a general economic breakdown. Certainly there can be no excuse to leave untouched the military while every other person, both within and without the Federal service, is making tremendous sacrifices for the common good.

Mr. Speaker, it is apparent from all the facts that the House has dealt generously with the Army, much more so than with the civilian departments, the activities of which are of equal or even greater importance, and also more generously than other countries have dealt with their military establishments.

I do not suggest that we interfere with the efficiency of the military or that they should suffer unduly, but merely that they should not be given a privileged position and be compelled to accept somewhat the same sacrifices as the civilian population of this country.

IS RULE XV FAIR?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my own remarks on the subject of Members qualifying to vote after the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the privilege of extending my remarks, granted to me by the House, on the right of a Member to qualify to vote after the second call of the roll, I submit the following memorandum:

For a long time I have been interested in the proceeding under which after the second call Members either qualified or failed to qualify to cast their votes. The usual rule for qualification is stated by Congressman Cannon in his book on procedure. It is as follows:

MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. (I did not hear my name called. Am I recorded?)

Speaker. Was the gentleman present (within the Hall) and listening when his name should have been called?

Member. I was just entering the Hall (in the lobby, cloakroom, gallery, standing just outside the door).

SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

SPEAKER (if answered in the affirmative). The Chair thinks the gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will call his name.

After watching this proceeding for a number of years and reading the rules that apply, I have prepared a brief rule, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That section 1, Rule XV, of the rules of the House of Representatives is hereby amended by inserting a new paragraph entitled section 1A to read as follows:

entitled section 1A to read as follows:

"Section 1A. Upon the first roll call upon any bill, resolution, or other motion, and after the second call of the roll under said first roll call, any Member present in the House who failed to answer to his name shall, before the vote is announced, have the right to be recognized by the Speaker for the purpose of asking that the Clerk call his name. His vote shall be recorded in the same manner as it would have been recorded had he answered the first or second call."

However if the House shall subsequently order that the roll be

However, if the House shall subsequently order that the roll be called on any other motion relating to the consideration of the same bill, resolution, or motion, no Member shall have the right to have his name recorded after the second call on such roll call unless he shall have been present and listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it called.

My object is to permit a Member to vote before the final result is announced by the Speaker. I realize that such a privilege might be used for dilatory or filibustering purposes if too freely granted. Therefore, the rule proposed by me grants the unqualified right to vote before the result is announced merely on the first roll call ordered by the House on any bill, resolution, or motion. I have adopted the theory that when there is one roll call on a bill that that ought to be sufficient notice to Members that there might be another one a short time thereafter. Therefore, on the second roll call ordered by the House on any bill or resolution I have provided that Members must qualify under the existing precedents.

This check, it seems to me, will wholly destroy the use of this privilege as a means of delaying the proceedings of the House. At the same time the right to vote before the result is announced on the first roll call ordered by the House gives, in my opinion, a substantial right to a Member which should not be taken away by any technical rule or ancient precedent. Members of the House are elected to represent constituencies. The right of a Member to vote is the most substantial one that his constituency has. The main reason Members are sent here is to vote. Every opportunity consistent with good order and discipline in the House should protect a Member in this substantial right. The rules of the House ought to be plain and clear in encouraging Members to vote. No technical ritual ought to deprive them of their right to perform this important function. If the rules can be amended so that orderly procedure is safeguarded while at the same time the right of a Member to vote is granted, it seems to me that we shall be functioning much more in accord with the real purpose of the House than we are under the existing rules.

As the rule stands to-day, a man is frequently the victim of the alphabet. On the second call, two Members may enter the House at the same moment—one whose name begins with "A" and one whose name begins with "M." If the "A's" have already been called by the Clerk and the "M's" have not been reached, then the Member whose name begins with "A" can not qualify under the present rule, but the Member whose name begins with "M" answers his name as it is called. In other words, although Members may be entering the hall while others are voting, the trick of the alphabet may deprive their constituencies of their right to be represented in the vote. This seems to me to be entirely too technical an interpretation of the rules to govern the National House of Representatives. In the Senate of the United States the unwritten rule is that before the final vote is announced by the presiding officer any Senator may ask that his name be called and that he be recorded in the same way he would have been recorded had he answered when the Clerk first called his name. While a few minutes of time may be wasted by the tardy appearance of Members who exercise this privilege, still, since the privilege is in itself bound up with the highest duty of a Representative, it does not seem to me that haste should outweigh the substantial right of constituencies.

If a quorum is not present, the House has the right to send out and arrest Members and make them attend and vote. This power in the House is proof of the recognition of the House of the duty of Members to vote. While it may be said with some force that Members should be in attendance on the floor at all times, the answer is very plain that this is a theory without much basis in fact. Members have manifold duties to perform outside of the Chamber of the House. In all the years of my observation I have never seen the entire membership of the House present from the opening of the session to the close. In no legislative body in the country is the experience of men any different. We should not base our rules upon a concept that defies all practical experience. Roll calls are asked for at very unusual times and when least expected on bills which seem to be lacking in serious contentions. Some bills are read rapidly and few amendments are proposed.

The result is that a man engaged in other duties as a Representative can not forecast the exact minute when his presence is required to answer a roll call. He may be attending to duties in some department of the Government or may be at a Senate or House committee. It may be difficult to reach him. He may enter the Hall during the roll call, but too late, under the present rules, to qualify to vote. What reason is there why the rule should not conform to the facts? What reason is there for forbidding a man to cast his vote on bills if he be present before the final vote is announced? Personally, I can see none. Therefore I have offered the resolution for the purpose of asking the Rules Committee to give consideration to this situation and to amend the rules so as to safeguard both the order of the House and the right and duty of a man to vote.

Many Members, by appearing a few moments too late, have been unable to qualify and have thereby been defeated in elections, although they appeared while others were actually voting. I am not concerned with the personal consequences to individual Members, but I am concerned with the right of constituencies to have their will expressed through the voice of their Representatives under rules which safeguard the discipline of the House and at the same time, by a broad and liberal acknowledgment of the facts, give a Member the right to cast his vote before the polls are closed.

I append hereto the rules that now exist and the precedents as outlined in Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives:

1. Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called, and after the roll has been once called the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not enter-tain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.
6066: A Member who has failed to respond when his name was called may not, as a constitutional right, demand that his vote be recorded before the announcement of the result.

On April 13, 1874 (43d Cong., 1st sess., Record, pp. 3046, 3047), when a roll call had been completed, but before the announcement of the result, Mr. James Monroe, of Ohio, stated that he had stepped out of the House a few moments and found on his return that the roll call had been completed. He asked if his vote that the roll call had been completed. He asked if his vote might be recorded.

The Speaker (James G. Blaine, of Maine) held that the rule pro-hibited the Member from voting.

The Speaker (James G. Blaine, of Maine) held that the rule prohibited the Member from voting.

Mr. James A. Garfield, of Ohio, made the point of order that before the announcement of the vote, and while the measure was still pending, a gentleman had a right, under the Constitution, to vote and that the rule was unconstitutional.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair does not think this rule violates the constitutional right of any Member. * * This rule operates equally and impartially upon every Member. There is no selection of one Member and placing a disability on him. The roll call must cease at some time, and the House has determined it shall cease at a particular point. But if the House should say by rule that the Representative of the third district of Maine should not vote, or the Representative of any other district who happened to be a Member of the House and elected Speaker, that presents a different case, because that attempts to disfranchise a single Member from a right enjoyed by all other Members, and therefore operates without equal and exact justice. This does not, in the opinion of the Chair, present that point. * * The question presented rests on two constitutional points. The yeas and nays are to be called on the demand of one-fifth of the Members present, and the House has the right to determine the rule under which they shall be called. If the House should decide that the roll should be called through, and when called through that the vote shall be announced and the absentees on the roll call should not have the right to vote, the Chair thinks it would be an entire compliance with the Constitution in every respect."

6067: On February 8, 1878 (45th Cong., 2d sess., RECORD, p. 871), at the conclusion of the roll call but before the announcement of the result, Mr. Thomas T. Crittenden, of Missouri, stated that he called and demanded his right to vote under the Constitution and the rules.

The Speaker (Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania) said:

The Speaker (Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania) said:

"There is a clause of the constitution giving Members the right to vote; but another clause provides that 'each House may determine the rules of its proceeding'; and that rule-making power has been exercised with reference to this question of voting. * * The Constitution gives to every Member the right to vote; but it also provides that each House may make such rules for its government as it may see fit. Under the rules and under the practice, the gentleman from Missouri, not having been in the House during the roll call, has not the right to vote."

the House during the roll call, has not the right to vote."
6068: On December 19, 1883 (48th Cong., 1st sess., Record, p.
189), at the conclusion of a roll call, Mr. Melvin C. George, of Oregon, stated that he had been giving attention but did not hear his name called. Therefore he asked that he might vote.

The Speaker (John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky) said:
"It has been the practice of the House to allow a gentleman to have his vote recorded after the second roll call if he states he did actually vote or that he was giving attention but did not hear his name called."

Mr. Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, objected to allowing the name to be recorded.

There was debate as to the constitutional right of a Member to vote under such circumstances, but the Speaker held to a rigid construction of the rule, and, unanimous consent being refused, Mr. George was not allowed to vote.

6069: The Speaker may not entertain the request of a Member to answer "present" at the conclusion of the roll call provided for by section 1 of Rule XV.

On May 16, 1900 (56th Cong., 1st sess., Record, p. 5620), there had been a yea-and-nay vote on a motion for the previous question on the bill (S. 2921) to incorporate the American National Red Cross Association, etc., when Mr. Phanor D. Brezeale, of Louisiana, who had not been in the Hall when his name was called, asked that he be recorded as present.

The Speaker (David B. Henderson, of Iowa) said:

The Speaker (David B. Henderson, of Iowa) said:
"That is the same as voting, and it is not within the Chair's power to admit the request."

power to admit the request."

6070: It is not permissible to entertain the request of a Member to record his vote after he has failed to respond because his attention was distracted when his name was called.

On March 10, 1902 (57th Cong., 1st sess., RECORD, p. 2605), the yeas and nays had been taken on a motion to recommit the bill (H. R. 11728) relating to the free rural-delivery service.

Mr. Joseph T. Johnson, of South Carolina, stated that just as the Clerk called his name a gentleman spoke to him, distracting his attention so that he did not respond to his name.

The Speaker (David B. Henderson) said:

"The gentleman was listening to the gentleman who spoke to him and not to the Clerk, and the Chair thinks he can not be allowed to vote on the question."

6071: A Member who is listening when his name should be called and fails to hear it, is permitted to vote at the end of the roll call; but under no other circumstances may the Speaker entertain a Member's request to be recorded.

On June 6, 1896 (54th Cong., 1st sess., Record, p. 6220) at the conclusion of a call of the yeas and nays, Mr. Farish C. Tate, of Georgia, requested that his vote might be recorded. He said he had been present in his seat and did not hear his name.

The Speaker having asked if he was listening when his name should have been called, and falled to hear it, Mr. Tate did not respond in the affirmative, except to say that he was "present and failed to hear."

failed to hear.'

The Speaker (Thomas B. Reed, of Maine) said:
"The Chair desires to say that in matters of this kind he simply enforces the rule of the House. The exception under which gentlemen are allowed to have their vote recorded after the roll call temen are allowed to have their vote recorded after the roll call rests upon the idea that by some mistake the name was not called. The object of the rule is to command the attention of Members during the vote. * * * The Chair thinks that the gentleman can not vote under the rule."

6072: On March 24, 1896 (54th Cong., 1st sess., Record, p. 3140), at the conclusion of a roll call Mr. Loren Fletcher, of Minnesota, announced that he desired to vote.

The Speaker having interrogated him as to whether or not he was listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it, Mr. Fletcher could not say further than that he did to hear it, Mr. Fletcher could not say further than that he did not hear his name.

Thereupon the Speaker (Thomas B. Reed, of Maine) said:

"The Chair ought to say to the House that attention has been called to the rule (sec. 1 of Rule XV; see sec. 6046 of this chapter) in regard to the recording of names after the roil call.

"The practice in the Fifty-first Congress, when the same rule prevailed, was to ask a Member if he was listening at the time his name should have been called and failed to hear it, so as to meet the possible contingency that the calling of the name had been omitted. That is the condition of the rule as it stands at present."

been omitted. That is the condition of the service of the present."

6073: The fact that a Member was absent on the service of the House does not justify the Speaker in submitting a request that his name be recorded after the yea-and-nay call is finished.

On February 20, 1889 (50th Cong., 2d sess., Recorp., p. 2106), after a yea-and-nay vote had been concluded, Mr. Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois, announced that he had been absent at the session of a conference committee until after his name had been called for the last time, and requested that his vote might be recorded.

The Speaker (John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky) said:
"According to the letter of the rule no Member can vote, nor can the Speaker entertain a request for unanimous consent that the Member be allowed to vote, after the completion of the second roll call; but inasmuch as there is at all times more or less noise on the floor, and it frequently happens that a gentleman fails to hear his name called or the Clerk fails to hear his response, it was thought to be manifestly unjust that a Member should be deprived of his vote under such circumstances. * * * * Inasmuch as it might lead to a very great inconvenience if there should be a still further relaxation of the rule, the Chair thinks the gentleman had better content himself with stating how he would have voted."

6074: In the earlier practice of the House, Members were allowed often to record their votes after the close of the roll call, sometimes on the next day, even.

On March 1, 1845 (28th Cong., 2d sess., Journal, p. 532; Globe, p. 383), by the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. John Campbell, of South Carolina, was permitted to have his name recorded on the expectation taken on the preceding day.

this.
6076: On May 12, 1834 (23d Con., 1st sess., Journal, p. 616), after the list of yeas and nays had been called, and before the decision had been pronounced, Mr. William Allen, of Ohio, asked to have his vote taken, having been out of the House when his name was called, attending to his duties as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee had leave to sit during the sitting of the House. The request of Mr. Allen, under the circumstances of his case, was granted by a vote of the House.

6078: On July 28, 1854 (33d Cong., 1st sess., Journal, p. 1233; Globe, p. 1996), the House made an order that members of the Committees on Ways and Means and Enrolled Bills, who should find their duties keeping them away from the sitting of the House, should be allowed to record their names on roll calls taken during their absence, provided such recordings would not change any announced results.

6079: On March 16, 1864 (38th Cong., 1st sess., p. 1143), the Committee on Rules made a futile attempt to break up the pracof allowing Members to vote who did not respond on the if they could respond to the Speaker's interrogatory as to their presence within the bar when the name was called. It was proposed to take away from the Speaker the power to submit request for leave to vote. Mr. Speaker Colfax said at this time that it was the practice of the House to allow Members to be recorded who were away on business of the House.

6080: The fact that a Member responded under an erroneous belief as the said form of the House.

belief as to a pair does not justify the Speaker in entertaining a request to change the record after a vote is declared.

On April 9, 1904 (58th Con., 2d sess., Recoap, p. 4574), Mr. George G. Gilbert, of Kentucky, asked that his name on a roll call of the preceding day be changed from "present" to "aye." It

George G. Gilbert, of Kentucky, asked that his name on a roll call of the preceding day be changed from "present" to "aye." It appeared that he had refrained from voting "aye" because he erroneously supposed himself to have been paired.

The Speaker (Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois), after having read section 1 of Rule XV, said:

"The rule absolutely prevents the Speaker from even entertaining a request for unanimous consent. The matter of pairs is a matter for gentlemen to regulate among themselves. * * * The Chair declines, under the rule, to entertain the request, the rule prohibiting him from submitting the request."

6081: It is not permissible to entertain the request of a Member to record his vote after he has, on the call of his name, refrained from voting because of a misunderstanding as to a pair.

On February 23, 1901 (56th Cong., 2d sess., Record, p. 2915), the yeas and nays had been taken on a motion to concur in a Senate amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill.

Before the announcement of the vote Mr. Charles H. Grosvenor, of Ohio, stated that he had refrained from voting on a misunderstanding. When his name was called he had erroneously supposed himself paired. He therefore asked that his name be called and that he be permitted to vote.

The Speaker (David B. Henderson, of Iowa), after quoting Rule XV, said that it was impossible to recognize the gentleman to vote.

to vote.

6082: A Member may not have the record of his vote changed on the statement that he voted on a misapprehension of the question, and a motion relating thereto is not a matter of privilege. (See also secs. 5931–5933 of this volume.)

On August 15, 1850 (31st Cong., 1st sess., Journal, p. 1266; Globe, p. 1577), Mr. Isaac E. Morse, of Louisiana, rose and stated that he had risen to a question of privilege; that on the question just taken upon agreeing to the amendment to the thirty-fourth rule he had voted under a total misapprehension of the question; that he believed he was voting on a motion to lay the amendment upon the table. He therefore moved that the Journal be amended so that his name should appear in the negative upon agreeing to the said amendment.

Objection being made, the Speaker (Howell Cobb, of Georgia) decided that, inasmuch as the Journal was correctly made up, it was not a question of privilege or a privileged question to move an amendment of the Record. When the Journal was incorrectly an amendment of the RECORD. When the Journal was incorrectly made up and the vote of a Member was recorded differently from the fact, a motion to correct the Journal was in order; but the Chair knew no instance wherein the Journal had been amended upon the statement of a Member that he had voted upon a misapprehension of the question.

From this decision of the Chair, Mr. Morse appealed. The decision of the Chair was sustained.

6083: On December 17, 1898 (55th Cong., 3d sess., Record, p. 270), after the approval of the Journal, Mr. John W. Gaines, of Tennessee, announced that on a roll call on the preceding day he had voted under a misapprehension and asked that his vote might be withdrawn and that the Journal might be corrected in accordance therewith ance therewith.

The Speaker (Thomas B. Reed, of Maine) expressed the opinion that the RECORD could not be changed.

REMEMBER THE SOLDIER OF LONG AGO

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a short address made by our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bloom] on Memorial Day at Arlington Cemetery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of the Hon. Sol Bloom, Associate Director United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, broadcast from Arlington National Cemetery, Memorial Day, May 30, 1932, National Broadcasting Co., as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. SOL BLOOM

In meeting here to-day upon this beautiful and solemn occasion, we are responding to a sentiment that reaches deep into the hearts of all humanity.

We are here again to express our tribute of respect and gratitude to our hero dead. But these exalted emotions are not restricted to those who are buried here. They encompass the wide range of all our history and all our Nation's defenders.

We come not to pay a debt, for the debt we owe and acknowledge here is beyond any human ability to pay. Nor are we here to eulogize the heroes who have gone before. They are beyond eulogy.

We come here to reconsecrate ourselves to the preservation of what they achieved. We are here to pledge in loving remembrance, the true hearts of living Americans, to our countrymen, who gave their lives that our Nation might survive.

Those heroes who have gone before are neither high nor low, rich nor poor. In the democracy of death they are made one, and the love we bear them enobles us and raises before us the and the love we bear them enobles us and raises before us the radiant symbols of their loyalty and their patriotism.

Many who lie in this vast sacred place were known to us. The record of their lives and their deeds shine forth to brighten the pages of our history. But in other fields, in other acres dedicated to God, heroes lie whose very names do not remain to us.

Those defenders of our land went forth to suffering and to dear the page of the animated by a single imperishable thought. Whether they were soldiers of a recent war or soldiers of almost forgotten conflicts, we hold them all alike in loving memory and honor.

In this year devoted to the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington it is fitting that we include in these memorial exercises to-day a thought and a prayer for the forgotten heroes who achieved our independence and started our Nation upon its course.

Few records remain to us of the thousands of brave men who followed Washington with a devotion matchless in the history of the world. During that long and terrible winter at Valley Forge alone more than 3,000 of George Washington's soldiers died from wounds, disease, and—starvation.

And of all those who sleep upon that historic field in the companionship of immortality, but one grave alone is marked, one name alone stands for all.

It does not in any way detract from our remembrance of later soldiers that we pause to think of the nameless, forgotten men who were nevertheless Americans, and who died for our flag with the same unselfish patriotism as the heroes who lie about us here. Our eyes fix themselves upon those whose rank and deeds made them especially known, and it is significant that not one of our war heroes is better known than the Unknown Soldier, who stands for all the sevied ranks of markers that his about him here and war heroes is better known than the Unknown Soldier, who stands for all the serried ranks of markers that lie about him here, and in the fields of France, like mortal tears turned to immortal stone. He stands for those who died in other wars, whose very names are lost behind the misty curtain of the past.

For these unknown there are no flowers to-day. No bugle calls echo over their lonely graves. No mother's grief centers about their resting places. No proud descendants lay flowers upon the earth above them in token of the love we bear them. Their sentinels are the everlasting vigil of the stars. Their requiem is the whispering wind that testifies for all eternity the remembrance of Almighty God. of Almighty God.

Let this memorial of ours to-day reach out to those soldiers whose identity is lost, whose graves the rains have washed away, those blessed patriots who sprang to battle at the living voice of Washington, and who are one with him in the comradeship of immortal glory.

In the memories of this day, in the solemn beauty of this shrine, let us render thanks to our Heavenly Father for giving this country such men—men of to-day and of yesterday, men of the long, long ago—the noblest manhood of our own America.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIARILITY BILLS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two bills which I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill which I have introduced, H. R. 11181, is intended to remove the ancient and archaic common-law defense of assumed risk in actions brought against a common carrier. This defense is no longer applicable in modern industry. It is a survival of the day when a servant worked alongside of his master in the master's shop, and when the tools with which they both worked were simple and not inherently hazardous. I need not remind you gentlemen that such is not the condition of workmen in industry to-day, and particularly is it not the condition of men working on the railroads of the country. It is unfair to insist that an employee of a railroad shall give up his employment because of some danger involved in such employment of which he has come to have a knowledge sufficient to defeat his chance of recovery in the event of an accident due to that danger.

This bill does not in any way remove the defense of contributory negligence which is now available to the railroad company, and therefore does not put the company to any serious disadvantage. On the other hand, this defense of assumed risk has in innumerable instances defeated recovery of damages by an employee of the railroad who has been injured by reason of some defect or danger, which as a matter of law the courts have held was within his knowledge, or which he could have learned of before the accident, and, therefore, he assumed the risk which resulted in the injuries of which he complains. This state of the law seems to me to be unfair and unjust to the workmen, and not something that the railroad company has a right to insist upon under the peculiar conditions necessarily incident to employment in railroad transportation.

I have also introduced a second bill (H. R. 11498) which pertains to the same general subject. The purpose of H. R. 11498, which is an amendment to the Federal employers' liability act affecting common carriers by railroad, is to give the courts a reasonable ground for holding that injury sustained by an employee while engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce was not strictly confined to intrastate commerce, although the particular accident causing the injury may have occurred when the employee was engaged in an act that was of itself purely intrastate.

For this reason, on page 2, line 6, of the bill the words "while he is generally employed by such carrier in both interstate and intrastate commerce" are used. This language will enable the courts to adopt a new and more liberal rule in favor of the employee than is at present possible under the existing state of the law.

Here again, in many instances, an employee of the railroad has been denied compensation for an injury under the liability act because the injury occurred at a time when the employee was engaged in the performance of an act in intrastate commerce, notwithstanding that the whole or the major part of his employment during the day or night on which he was injured was in interstate commerce.

The amendment which I propose in this bill will make possible a broader field of interpretation on the part of the courts in bringing certain cases within the provisions of the liability act which are now in many jurisdictions excluded. The present state of the law also at times makes it difficult for the injured workman to know whether or not he should bring his action in the State courts or in the Federal courts under the Federal employers' liability act. This bill will clear up that difficulty to a very large extent because, except in only a very few instances, it will be apparent that the accident occurred at a time when the workman was generally employed in both interstate and intrastate commerce.

No injustice will be done to the railroad company by the amendment of the law in this respect, while, on the other hand, such a change will be distinctly beneficial to the employee and will, it is thought, prevent a failure of justice which can and does happen under the present state of the

As one who has been employed for a number of years in hazardous occupations on railroads, I fully appreciate the necessity for the adoption of the principle contained in these two measures. I hope they will both receive your committee's approval.

WAGES PAID BY CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. CONNERY (when the Committee on Labor was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor, I call up the bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings, and ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the substitute recommended by the Committee on Labor may be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings, with Mr. Boehne in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have read the bill, but I think it might be well to have it appear in the RECORD in toto, and so I shall object.

Mr. BLANTON. Just ask unanimous consent that the bill appear in the Record at this point without reading.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I think the committee ought to be acquainted with its provisions. Let it be read.

Mr. CONNERY. I withdraw the request, Mr. Chairman. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors or subcontractors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

"That the advertised specifications for every contract in excess of $500 for construction, alteration, and/or repair, including painting and decorating, of public buildings or public works, except shipbuilding, in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, or in any city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State or Territories to which the United States or the District of Columbia is to become a party and which requires or involves the employment of mechanics or laborers shall contain a provision stating the prevailing rate of wages as determined by the Secretary of the prevailing rate of wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor for various grades of mechanics and laborers for work of a similar nature in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, or in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State or Territories in which all or the principal part of the particular contract work is located, and every contract for the construction of public buildings or public works, except shipbuilding, to which the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Panama Canal shall become a party shall contain a stipulation that the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay the mechanics and laborers employed directly on the site of such work at not less than the employed directly on the site of such work at not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications. The Secretary of Labor shall, from time to time, reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to mechanics and/or laborers for work of a similar character in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State or Territories in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found to be increased or decreased from that stated if such rate is found to be increased or decreased from that stated in the specifications and made a part of the contract, he shall notify the contractor thereof, and the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification. In event the rate of wages contained in the specifications is so increased, an amount equal to the amount of such increase in wages in any one month shall be paid at the end of such month to the contractor by the United States upon a satisfactory showing by the contractor the United States upon a satisfactory showing by the contractor as to the amount thereof, and in the event of a decrease in the rate of wages, the contract price shall be decreased by the amount rate of wages, the contract price shall be decreased by the amount of such decrease in wages, and such decrease in the contract price shall be computed on the basis of satisfactory evidence submitted by the contractor. The books and pay rolls of the contractor and his subcontractors shall be so kept as to show the actual wages paid mechanics and laborers, and shall be open to inspection by an authorized officer or employee of the United States.

"Sec. 2. Any contractor or subcontractor who fails to pay not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications and made a part of the contract, or not less than any rate of wages subsequently ordered in writing by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with section 1 of this act, or who, after making proper payment, requires a laborer or mechanic to refund any part of the wages so paid, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $10 per day per laborer or mechanic for every day any laborers or mechanics are paid less than such prevailing rate of wages, and for each such refund required from any mechanic or laborer, shall forfeit to the United States a sum not less than or laborer, shall forfeit to the United States a sum not less than five times the value thereof. Any laborer or mechanic employed on any such work who accepts a rate of wages less than that prescribed in the advertised specifications, or in any subsequent revision thereof made by the Secretary of Labor, or who makes any refund to the contractor or subcontractors shall, within 10 days effor such payment or refund file a sworp statement with days after such payment or refund, file a sworn statement with the Secretary of Labor setting forth the facts, and any amounts to be forfeited as provided in this section shall be deducted by the Comptroller General from any sums due the contractor from the United States, or if nothing remains due the contractor, such amounts may be recovered by the United States as a debt in a suit at law against either the contractor and his surety or his subcontractors. The amounts so forfeited or recovered shall be applied, first, to the payment to the laborers and mechanics of any difference between the amounts found by the Comptroller General to have been paid them and the prevailing rate of wages, or of the amounts which such laborers and mechanics were required to refund, and the balance shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"Sec. 3. When any of the departments or independent establishments of the United States, including the District of Columbia, perform work by Government plant and hired labor which could have been performed under contract, but not including work in arsenals or navy yards, or work performed by the Panama Canal, arsenas or havy yards, or work performed by the Fahama Cahan, such departments and establishments, including the District of Columbia, shall also pay not less than the prevailing rate of wages as established by the Secretary of Labor at the time the work is undertaken. The Secretary of Labor shall, from time to time, reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to laborers and mechanics for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State, Territories, the District of Columbia or the Canal Zone in which all or a principal. District of Columbia, or the Canal Zone, in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found by him to have increased or decreased he shall notify the head of the department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government concerned, who shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification.

"Szc. 4. If the provisions of section 1 of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the act of March 3, 1931, or the application thereof to any such person or circumstances, as the case may be, shall not be affected by the enactment of this act."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no member of the Committee on Labor seeking recognition in opposition to the bill, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, this bill (S. 3847) was passed unanimously by the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Labor and we have amended it by substituting the Connery bill. We have changed the contract provision from $5,000 to $500, the reason for this being that painters and other crafts on contracts for post offices, public buildings, and public works have contracts that sometimes amount to $2,000 or $3,000 and under, and therefore they did not come within the provisions of the present Davis-Bacon bill.

You will notice also there is a provision with the words "including painters and decorators." This was because the Comptroller General had ruled that painters, when the building was completed, did not come under the term "construction of a building," and therefore could not benefit under the present law. In many cases, after they build the public building they let it stay as it is until it dries and then they paint the interior. This was not considered a part of construction under the Davis-Bacon law, therefore in order to bring them within the law we put in this provision.

Then we have a provision which includes the Territories and the Panama Canal Zone. This was done at the request of the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. Houston] and the representative of labor, Mr. McConaghy, from the Canal Zone, because they did not want any discrimination in these public-building projects.

Then there is another change wherein shipbuilding is exempted. This is at the request of both the representatives of the shipbuilders and of the labor organizations, both being united against this being put into the bill. So we exempted that work.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How about the United States Government? Is it exempt?

Mr. CONNERY. On building ships? Mr. LaGUARDIA. No; with respect to the provisions of the bill. The gentleman knows we have had considerable trouble in enforcing the provisions of this bill or making it applicable where the Government itself does the work.

Mr. CONNERY. That is provided for in the bill. Where the Government does its own work the Government is responsible and is supposed to pay the prevailing rate of Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman knows some of the experiences I have had in that respect.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. And I will say to the gentleman that we had very pathetic stories told to us with regard to men working on flood-control work in the Mississippi Val-There was one man who was working for 121/2 cents an hour. He worked for 10 days and then was discharged. During the time he worked he paid for tent hire, his food from the commissary, and paid for ice water, and when he was discharged he owed the contractor $1.05.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We had cases at West Point where they were putting up structures by the Quartermaster Corps and not only paid wages far below the prevailing rate of wages but the worker had to bring a pint of whisky to the foreman to hold his job.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in connection with the statement about West Point?

Mr. CONNERY. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Texas, and I shall then yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman can get in his Milwaukee froth.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not get the frothy remark of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I said the gentleman can then put in his frothy remarks about the pint of liquor that had to be brought to the foreman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Milwaukee is a city that was used to good beer and not bad whisky.

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my friend if he is in favor of his bill doing what it will do along this line? There is in Washington now a controversy between the contracting constructors and the carpenters of Washington whereby the carpenters are, in this terrible time of depression, demanding $11 a day, which has been the prevailing wage in Washington. The contractors state they can not pay but $9 under the circumstances, and the carpenters, nearly a thousand of them, are threatening to strike and tie up all public works if they are not paid $11 a day.

Now, there are carpenters, skilled laborers, in many cities of the United States who have not had a job in 12 months. They are anxious to work even for $5 a day to support their families; thousands of them are out of jobs. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts, one of the ablest men in this House, know that if you continue to pay the carpenters of Washington on public works $11 a day, which comes from the taxpayers—does not the gentleman know that it is going to cause dissatisfaction among all workers of the country?

Mr. CONNERY. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, I want to say that if they do not keep up the wage to $11 a day it will have a far worse effect than it would if we keep up the wages.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman want to pay them $11 a day?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; of course, pay them $12 a day when they are earning that.

Mr. BLANTON. When wages are only seven or eight dollars a day in other parts of the country.

Mr. CONNERY. Bring up your pay in other parts of the country. The gentleman knows that bricklayers and carpenters do not get 12 months' work at any time. Your bricklayer, your plasterer, your carpenter do not get an allthe-year-round job, and the end of the year they are lucky if their income reaches $1,500 or $2,000.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It is between $1,200 and $2,000 a year. Mr. CONNERY. I am surprised that my colleague from Texas wants to decrease wages-

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to equalize them for all carpenters of the United States alike. For instance, if you fix the wages at $11 a day for carpenters on public works all over the United States, it would come nearer being satisfactory than the present bill.

Mr. CONNERY. When you set the price on all public buildings-for instance, $11 a day-then, all over the country, you are bound to make private industry come up to

Mr. BLANTON. But this bill does not do that. Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will read the bill closely, he will see that it does.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does this bill take into account the conditions in different localities?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; but New York and Chicago will come pretty close to having the same rate of wages.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And the contractor in Texas will not pay the same wages as the contractor in Washington?

Mr. BLANTON. I will guarantee right now that the prevailing wage in Dallas, Tex., will equal any wage paid in New York City. There are places in the United States where the wages are not more than half of what is paid in Dallas, Tex.

Mr. CONNERY. We are going to bring them up. We want to protect them. We want to bring them up to Dallas. Houston, San Antonio, and all the wonderful cities in Texas; and that is what we are doing in this bill.

The committee had long and exhaustive hearings on this bill and similar bills, beginning back in January. We went into the matter thoroughly. We believe this is a bill for the best interests of labor and that it will be a good thing for the country. It will do away with a great many disputes. I doubt if there is a Congressman here who has not had some dispute in his district on a veterans' hospital or a post office or some other public work, where the contractor had not paid the prevailing rate of wage. In Huntington, W. Va., they had to indict the contractor to get any effect

Mr. SNELL. What will be the effect of this on contracts in existence at the present time, if we pass the bill? What will be the effect on contractors who have already taken contracts?

Mr. CONNERY. None.

Mr. SNELL. This does not apply to them?

Mr. CONNERY. No; this applies to contracts which will be entered into in the future.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CONNERY. Yes. Mr. GIFFORD. I hope to be able to vote for this bill, but what does the gentleman think the effect will be when a contract is awarded and the public in a certain community know that the contractor would be reimbursed if the prevailing rate of wages were raised? Would it not have a tendency in all communities for the labor organizations to get together and purposely get the wage put up, knowing that the contractor would not suffer?

Mr. CONNERY. The Secretary of Labor is the man to decide that, and when he goes into Worcester, Mass, or any city in any other State, he looks over the situation as to what is the prevailing rate of wage in that community. I do not see how you could raise the prevailing rate of wage in private industry up to the point the gentleman refers to for the purpose of getting the Government to reimburse the contractor.

Mr. GIFFORD. The Department of Labor has to determine whether there has been a raise in the prevailing rate of wage?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. Mr. GIFFORD. If the local mechanics know that the contractor would have to pay the prevailing rate of wage and be reimbursed, they might easily get together and raise the wages and the contractor might not care if they did get together and demand a general raise.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think it would have that effect. That will have to apply to private business as well as public. If the men on a job get to work and say that they will have to have $13 a day instead of $11 a day, that is not sufficient. The Secretary of Labor looks over the whole situation and decides himself whether the wages have gone up or down. If they go down the contractor is to reimburse the Government and if they go up the Government is to reimburse the contractor.

Mr. BRUMM. What is to be the test as to the prevailing rate of wage?

Mr. CONNERY. The prevailing rate of wage is not difficult to find. The Secretary of Labor has decided that in disputes now. This has already been done. He comes in, and some say that the prevailing rate of wage is a unionlabor rate in that city.

Mr. BRUMM. Is that the way they do it?

Mr. CONNERY. Not always. He looks over the situation and if the wages for a bricklayer are $11 a day and in some place else they are $9 a day, he may work out an average of $10 as between the two. He does not take the union scale of wage as a last resort. He looks over the situation and tries to get a fair rate.

Mr. BRUMM. And the Secretary of Labor is to be the arbitrator?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. He sets the wages before they take the contract, and both the contractor and labor have an opportunity to come in before him and say that they object to this or that or dispute this or that.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. According to this bill, the contractor will be furnished the prevailing rate of wage in a given community before the bids are submitted.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. So that there will be no question at all about it?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; he will know what he has to pay his workers. This situation developed in the hearings: There are a number of so-called fly-by-night contractors. Suppose they are going to build a post office in Topeka, Kans., or in Des Moines, Iowa, or some other place and they come in on the bids and specifications and are not compelled to say what they will pay the bricklayer. Suppose it is a $500,000 post office. They will come in and bid $300,000, they will say that they will build the post office for $300,000. The fair contractor, who pays decent union wages to labor, will come in and say that he can not build that post office for $300,000 at the rate of wages that he pays. He bids $400,000. The first contractor wins the contract, and then goes out and shops around with the subcontractors and tells them that they will have to take $60,000 instead of $80,000, that they will have to do this and do that, and he brings in labor, perhaps, from some other State and pays them starvation wages, and those are the abuses that we want to correct.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman knows that I have had many years of experience in the contracting business. The question in my mind is whether this bill is really constitu-

Mr. CONNERY. We believe that it is constitutional. Mr. HOLMES. I think the intention of the bill is very good, and I am heartily in favor of it, because I know it will erase an evil that has entered into the contracting business.

Mr. CONNERY. In section 2 of the bill there is a typographical error. It says section 4. That will be corrected. An amendment was put on in the Senate by Senator La FOLLETTE that if this law should be declared unconstitutional we would revert then to the Davis-Bacon bill, so that the gentlemen need have no fears on that account.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I might preface my remarks by saying that I have had considerable experience in prevailing rate of wages cases in which we compelled contractors and a municipality to pay the prevailing rates. The bill provides on page 7 that the wages to be paid shall be the prevailing wages "in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision in which the particular work is located." I think that restriction may be erroneous as a base for prevailing wages in two respects. The territory taken may be either too small or too large. I will give you an example. For instance; in the city of New York, with five boroughs or counties, the wages paid are not always the same in all the boroughs throughout the city. Carpenters, for instance, are paid a different rate in Brooklyn than in Manhattan. Often the same trades are paid different rates in different boroughs of the city of New York.

Now, as to the other possible error, if there is to be a post office built in a "village," one of the many for which we voted yesterday, there might not be in that village a steam fitter or a plasterer working. As the territory might be too large when you take in an entire "city," on the other hand a village may be too small a territory on which to arrive at a prevailing rate. Nor do I understand why you specifically left out "counties." The territory taken ought to be in some community or territory that is reasonably large, so that you can get all rates for all trades employed in the contract.

Mr. CONNERY. We went into that matter thoroughly, and the most perfect example we had was Boulder Canyon Dam. It would be necessary to go 500 miles to find a city large enough to make a prevailing rate of wage around there.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But there may be many villages that have no plumbers in them, men actually working as plumbers. Bricklayers and metal workers and other highly skilled trades may not be found in a village in sufficient numbers to enable the Secretary of Labor to establish a prevailing rate of wage.

Mr. CONNERY. I think the Secretary of Labor, when he figures out these predetermined rates of wages, will be able to determine that. Generally there is a town near enough to ascertain the prevailing rate of wage for that town. If there is a job in a little town in New York, there will be a city near enough in order to determine the prevailing rate of wage for that little town.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But the bill reads "in the city, town, or village where the public work is carried on."

Mr. CONNERY. As a practical matter, they have had no trouble in that regard in connection with the Davis-Bacon bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If they limit it to the language in this bill, there may be trouble about it.

Mr. CONNERY. In the Davis-Bacon bill there is the same proposition, and they have been getting along.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. At one time I was employed as a journeyman, and then I became a contractor, so I may be able to help the gentleman with the question brought up by the gentleman from New York. Trade associations and contractors' associations have for years adopted the practice of establishing territorial rights not only within the confines of a large city or a small city but including in some cases the adjacent territory. These parties have made certain agreements and adopted certain scales of wages. The Secretary of Labor, being an experienced labor man, is very familiar with these practices and customs.

So the question brought up by the gentleman from New York might not hold in all cases because of these established practices and customs of labor organizations and building contractors. For example, if a hospital was to be constructed in a little village outside of the city of Buffalo, they could not possibly get mechanics in that village. Therefore, within that jurisdiction the rate of wages paid in Buffalo should prevail. That is the custom in many places and should be made universal. If this bill is amended in one particular, it will be an improvement over existing law.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, who is perhaps the most sincere friend of labor in this House, for bringing in a bill of this kind. I would like to ask the gentleman if it applies to work conducted at West Point?

Mr. CONNERY. I think it does. As near as I can see from the wording of the bill, where the Government does its own work, they are obliged to pay the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. FISH. Does it apply where the Government does its own work and also where the Government has the work done by contractors?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. It applies in both cases?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. That would cover West Point.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. West Point is in the identical situation as that brought up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'Connor]. There are five or six surrounding cities and villages, and the prevailing wage scale is based on the various cities. I would like to ask whether this covers road construction?

Mr. CONNERY. No. We intended to bring in a separate bill with regard to roads. We would be confronted by constitutional objection unless we brought in different wording than we have in this bill. On the $132,000,000 road bill there has been an amendment offered in the Senate to put in the predetermined rate of wages by the State highway commissions of those States; a minimum wage.

Mr. FISH. I suppose the gentleman knows that many complaints are being received that wages are being paid at 30 cents an hour on the roads?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, yes; and less than that.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman thinks that might be taken care of by some other legislation?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. It can not be taken care of in this bill?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think so, without getting into trouble.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. As the gentleman knows, under the present engineering methods a great deal of the building is really constructed in the steel mill and it is assembled on the spot.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. As I read this bill, it is not sufficiently broad to reach out and compel the prevailing rate of wages in the particular material built for that building.

Mr. CONNERY. I see what the gentleman is after; and while I heartily sympathize with his views on that, if we started in to take materials in connection with this, we would cover many, many industries in the United States, including the United States Steel Corporation, and we would be telling them what wages they would have to pay in that industry. We thought that was too big a field to cover at this time.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There is a difference between material like brick and cement which may be used anywhere and the steel structure that is made for that building and that building alone.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; but it would affect the bricks and everything else that is manufactured, and the Government would be regulating the wages of private industry. The committee thought that was a little too far to go at this time. I heartily sympathize with the views of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum].

Mr. LINTHICUM. I called upon the gentleman with a committee to ascertain whether when work was being done by the United States Government the wage scale would be protected.

Mr. CONNERY. That is in the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That has been taken care of in the bill, has it?

Mr. CONNERY. That has been taken care of.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What has been done with reference to Government contractors bringing labor from other States?

Mr. CONNERY. We did not touch that, for we feel that under this bill, if passed, that will take care of itself. We had an example in New York where they brought in men from Alabama to work on a veterans' hospital. The only reason they brought them there was that they could pay them small wages. But when the wages are to be determined by the Secretary of Labor, and the contractors know they have to pay workers a certain amount, they are not going to bring workers to New York from Alabama. This practice will be stopped once rates of pay have been determined

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think in the case of the new post office we built in Baltimore, it was built almost entirely by Chicago labor. I do not think any of our Baltimore people had anything to do with it.

Mr. CONNERY. We want to deal with such situations. I would like to say to the gentleman that if this bill becomes law and we find such conditions still exist, I feel sure the committee will bring out another bill that will remedy

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SPARKS. I observe the bill provides that the advertised specifications for every contract shall contain a statement by the Secretary of Labor as to the prevailing rate of wages. Now, between the time of the advertising of the specifications for the contract and the time of the actual work of building there might be a change in the prevailing rate. Should not that possibility be provided for in the bill?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I think as a practical matter that will take care of itself, because you will notice if the wages go up or down the cost is taken care of.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts about work done by the Government. Several years ago Smedley Butler down here at Quantico found himself in possession of a lot of surplus material. He used that material in building beautiful homes for the officers over there and good barracks for the men, using his own men. Is this bill going to require an officer who does work like that somewhere else to pay prevailing rates of wages to the men?

Mr. CONNERY. No. Mr. BLANTON. The Government can still do that kind of work in its own interest?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I wanted this RECORD to show clearly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This only applies to contracts.

Mr. CONNERY. This only applies to contracts where the Government is a party and where the Government is doing its own work by hired labor.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, at a previous session the Congress passed what is known as the Davis-Bacon Act, which provided regulations for the payment of the prevailing rate of wages in the localities in which public buildings were being erected. As I understand this bill, it provides supplementary legislation to the Davis-Bacon Act; that is, among other considerations, it predetermines the prevailing wage on contracts, so that the contractor may know definitely and in advance of the submission of his bid what the approximate labor cost will be.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. GRANFIELD. You believe that this legislation will prove advantageous to the contractor, the employee, and the Government?

Mr. CONNERY. It amends that law.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I have given this proposed legislation careful consideration. I have considered it in the light of the situation that developed in my own city of Camden, N. J., where the Government is now engaged in constructing a post-office building. Innumerable disputes have arisen over the question of what is the prevailing rate of wages which the contractor is required to pay under the Davis-Bacon Act. The dissatisfaction and discontent growing out of these disputes have resulted in strikes-holding up the completion of the building and creating a spirit of bitterness between the contractor and his employees. All of these unfortunate occurrences would have been avoided had the provisions of this present bill been operative. Furthermore, the charge has frequently been made that contractors to whom have been awarded the construction of Federal buildings have imported cheap labor from other sections of the country and have endeavored to supplant the local worker by giving employment to the imported cheap labor. This condition has naturally brought forth a justified protest against such an unfair and improper practice. The bill now before us would have prevented such a situation, because the rate of pay would have been determined before the work was started. When the contractor can not individually receive the benefit of reduced pay to workers there will be no inducement to bring in cheap labor or beat down the prevailing rate of wages. This legislation is particularly necessary at this time, when there is a tendency upon the part of some to take advantage of our economic conditions and reduce to even a lower level our wage scale.

The purpose and intent of the Davis-Bacon law, requiring employers to recognize and pay the prevailing rate of wages in the locality where Federal work is being done, is fundamentally sound and just. I was glad to give my support to that act, and likewise glad to support the present proposed act, because it will preserve and make more effective the provisions of the original law.

The passage of this bill will tend toward a more intelligent bidding by contractors on public works and will be highly beneficial to labor in that it will remove very largely all possibility of labor troubles in connection with the construction of Federal projects. I sincerely hope that the proposed law will receive the favorable consideration of the

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CONNERY. I yield.
Mr. HOLMES. This does not involve any road construction work at all?

Mr. CONNERY. No; it does not touch roads. The bill just applies to public works.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I realize I am doing a futile thing in raising any opposition to this bill. There is no chance in the world to stop its passage, any more than there was a chance to stop the passage of the antiinjunction bill. Both of them were greased. One has gone through the House already, and this shortly is going through the House in like manner. In my judgment both will be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court whenever the issue reaches there.

But there are some things about this bill that ought to be discussed as we go along. I am thinking about the effect of this kind of a measure on the body politic of the United States. Every one of us here is a friend of the rural carrier. We have been the loyal, dependable friends of our rural carriers in every district in the United States. We have done much for them, but I will guarantee right now that every single Member of this House during the past two or three months has been getting complaints from citizens of his district about what the rural carriers are getting from the United States Government. Such complaints are coming to all of us. There are idle, starving men in your cities who now watch the rural carriers because they are the Government employees who come in direct contact with them, and they are claiming that some work 3, 4, or 5 hours a day and get big wages, and they can not get a dollar themselves, when they are anxious to work.

Now, when you pass to the people of the United States the fact that Congress here in Washington has prescribed with respect to all the Government works scattered over the United States, hundreds of millions of dollars to be spent, and that you have provided to pay, for instance, the carpenters $11 a day, the ones who are fortunate enough to get work on these public jobs, that you have got to pay them $11 a day out of the Public Treasury when there are thousands of carpenters without work and have been without work for months, who would gladly work for $5 or $6 a day, you are going to create dissatisfaction all over the United States against the very men who get these jobs. That is inevitable. Can the Congress afford to do that thing in this time of turmoil and stress and want of confidence?

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.
Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman wants to be fair?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; and I am thinking of the whole 120,000,000 people; and, listen, I want my friend to remember this: I am not merely the representative of the 400,000 people who live in my particular district. You are not merely the representative of the people who live in your district. We are the representatives of the 120,000,000 people who live in the United States, and it is our sworn duty, it is our bounden duty, to look out for the interest of them as a whole and not for a particular section or corner of the United States.

Mr. HOLMES. I fully agree with my colleague, but the prevailing rate in my district is $9. That will be the rate which will be predetermined.

Mr. BLANTON. No. Whenever they learn that the Gov-ernment is paying $11 per day to carpenters here and is spending hundreds of millions of dollars here in Washington, $17,500,000 on the Hoover monument down here at Seventeenth Street, and that is the greatest monument to extravagance that any successful business man has ever witnessed, your $9 per day carpenters are going to rebel. I want to tell you that you do not often fool seasoned statesmen like WILL Wood. You know, there is an old saying down in my

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. They fooled my friend from Chicago, but they do not fool my friend from Indiana often.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As the gentleman has referred to me, why does he not yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield later. There is an old saying down in my district that lots of different kinds of trees are fooled by the early frost, but there is one tree that is never fooled, and that is the old mesquite tree, that weathers all the elements. Whenever you begin to see it bud out you can just bet your life that spring is here and winter is over. And just like that old mesquite tree you do not often fool the statesman from Indiana.

When Will Wood got up on this floor and said that Herbert Hoover was the most extravagant piece of furniture with which this Government had ever been afflicted he told the God's truth. And down deep in his heart he still believes it. Now, whenever citizens of the United States find out that on the public works of Washington the carpenters here, because they have galleries around the House to be filled with their representatives when you do not do as they want you to do-whenever the people find out that these carpenters here in Washington on public works are refusing to take $9 a day when people are starving, and they are demanding their $11 a day-and after you pass this bill that is going to be the prevailing rate of wages for carpenters on public works in some big cities-you are going to find carpenters by the thousands everywhere without jobs rising up in dissatisfaction and cursing the Congress and cursing the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM and Mr. TABER rose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. First I will have to yield to my friend from Chicago.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Referring to the Hoover monument, as my friend called it-

Mr. BLANTON. Monument of extravagance, I said. What does the gentleman think about it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know that that project originated back in 1913 under the Wilson administration?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if it did, it originated only in the mind of Herbert Hoover.

That great big monumental extravagance down there that they call the Department of Commerce Building is Herbert Hoover's baby; and I want to say it is not merely the $17,500,000 building, it is not merely the $30,000,000 of ground it stands on, it is not merely the $7,000,000 of splendid buildings they tore down in order to build that structure, but every single bureau in that great department is a monument to extravagance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As long as the gentleman keeps to the facts I do not object, but it is a Wilson proposition, originated in 1913.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the great war martyr can not sleep in peace. That Department of Commerce Building has "Hoover" all over it.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question about the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. TABER. The bill provides for increases in wages, provided the prevailing rate should increase, and it also provides for decreases, provided the prevailing rate should decrease. Does the gentleman believe that under the bill a decrease would ever be determined upon which would benefit the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Never in the world, and the gentleman knows it. The gentleman answered his question when he asked it, and he knows it.

I want to say this about public business. Every one of you Congressmen who is a man of business, when you go home, if you are going to construct a building with your money for yourself, what do you do? You advertise for the lowest responsible bid, and you give your contract to the one who offers the lowest substantial bid in accordance with the specifications. You let your contract to the lowest substantial bidder, because it is your duty to yourself and your family to save your money and not waste it. What has the Government been supposed to do throughout all these years? It has been supposed to advertise for the lowest substantial bid.

It is to the interest of the people of the United States to let these contracts to the lowest substantial bidder and to get their buildings erected in accordance with the lowest substantial bid. But what are you doing with this kind of bill, and what have you done with such bills as the Bacon bill? You have fixed it so that the Government of the United States can not get its construction work for the lowest substantial bid. It will have to pay more than double on every project.

How long are the people of the United States going to stand for this?

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.
Mr. GILBERT. The effect of this bill is to the advantage of laborers who are employed as against the unemployed. and to the advantage of labor over the taxpayer and to the disadvantage of everybody except a certain class.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. My friend from Kentucky. who sat with distinction on the circuit bench in Kentucky, has an analytical mind and he can look right through things and see the heart of them. He has seen the heart of this bill

This is not the proper kind of legislation to enact. want to say that the American people are tired of this kind of legislation. Do you know what was done yesterday in the city in which I was born, Houston, Texas? There were 7.770 citizens who in one day signed a telegram to Senator SHEPPARD and to every Member of the Congress from Texas, telling the Members of Congress from Texas that they demanded that we cut appropriations, that we effect economy and that we help to adjourn this Congress and go home. That was the longest telegram ever received in this Nation's capital.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

What are you going to do against such public sentiment as that? And that is the sentiment everywhere. If you do not obey it, I will tell you what is going to happen. You know what happened in Iowa yesterday. A man does not get so big here in this House of Representatives and he does not get so big in the Senate of the United States that the people, when they get tired of him, can not take him out, and the people are going to take them out this year if we do not pay some attention to what they want done.

I now yield to my friend.

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish to state that in my district they are building a post office, and common labor is now getting 35 cents an hour. Does the gentleman think that is too much protection for the laboring man?

Mr. BLANTON. That same situation exists everywhere. Here is what the gentleman is going to do by this bill. He is going to let those fellows out there know that Washington carpenters are getting $11 a day. They are going to demand it, and the ones who get the work on the jobs are going to get the $11 a day and the starving thousands all around there are going to see their wives and little children with faces drawn for want of food, and they are going to rise up in rebellion against men getting $11 a day when they can not get a day's work at any wage and can not make a dollar.

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish to say to the gentleman that every other contractor there is paying 40 cents an hour, but on this building they are only paying 35 cents an hour.

Mr. LEHLBACH and Mr. EATON of New Jersey rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield first to the gentleman from New Jersey, who as former chairman of the Civil Service Committee, has been more responsible than anybody else for the higher-ups in Washington getting all the money and the lower-downs getting it in the neck.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to ask the gentleman whether he got that telegram, signed by over 7,000 Texans, before or after he voted for the $2,000,000,000 pork barrel. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New Jersey knows how I stand on such questions.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know how the gentleman voted.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New Jersey knows that I am a Democratic and a member of the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party has always stood for the people, and the gentleman from New Jersey knows that to be a proper party man, when your party speaks, you have to obey your party or you would not have party responsibility. And there must be party responsibility if the people are to have any protection at all.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then you admit that your party was wrong?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not; I am not here to say that my judgment is better than the judgment of my party. I am here to say that when my party organization in this House speaks, I support my party organization.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Washington, who was kept up until 3 o'clock in the morning, being talked to by the President until it was too late to take the Government airplane for the Washington State convention.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman says that he will follow the dictates of his party. The last party platform of the Democratic Party in Texas was wet. Are you for it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, now, no one but a novice would ask a question like that. [Laughter.] The gentleman is a stranger to politics. His question shows how little he knows about public affairs. Why, the State convention of Texas does not nominate me. It does not nominate a Congressman from Texas. If I were nominated by the State convention of Texas I would have to follow its mandate. I would follow any convention that nominated me, or I would resign.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman-

Mr. BLANTON. Now, just a minute. I am nominated by the people of my district. I am going to follow the people of my district. Whenever the people of my district vote that they want a certain thing, I will carry out their will or resign.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; the gentleman from Washington has taken up more time than the discussion deserves. We have let this youngster get in here and debate a lot of times. I like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin] to get in, because he would get in anyway. [Laughter.] We have been mighty kind to the gentleman from the Northwest [Mr. Horr], and I will tell you why I am kind to him. When

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish to state that in my district they he goes back home, I want him to go back with a kind building a post office, and common labor is now getting feeling for everybody here. [Applause.]

Mr. HORR. I hope the gentleman will allow me to have a good time while I am here. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can not take up any further time. I want to say that this is a very important bill. You ought to pause before you pass it.

I believe that there is no better class of people in this country than the men on the farm. I want to tell you that to-day, since they have been turned out under Government orders, under judgments of foreclosure, by quasi-Government institutions, like the Federal farm banks, and had their wives and children turned out, because, on land that cost $40 and $50 an acre, there was a little $7 an acre mortgage, some are becoming radical, some are becoming anarchists, some few are becoming to hate our Government, and if you do not do something to stop it you will have a revolution in the United States.

What are you going to do about it? Are you going to let a bill like this pass without speaking against it—a bill that is in behalf of a few against the many without raising your voice against it? I have done what I could to stop it, although I feel that it is a vain endeavor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at the request of the minority leader, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Garber].

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in the brief time at my disposal I regret to say that I will not be permitted to yield for interruptions. If, however, at the conclusion of my remarks any time remains, I will be glad to do so. What I shall say will not be intended as any criticism of individuals, but of the policies of the party which they represent.

The recent refusal of the Secretary of State to participate in any international conference at Lausanne, Geneva, London, or elsewhere unless the subject of war debts and reparations and tariffs be expressly excluded, brings out in bold relief the fixed and settled policy of this administration in reference to those important subjects in which all of the people are directly interested. Such refusal was equivalent to saying to the foreign debtor nations, "With such subjects we have nothing to do; the problems involved in them are problems for you to determine among yourselves; your debts have no relation to reparations. When we entered into final settlement and canceled 50 per cent of your indebtedness to us and you finally agreed and affixed the signature of your nation which was subsequently approved by your legislative authority, your promise to pay was not conditioned upon your ability to collect from Germany, and we shall expect you to meet your payments as they become due." Such is the policy, the fixed and settled policy, not by theory, not by word of mouth, but by actual execution on the part of this administration. It is in sharp contrast to the policy of the Democratic Party as declared by its leaders. Cancellation of war debts in consideration of trade advantages has been insisted upon by the titular leader of the Democratic Party, Alfred E. Smith, and the submission of the reduction of our tariff duties to international economic conferences is a legislative commitment of the Democratic Party as embodied in its rateless tariff bill passed in this House by the Democratic majority during this session of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARBER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The minority leader [Mr. Snell] asked me to yield the gentleman from Oklahoma 15 minutes, which I did.

Mr. GARBER. And I appreciate the gentleman's generosity

Mr. BLANTON. I want it understood, however, that when I yielded the time to the gentleman I knew nothing of its nature and was not responsible for the character of speech he is now making.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, the minority leader takes the responsibility for the character of speech the gentleman is making.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to place the responsibility where it rightfully belongs.

Mr. GARBER. Being unable to answer it prompts the! objection of the gentleman from Texas. This fundamentally has to do with American labor not included within the provisions of this bill and for which the Government is equally responsible to establish a prevailing rate of wage. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois interpreted the provisions in this rateless tariff bill in certain comments he made upon a resolution which was recently presented to the President by a minority of the railroad brotherhoods. This resolution provided, and it is very important to notice its provisions, for the appointment of a commission to be composed of five members to be known as the international trade and war debt commission, with authority to grant 25year moratoria of foreign debts owing us in consideration of trade advantages. In his comment of approval upon such resolution the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] among other things, in part, said:

I have read with a great deal of interest the statement of the railroad brotherhoods addressed to President Hoover. This is the first statement I have seen from a responsible organization which points out exactly the reasons for the unfortunate economic conditions in which the country now finds itself. The nations of the world are interdependent, and they must trade with each other. Foreign nations owe us immense amounts, and they can not pay us in gold. They can only pay us in goods. We can grant further moratoriums, but they must be granted in return for trade advantages, and trade advantages can only be accomplished by lowering of tariff walls all over the world. By lowering tariff walls we can restore international trade. The country is indebted to the brotherhoods for the plain, forceful, indisputable declaration they have just issued in their plea to President Hoover, and the whole thing is up to him. If the policies of his party keep him from suggesting to Congress the obvious remedies, the time has come to turn this Government over as speedily as possible to a party which will carry into effect the suggestions of the railroad brotherhoods.

The able and efficient majority floor leader assures the country that when elected a Democratic President will immediately proceed to carry into effect the party policy as expressed in the resolution and the rateless tariff bill, viz, to appoint a commission to hold international economic conferences with our foreign debtor nations, remove barriers and restrictions as expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, and as construed by the floor leader for the granting of moratoria in consideration of trade advantages and the lowering of tariff walls. The procedure in the execution of this policy will be:

First. The appointment of a commission of five members to be known as the international trade and war-debt commission.

This of itself will be a shock to the country in view of the wholesale denunciation of bureaus, boards, and commissions by a Democratic majority without having abolished a single one. When appointed by a Democratic President, it will be a Democratic commission with its flock of economists, legal advisers, international law experts, clerks, secretaries, and stenographers. The members of the commission will be internationally minded, in sympathy with the 25-year moratoria, the cancellation of foreign debts, and the lowering of tariff walls.

Who would be the logical appointees on such a commission? Who would most closely typify such a policy? The answer is obvious. Alfred E. Smith, the titular leader of the Democratic Party; John W. Davis and James M. Cox, former nominees of the Democratic Party for the Presidency; Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War under Wilson, all recognized outstanding national leaders of the Democratic Party. And we might include John J. Raskob as their budget director. Such a commission would not only be representative of the party and policy but would be preeminently satisfactory to the international bankers supporting such policy.

The international bankers are the gentlemen who cleaned this country of its cash in making foreign loans and unloaded millions of worthless foreign securities upon the banks of the country for enormous commissions to themselves. They have contributed more to the cause and continuance of the existing depression than any other class.

Second. The second step in the Democratic policy will be a congressional authorization to the international trade and foreign-debt commission to grant a moratorium to any debtor nation for 25 years in consideration of trade advan-

A 20-year moratorium was declared to be the Democratic policy by Alfred E. Smith, the titular recognized leader of the party, but that period has now been extended to 25 years by the majority floor leader which causes the uninformed to inquire: "What does a 25-year moratorium mean?"

It means the absolute cancellation of foreign debts to us, and in turn what does that mean? The increase to the amount of such debts to be paid by the taxpayers of this country.

In order to secure a settlement of the debts owing us by foreign nations, we forgave the payment of approximately $6,000,000,000, leaving a total balance due of $5,800,000,000. We canceled the obligations of Belgium to the extent of 53.5 per cent; the obligations of Czechoslovakia, 25.1 per cent; the obligations of France, 52.8 per cent; the obligations of Great Britain, 19.7 per cent; the obligations of Italy, 75.4 per cent; of Poland, 19.5 per cent; of Rumania, 25.1 per cent; and of Yugoslavia, 69.7 per cent.

Such reductions were necessary in order to secure the settlements then made. We were assured that economic recovery and trade advantages would follow. And now the Democratic Party calls upon the country to cancel the balance and thus shift the payment of the total of $12,000,000,000, with interest, to the breaking backs of the American taxpayers, and assures us that they would immediately proceed to carry out their policy of granting moratoria if it were not for a Republican President in the White House.

The debts owing us by foreign countries are not barriers to trade. They are an insignificant part of the budget of each debtor nation. In the budget of Belgium, the percentage of our debt is 2.45; in the budget of Great Britain, it is 3.75 per cent; Italy, 1.41 per cent; France, 2.65 per cent—insignificant items in their budgets, too small to be a factor in international trade, and yet the taxpayers of those countries are not being called upon to pay a single dollar of such indebtedness. It is being paid by the reparations from Germany.

When reduced to equal annual installments, foreign-debt payments amount to only $317,000,000 per year, although because of the graduated increase throughout the period of 62 years we have not received such annual amounts to date, and will not for some time. And yet we are compelled to pay the interest charges on the total of $12,000,000,000, representing our loans to foreign countries, in the amount of about $500,000,000 annually! Since the date of settlement of foreign debts all the payments made to us added together and deducted from the interest we ourselves have paid on the amounts thus loaned leaves a deficit of $2,369,000,000 up to the end of this fiscal year! Approximately the amount of our 2-year deficit.

The barriers of international trade with us are not foreign debts but foreign armaments which we can not cancel by economic conferences, moratoria, and the reduction of tariff duties. According to the latest reports of the War Department, the total organized forces of France are 6,942,559; Italy, 5,985,597; Poland, 1,977,095; Rumania, 1,725,660; Czechoslovakia, 1,647,121; Yugoslavia, 1,341,568; Great Britain, 744,646. Here is the cause of their decreased capacity to trade with us. They are staggering under the ever-increasing burdens of maintaining their war establishments on a war basis. Thirteen years of such policy have exhausted their resources almost to the point of collapse.

In January, 1931, the last year in which any payment on account of principal and interest was received, the sum of $215,000,000 was paid to the United States Treasury on the war debts. This amounted to but one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated national incomes of the countries which made the payments and but 2.7 per cent of their annual budgets. From the standpoint of economics, the payments amounted to but 1.1 per cent of the total volume of the foreign trade of the debtor countries—an almost negligible percentage, insufficient to be a material factor in world trade, while for armaments alone they spent eight times as much as they were called upon to pay us on our war-debt account, or $1,800,000,000.

Our peace conferences for relief from such conditions have been unavailing. Compare such establishments with our own:

Our Budget for military activities ($300,000,000 out of a total Budget of $4,000,000,000) amounts to about 7 per cent of total Federal expenditures. The best available figures for foreign expenditures on this same basis are:

Per	cent
France	17.4
Great Britain	7.9
Italy	25.4
Japan	13.1

The budgets for military activities as compared to the national wealth of the great powers for the fiscal year 1930 are approximately as follows:

France	0.64
Great Britain	28
Italy	ACCOUNT OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR
Japan	21
Germany	16
United States	. 08

Of the nations of the world, 16 maintain armies larger than that of the United States. I give them in the order of their aggregate organized military strength: France, Italy, Soviet Russia, China, Spain, Japan, Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Sweden, Great Britain, Switzerland, Belgium, Greece, Portugal, and United States.

Third. The third step to be taken in the execution of the Democratic policy by the proposed international trade and war-debt commission is the securing of trade advantages by the lowering of tariff walls, and, of course, to a competitive basis.

This, too, is satisfactory to the international bankers. With the aid of cancellation by moratoria and the lowering of tariff walls by international conferences, it is hoped that such policy would bring their foreign loans to par and assure their collection and the payment of additional commissions.

Since the world economic conference of 1927 to remove barriers and restrictions upon commerce without results, we have witnessed the failure of no less than seven international economic conferences held for the same purpose; the two league conferences of 1927–28 for abolishing arbitrary obstacles to trade; the three conferences of 1930–31 on the tariff truce; the Austro-German customs union scheme of March, 1931, embodying the open-door plan; and the Danubian States 4-power conference in London in April,

All such efforts have proven fruitless and not a single country signatory to the agreements then made has put forth the slightest effort to carry them out. On the other hand, they have increased their tariffs, not in the way of retaliation, but in their desperate efforts to raise revenue and protect their own industries.

As justification for the indefensible policy of permitting foreign products to compete in our home market, we are told that the alleged high rates in the existing law have caused retaliatory tariffs and a loss of foreign trade.

To begin with, a retaliatory tariff is economically unsound and of short life because it taxes the people of the country that imposes it. As soon as the consumers feel the tax on their consumption they repeal it. When informed they refuse to cut off their own noses to spite their own faces.

To illustrate, how long would the people of this country stand for a retaliatory tariff on coffee, sugar, tea, or other articles of necessity which we do not produce in this country? They would hurl the party from power that imposed them. The people would stand for a tax for revenue to balance the Budget but not a tax in retaliation.

If there are any retaliatory tariffs, they will soon be repealed, but investigation will disclose that the so-called retaliatory tariffs are either for revenue to meet the financial straits of the governments or are imposed for protection to diversify their production and make them self-sustaining.

The international bankers led the fight against the existing tariff law and they are now leading a fight for its repeal. As declared by the Democratic floor leader:

It is the economic policy of the Democratic Party to lower tariff walls so that debtor nations will be able to pay us in goods.

In this critical period, when jobs for the unemployed are conceded to be the only remedy, it is pertinent to inquire:

"Payment in what goods?" Is it to be payment in goods that we do not produce in this country? No! Such goods are already on the free list. There is no tariff wall to lower in respect to them. The payment is to be made in goods in kind produced in this country upon which there is a rate to protect our home labor against the competition of such products by the cheap labor of foreign countries. On such products, the tariff rates protecting home labor are to be lowered so that debtor nations may pay their debts in such goods.

Including private loans, our foreign debtor nations are owing us approximately $17,000,000,000. The Democratic program would permit such a staggering amount to be paid us in goods by the foreign debtor nations. Not in goods we do not produce in this country, such as coffee, tea, sugar, rubber, silks, and so forth, but in goods which we produce in this country and on which there is a tariff duty to lower.

This is the menacing threat of such a policy. It would collect our foreign debts in goods, reducing our exports and increasing our imports. It would give the job of producing on the farm and in the factory to the foreign producer instead of our own and depress the price level in our domestic market to that of foreign countries where wages are less than half of what they are here and where the standards of living are much lower.

In other words, at a time when our home market is glutted and piled high with surpluses of such products, with many closed factories and others running only half time, and an ever-increasing army of unemployed, the Democratic Party says to the country:

Restore us to power in the coming election and we will appoint an international trade and war-debt commission to hold international conferences with our debtor nations. We will authorize such a commission to grant a 25-year moratorium of foreign debts for trade advantages and lower our tariff walls to facilitate such advantages so that debtor nations may pay us in goods.

Such is the economic policy of the Democratic Party. Such is the policy as declared by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and the national leaders of the party. Of course, it will be clothed in deceptive but plausible linguistic habiliments, sugar-coated with pleasing platitudinous phrases and generalities, coupled with vicious and violent denunciation of the iniquitous and indefensible rates in the present tariff law. In farm sections they will denounce the industrial rates to win the farm vote; in the industrial sections they will denounce the farm rates to win the industrial vote; and in all sections they will denounce the existing rates as "the robber tariff," causing the continuance of the existing depression.

Such will be the denunciation from one end of the land to the other, from every platform, but mark the prediction—the country generally will pertinently inquire:

Gentlemen, with your majority in the House of Representatives, when you passed your rateless tariff bill, why did you not reduce the "exorbitant" rates which you claim are causing this depression?

A 25-year moratorium simply means future trouble and final cancellation, a shifting of the war debt to the bent backs of our already tax-ridden people and to industry, the lowering of our tariff walls and increased surpluses, increased unemployment, lower prices, and lower wages.

Let us briefly examine the existing rates upon which such a violent assault has been made and will continue to be made in the coming election. To what extent are our imports required to pay tariff duties? The following table from the Department of Commerce shows the quantity of our imports, free and dutiable, for the calendar year 1931 and the 3-month period beginning with January 1 and ending March 31, 1932:

Free		Dutiable Total		Net receipts from customs
Calendar year 1931	$1, 396, 616, 114	$695, 607, 847	$2, 092, 223, 961	$353, 969, 953
January-March (inclu- sive), 1932	270, 217, 292	124, 481, 788	394, 699, 080	69, 571, 652

From the above table, it will be seen that our imports for the calendar year 1931, duty free, were of the value of $1,-396,616,114; that the value of the imports paying duty was $695,607,847; that the total value of all imports was $2,092,-223,961, and the total net receipts from the collection of the tariff duties on such imports was $353,969,953, the amount of revenue collected under the Smoot-Hawley law for the year 1931 for the benefit of all the taxpayers in the country, and for the protection of the products of American labor and the American farmer.

Under normal conditions, two-thirds of our imports are on the free list and only one-third pays duty. In the existing law there are 3,218 specifically mentioned dutiable items, not including, of course, the miscellaneous job lot of sundry small items carried in the basket clause. Of these 3,218 items, 66 per cent remained just as they were in the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922. I repeat, on 66 per cent of all the dutiable articles in the Smoot-Hawley Act, no change whatever was made. This left only 1,122 on which the rates were changed by the 1930 law. Thus we see, in the first instance, only one-third of the articles imported are dutiable, and in the second instance, the rates have been changed on only one-third of that one-third of the articles imported.

Let us further investigate the actual provisions of the law. Forty-seven products were taken from the free list and placed in the dutiable list. Seventy-five products were taken off the dutiable list and placed on the free list. Of the 1,122 products on which the duties were changed by the provisions of the Smoot-Hawley law, 235 were decreased and 887 increased.

Agricultural rates were raised from 38.10 per cent to 48.92 per cent, or an increase of 10.82 per cent. Industrial rates were increased from 31.02 per cent to 34.31 per cent, or an increase of 3.29 per cent. Thus we see that the rates on farm products were increased more than three times the increase on industrial products. Duties levied on agricultural raw materials and compensatory duties allowed to industries using these raw materials amount to 68 per cent of the total increases in the 1930 act.

It is only fair to state that Democratic Members, as a general thing, supported the existing duties when they applied to products produced in their own districts, but when it came to a question of supporting the bill as a whole, upon its final passage, they were governed by their ancient doctrine of free trade and tariff for revenue only or a competitive tariff and voted in opposition as they voted against the Fordney-McCumber bill in 1922.

The latest legislative record we have of Democratic tariff rates is embodied in the rates of the Underwood Act, passed by a Democratic Congress and signed by a Democratic President in 1913. Let us compare the rates in that Democratic act with the rates of the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922 and the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930 and ascertain to what extent the rates in those acts afforded protection to products of the American farm.

Cattle weighing less than 700 pounds were on the free list in the Underwood Act of 1913; in the Fordney-McCumber Act a duty was provided of 1½ cents per pound; and in the 1930 act we increased this rate to 2½ cents per pound. Under the Underwood Act a 700-pound steer came in free of duty; under the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922 it paid $10.50; and under the 1930 act it is required to pay $17.50.

Why did we increase the rate? Because in 1929, 245,834 head of cattle came in from Mexico, where land is rented at from 5 to 6 cents per acre and labor costs run from 37½ cents to $1 per day, where cattle are produced for less than half of the cost of production in the United States. In 1929 a total of 503,269 head of cattle was imported into this country for competition in the home market with the product of American farms.

Faced with these conditions, we raised the duty from 1½ to 2½ cents on stocker and feeder cattle and from 2 cents per pound to 3 cents per pound on cattle suitable for slaughter. To-day, the owner of a fat steer weighing 1,000 pounds will have to pay $30 for the privilege of selling him in our market.

The act also lowered the dividing line between the two groups from 1,050 to 700 pounds, thereby having the effect of raising the duties still further on cattle weighing between 700 and 1,050 pounds.

The Underwood Act left beef and veal on the free list. The McCumber Act provided a duty of 3 cents per pound. We doubled that rate in the 1930 tariff act, increasing it to 6 cents per pound. Why? Because in 1929 there were imported from foreign countries 42,882,353 pounds of beef and veal, with a total valuation of $5,175,649, which should have been paid to the farmers of our own country.

Under the Underwood Act swine and pork were admitted free of any duty. The McCumber Act levied a duty of ½ cent per pound on swine and ¾ cent per pound on pork. We further increased those rates in the 1930 act to 2 cents per pound on swine and 2½ cents per pound on pork. Why? Because in 1929 swine weighing a total of 613,797 pounds and 4,124,690 pounds of pork came into our markets from foreign sources.

The Underwood Act levied no tariff on sheep, mutton, and lamb. In the McCumber Act we provided a duty of $2 per head on sheep, 2½ cents per pound on mutton, and 4 cents per pound on lamb. In the 1930 act we raised the rate on sheep to $3 per head, doubled the rate on mutton, and increased the rate on lamb to 7 cents per pound. Why? Because in 1929, 27,480 head of sheep were imported into this country and 4,810,750 pounds of mutton and lamb entered our markets from foreign sources, representing a share in our home market on these two products alone worth $683.363.

Scoured wool was on the free list in the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act taxed it at 31 cents per pound and in the 1930 act we raised that rate to 34 cents per pound. Why? Because in 1929 we shared our home market in this commodity with foreign countries to the extent of 49,389,874 pounds, valued at $15,088,768.

Live and dressed poultry came in under the provisions of the Underwood Act with a tariff of 1 cent per pound. In the McCumber Act we increased the rate on live poultry to 3 cents per pound and on dressed poultry to 6 cents. The Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930 further increased those rates to 8 and 10 cents per pound on the live and dressed products, respectively. Why was this further increase considered necessary? Because in 1929, 6,700,276 pounds of poultry, dead and alive, valued at $1,881,120, were imported into our markets to compete with the products of our home farmers.

Fresh eggs were on the free list in the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act levied a duty of 8 cents per dozen, which we increased in the 1930 act to 11 cents per dozen. Why? Because in 1929, 307,912 dozen eggs were imported into the American market from foreign countries.

Butter was taxed at $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound in the Underwood Act. This rate was increased to 8 cents per pound in the McCumber Act and further increased to 14 cents per pound in the 1930 act. Why? Because in 1929, 2,772,746 pounds of butter were imported into our markets at a loss to our farmers of \$1,036,378.

Cream was imported into this country free of duty under the provisions of the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act levied a duty upon it of 20 cents per gallon, which we practically tripled in the 1930 act by increasing the rate to 56.6 cents per gallon. Why was such a sharp increase considered necessary? Because foreign countries imported into our markets in 1929, 2,969,889 gallons of cream, valued at $5.194.482.

Under the terms of the Underwood Act milk likewise came in free of duty. In the McCumber Act a duty of 2½ cents per gallon was levied upon it which we increased in the 1930 act to 6½ cents per gallon. Why? Because in 1929, 4,245,833 gallons of milk were imported into our home market to compete with the product of the American farms.

Cheese and substitutes were on the free list in the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act levied a duty of 5 cents per pound on them, which was increased to 8 cents per pound in the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930. Why? Because in 1929 76,381,795 pounds of cheese, valued at $22,282,200, were imported into our market at a corresponding loss to our home dairy farmers.

Potatoes came in free of duty in the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act taxed them at 50 cents per 100 pounds, which was increased to 75 cents per hundred pounds in the 1930 act. Why? Because in 1929 foreign countries dumped into the American market 256,550,828 pounds of potatoes, with a valuation of $4,304,757.

Corn was on the free list in the Underwood Act. A duty of 15 cents per bushel was provided for it in the McCumber Act and increased to 25 cents per bushel in the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930. Why? Because in 1929 there was imported into our market 407,085 bushels of corn.

The Underwood Act provided a duty of 20 cents per bushel on flaxseed. The McCumber Act increased it to 40 cents per bushel, and the 1930 act further increased it to 65 cents per bushel. Why? Because in 1929 there were imported into our markets 24,242,905 bushels of flaxseed, 23,120,204 bushels of which came from Argentina, forcing our home producers in their own market to compete with the product of the cheap lands and cheap labor of the Argentine in the sale of this commodity.

Buckwheat came in free under the Underwood Act. The McCumber Act provided for a duty of 10 cents per 100 pounds, increased to 25 cents per 100 pounds in the 1930 act. Why was the rate more than doubled by the 1930 act? Because in 1929, 7,670,688 pounds of buckwheat came into our markets from foreign sources.

Briefly summarizing, in 1929 edible animals with a valuation of $22,183,888 were imported into our home market; meat products valued at $40,893,474; dairy products, $30,414,937; eggs, including dried, frozen, and prepared eggs, yolks and albumen, valued at $8,584,960; $20,004,180 worth of grains and preparations; vegetables and preparations, $47,796,873; fruits valued at $58,558,068; oilseed, $79,335,487; unmanufactured cotton, $53,333,212; wool (including mohair, and so forth, unmanufactured) valued at $87,344,471—representing approximately $450,000,000 worth of competitive farm products in the American market in 1929.

It was to shut out this ever-increasing flood of cheap foreign products that the duties were increased in the existing law. They are denounced as "the robber rates," when in fact they are simply the protective rates imperatively necessary to protect our home market from the flood of cheap foreign products coming in.

The Democratic Party now proposes to appoint a commission of five members, to be known as the International War Debt Commission, with authority to grant a 25-year moratorium to our debtor nations and lower tariff walls to facilitate advantages in trade-all this to enable our debtor nations to pay us in goods which we produce in kind in this country and of which we are already flooded with surpluses. And it is because of those very surpluses now in our midst that the tariff duties on farm products are not effective to raise the prices. They are effective, however, when high enough, to keep cheap foreign products out of this market which otherwise would be shipped in and sold in competition with our own products. Without such rates in the existing law this country would now be flooded with eggs and poultry from China and Japan; with milk, butter, and cheese from Switzerland and Denmark; with lamb, mutton, and wool from Australia; with wheat from Canada; cheap cattle and beef from South America, and all the products of the Even under the "robber-tariff rates" of the existing law products from many foreign countries are overflowing into this market, not because the rates are too high but because in some instances they are still too low to protect against the cheaper money of foreign countries with cheaper labor and raw material.

What we need is not lower rates to increase prices but production limited to our domestic demands, with an increase of money in circulation for higher prices, to enable us to pay our indebtedness with a purchasing power equal to that which we received when we incurred our obligations.

Whether you believe some of the rates of the existing law are too high or too low, the present law affords an effective procedure of revision and adjustment. Under its flexible provisions, anyone can make complaint to a bipartisan tariff commission. Such privilege is even extended to the representatives of all foreign countries, and the commission itself on its own initiative can make an investigation. Upon a complaint the commission affords a speedy hearing, makes a thorough investigation, and reports to the President whether the existing rate is either too high or too low when measured by the standard of the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

The President is then authorized to increase or lower the rate 50 per cent, and the new rate thus recommended becomes immediately effective.

The purpose of this provision is to take the tariff out of politics, to treat it as purely an economic question. The provision has done so. During the two years of its operation only one Democratic Member of Congress has filed a complaint, and that complaint was not that the rates were too high, but too low. Of the 291 investigations, 54 per cent verified the existing rates, increases were made in 16 per cent of the investigations, and decreases in 30 per cent.

This short procedure, nonpartisan, conducted by experts making their impartial investigations, based on findings of fact, permits of early revision and readjustment of rates, ironing out the inequalities and discriminations, and meeting ever-changing conditions. Such are what are referred to as the flexible provisions of the existing law. The Democratic rateless tariff bill would have repealed these flexible provisions, this shortened procedure, and required the commission to make its report direct to Congress, by which the enactment of a separate tariff bill would have been required to fix the rate on each article reported by the commission. Under such procedure during the last two years we would have had 291 separate tariff bills to enact, or more than 1 tariff bill for each day when Congress was in session.

If the alleged exorbitant rates caused our loss in foreign trade, when the Democratic majority passed their rateless tariff bill, they had an opportunity to relieve us from this depression by reducing and repealing the rates. But "we dare not do so under existing conditions," was the reason given by their floor leader.

Our loss in foreign trade, however, has not been any greater than the loss in the domestic trade of the exporting nations. It is not the result of reprisals or retaliation but of the loss of purchasing power, the diversification of their own production, and their enormous expenditures for war purposes requiring increased revenues.

Prior to the increase of our duty on wheat to 42 cents per bushel, a still higher rate prevailed in some European countries. In Italy the import duty on wheat is 73 cents per bushel; in Germany, 42.14 cents per bushel; France, 53.34 cents; Japan, 33.88 cents; Greece, 39.53 cents; Spain, 73.54 cents; Poland, 33.59 cents; Finland, 51.38 cents; Estonia, 52.53 cents.

As a result of the World War and the treaty of Versailles, many new petty states were created. The war diverted former trade channels and forced each nation to produce its own foodstuffs and manufactured products to become self-sustaining, and since such developments have started they have each protected their own interests.

The proposal to meet the grave emergency that confronts us now with a commission to hold international conferences and negotiate the removal of barriers by the granting of moratoria, the cancellation of foreign debts, and the lowering of tariff walls is the Democratic remedy. It would require years to get fairly started on such a "wild-goose chase." It would not furnish food, fuel, clothing, and jobs to our unemployed. It would not increase the price of farm products and restore their purchasing power to their former economic level. Stripped of its senseless verbiage and circumlocution, it is simply a proposal to cancel foreign debts in consideration of lowering our tariff rates to a competitive basis at the expense of the American producer.

In this emergency period of unemployment the Republican Party stands for the slogan, "Trade at home." When you buy a product produced in this country, you have given somebody at home a job and your money remains at home. When you buy a product produced in a foreign country you give the job to foreign labor instead of our own and your money goes abroad. Buy at home and give the jobs to our unemployed and our money to our home people is the sound policy for us to pursue and the only way for us to work ourselves out of this depression. We have amended the Federal reserve act, the Federal land bank act, the intermediate credit act, the agricultural credit corporation act, passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to loosen up and utilize to the limit the currency credit of the country and protect the deposits in banks representing the purchasing power of the country, and made liberal provisions for the financing of crop production for the farmers and the restoration of the purchasing power of farm products. Additional remedial recommendations of the President are now being considered by the committees of Congress for relief to the destitute, employment to the unemployed, and the disposition of surplus farm products in foreign and domestic markets. Given sufficient time this constructive program of remedial legislation in the execution of the policy of this administration will improve and restore conditions to normalcy, with increased prices for farm and labor products and all lines of industry.

No matter how magnificent the vessel, how strongly built, how efficient the crew, how courageous the captain, at some time, somewhere, sooner or later, that vessel and crew will be overtaken by a storm over which they had no control. And so it has been with our ship of state. The world-wide depression, the storm over which we had no control, has overtaken us. It has threatened disaster affecting all of us, but in the exercise of calm, dispassionate judgment, what crew, captain, or ship could have done more to ride out the storm? It is but natural for some timid souls to cry out in alarm and in complaint, but in the exercise of their common sense, as Abraham Lincoln would say, "The American people will cooperate with the captain and crew and sit steady in the boat now headed for the harbor of safety and security from the storms from which we are now emerging."

In this depression this administration has stood steadfast in its adherence to the maintenance of the credit of the Government, the high standards of individual independence in its opposition to the dole, to protect the Government and the integrity of the individual, and in doing so has saved millions upon millions of dollars of the moneys of the taxpayers. It has even refused to participate in international conferences wherein the subjects of reparations, war debts, or tariffs were to be considered. It has notified foreign debtor nations that they must meet the payments of their debts to us when due. It has refused to submit the reduction of our tariff rates to conferences with foreign countries and has stood steadfast in its adherence to the protection of American interests, for the employment of labor, and a home market for the products of the farm. And if, perchance, in the desperate straits of this depression, the temptation to change should prevail, in the language of the great statesman from Maine-

We shall take back with us our ancient glory undimmed by adversity and our ancient honor unsullied by defeat.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whittington].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the purpose of this bill is to extend the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act from public buildings to public works and to improve the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act so as to provide for predetermined wages under the prevailing wage scale. With that purpose I am in sympathy, but I call attention to the fact that the bill goes much farther than that desirable objective, and I refer to both the bill as it passed the Senate and the amended bill as it has been reported to the House.

I suggest that the interests of the Government, as well as the interests of labor and the contractors, should be considered. As I stated a moment ago, this bill provides for predetermined wages in contracts for public works and public buildings. There has been a disposition to extend the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act to all public works, including Federal-aid highway work, river and harbor work, and flood-control work. The tendency is to extend the provisions of the act to all public works in which the Government and the States or local interests may share.

I call attention to the feature of the bill which stipulates not only for the predetermined wages but provides that the Secretary of Labor may at any time, after the contract has been awarded, reeaxamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid and may at any time increase those wages, and the act provides that the Government must pay those increased wages. Of course, there is the complementary stipulation that if wages have decreased the Secretary of Labor would have the right to decrease the wages in the pending contract.

But I assume we are certainly in the very hollow of the greatest of depressions, when labor is probably generally receiving less than it has received at any other time since 1914; and, to be sure, the real hope in stipulating an adequate wage scale is to improve and to better the conditions of labor. So that the practical result of this bill will be that the Secretary of Labor may at any time—not after three months have expired, as intended in the original Senate bill, but at any time—increase the prevailing rate of wages during the pendency of the contract, with the definite provision that the increase must be borne by the Government.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I make bold to say that this bill, with the worthy object of determining in advance the wages to be paid, unless amended materially, will perpetuate the iniquities of the cost-plus system which cost this Government of ours millions and hundreds of millions of dollars during and immediately following the World War.

In an effort to remedy an undesirable and indefinite situation, really in the interest of the contractors of the country, we are in danger at this time, when we are called upon to practice economy and retrenchment, of saddling upon the Government the cost-plus system and thus tremendously increasing the cost of the Government's construction

Mr. Chairman, the practical difficulty is this: If there is an appropriation for $70,000 for the construction of a post office in a city or town and the contract is made for substantially that amount, and during the construction the Secretary increases the cost of labor, complications may easily arise. There may not be sufficient money under the appropriation to pay the contractor. I maintain that such insistence on the part of the contractor himself is short-sighted. It would deter rather than promote public construction.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will be glad to yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CONNERY. We went into that matter thoroughly with reference to wages going up or going down. I am sure the gentleman will appreciate this situation, that if a contractor has been awarded a contract under certain conditions, and suddenly times get better and that contractor, who is working in good faith, who has put in his bid and obtained the contract and probably working on a close margin of profit on a post office, for instance, and across the way all around him in private enterprise, wages begin to go up, unless that man can pay the same wages as the man across the street, he will lose his men or he will go broke on the post office. I am sure the gentleman does not want that to happen.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I get the gentleman's point, but I am speaking now on behalf of the public. The contractor should take the same risk in public as in private construction—materials may advance.

I know the condition. No human system is perfect. I read. The Government will pay more for construction than know the contractor may be called upon to pay more for material and may be called upon to pay more for the other items that go into the project, but I submit that the real heart of this measure, the real purpose of this measure, is to remove the inequalities and the injustices of the Davis-Bacon Act by predetermining wages for the benefit of labor. Wages usually continue, by mutual, if not direct, understanding until the contract is completed. But I also say we ought not to stop construction on public buildings, because there will be no recourse by the contractor except to go to the Court of Claims if the appropriation is insufficient to pay the increased wages. Congress then may or may not make a deficiency or supplemental appropriation. I respectfully urge that the public interest would not be promoted, but public-building projects would be hindered unless we know definitely when the contract is awarded just how much money is going to be spent upon any project, upon any public building, upon any improvement along the Mississippi or the Sacramento Rivers, or on any river or harbor in the country.

The city or State or other local subdivision has an additional interest in this matter, for frequently in river and harbor improvement work the local community contributes to the project; and when the Federal Government makes a contract, it is spending not only Federal money but local money, and those local interests have a perfect right to know how much they will be called upon to contribute, and they should know that at the time the contract is made. The costplus system is perpetuated, having been restored in this bill, and I respectfully submit that public interest and the Government will suffer unless the power to increase wages at the expense of the Government is eliminated under amendments which I propose to offer.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.
Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whence comes the demand for this legis-

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I can not answer; I am not a member of the committee. I understand if the Davis-Bacon Act is amended the contractors advocate this bill. I am familiar with the bill only from my study of it to-day, as I am interested in all public works, especially flood-control work along the Mississippi River.

I am not thinking of the contractor only. What matters it to the contractor if the wages being paid are increased? He is paying more when they go up, but the Government is footing the bill. I am thinking of the interests of the Government in the construction of public works. I urge economy in the expenditure of public funds. The temptation is too great for waste and extravagance. Bureaucracy is perpetuated.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman realizes, of course, that the question of whether wages go up or down rests entirely with a Cabinet officer of the United States Government?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely; but he is directed by the terms of the bill in the event wages have increased to increase the wages the contractor pays without any right of appeal by the contractor, and we have the anomalous situation of the Government practically being called upon to increase the appropriation for every public building and for every public project by the provisions of this bill, a thing which is highly undesirable.

I do not think we ought to prejudice the right to improve the Davis-Bacon Act by including the right to increase wages at the cost of the Government.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will not this bill work both ways. whether wages go up or down?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I said a moment ago, I trust we have reached the bottom of this depression. The practical result will be to increase wages, and he who runs can so subordinate, who can say that the rate of wages has been in private work. I ask that the Government be given the same protection under contracts for public works accorded to individuals, and individuals make no contracts for increased wages-nor would they entertain such a proposition.

Mr. CONNERY. If the provisions of the Davis-Bacon bill were carried into effect, times would be getting better right here in the District of Columbia, because the Government would not be paying 25 cents an hour for certain classes

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In all fairness I may say that the President has said the Government ought to maintain the wages paid heretofore, and there is practically no reduction in public-works construction.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman wants to be fair. They are paying 25 cents an hour in the District of Columbia on public buildings going up along the Avenue.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I was thinking particularly of the order or statement of the President with reference to rivers and harbors and flood-control work, and I know whereof I speak; he has urged that there be no reduction in wages.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman desires to be fair.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARBER. Why not elaborate upon the provisions in the bill that requires the contract to fluctuate up and down with labor costs?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am sorry, but my time has expired. I repeat the practical result will be to increase wages, as the chairman of the committee has repeatedly opposed reduction in either Government wages or salaries. If he thought there would be a decrease of wages, it is my thought he would agree to the amendment I will propose. The contractors would oppose the increase, unless borne by the Government. The provision I would eliminate promotes uncertainty, as the restoration of the cost-plus system would constitute a raid on the Public Treasury.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman. I vield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement the argument just made by the gentleman from Mississippi to this feature of the bill, which I regard as the most objectionable-most objectionable because it is virtually unworkable except as a holdup by contractors of the Government.

I am sympathetically inclined toward the general purpose of the bill, in having originally stipulated in the contract what is to be the prevailing rate of wages, but I have some idea of general business conditions. I know that if you are going to put in force the provision beginning in line 14, page 7, that on all occasions when the prevailing rate of wages shall change that then the contract shall be changed. I know you are going to have a condition that is going to be open to all kinds of abuses. The Secretary of Labor is not going to determine whether wages have gone up or gone down. He must rely upon some subordinate in the field, and that subordinate in the field, I can conceive under some conditions, may be in collusion with the contractor, and you are going to have that subordinate determine whether the wages shall be curtailed or whether they shall be increased.

Suffice it to say that I favor having a contract with the wages stated in it, as is provided in the first section of the substitute. The chance that the rate of wages will change during the life of the contract is remote. If the wages go down, I want the laborer to continue to have the benefit of the higher wages. The contractor will suffer the loss. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the argument that if wages go up the contractor may not be able to secure labor in the labor market to fulfill the contract. That is his obligation. He assumes that obligation when he takes the contract and he takes it with that full knowledge. I am violently opposed—unless the gentleman from Massachusetts can assert some good reason for it-to having the Government held up upon the ipse dixit of some changed from the schedule carried in the original contract. Thereupon the whole contract will be changed and the contractor may be given a preferred status. Not only that, but you are allowing him to go into a determination of an accounting on his books.

Let us be fair. Are we not doing everything labor can ask when we state originally in the contract that the contract shall set forth the prevailing rate of wages? Then the contractor knows what the prevailing rate of wages will be and he must pay that prevailing rate under penalty.

But, as the gentleman from Mississippi has pointed out, do not let it be open to change with every change in the rate of wages, whereby the Government may be held up to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Are we going to permit every contract to be revised, with the contractor acting in collusion, perhaps, with some subordinate of the Department of Labor? I do not say that in all cases collusion will result, but I can conceive that in many cases it will. I think labor should be satisfied with receiving the rate of wages scheduled in the contract, and I think the gentleman is going pretty far in committing the Government to a change in the rate of wages and a change in the contract after a contractor has made it, and the contract manipulated so that, perhaps, it will be to the disadvantage of the Government.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman need have no worry on that score. All the abuses which have been perpetrated under the present act have been decreases in wages and disputes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can conceive of cases where contractors will say they will pay the prevailing rate of wages but through covert means they will not pay that rate, whereas upright contractors who wish to pay the prevailing rate of wages are denied the contract because there are some contractors who will manipulate matters to their advantage.

We are providing in the first part of this section that the contractor shall pay the prevailing rate of wages. These contracts are not going to last for years and years, maybe for only a few months-six months. Then it is the burden of the contractor to pay that rate of wages and the laborer ought to be satisfied with what is stated in the contract as being the prevailing rate of wages. We should give some consideration to Uncle Sam in this matter. As a practical question, I can conceive of all kinds of complications arising where the Government will be put to unlimited expense.

I am sympathetic with the bill. I did not claim time in opposition to the bill because I was sympathetically inclined toward it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows there are ways of bringing about exigencies. During the war there were 6,000 strikes against the Government itself, and you could have a premeditated strike just to bring about this exigency.

Mr. STAFFORD. I appeal to the gentleman. I am sympathetically inclined toward the gentleman's proposal, and I am sympathetically inclined toward labor getting the prevailing rate of wages, but when you put into your bill a provision whereby the prevailing rate of wages may be manipulated in such a way as to be to the disadvantage of the Government I must object. I say the gentleman should hesitate long before he adopts that policy, in view of our experience with the cost-plus contracts during the war.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In sympathy with the same view, let me ask, Is it not true that the gentleman's apprehension will be fortified by the payment of a reasonable wage in

Mr. STAFFORD. The contract states what the wage shall be. The wage is stated specifically, and all contractors base their bids upon that stated wage for the respective character of service. They are obliged to pay that to labor throughout the period of the contract, and we should not have any varying proposal such as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and myself have complained

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, some Members seem to be under the misapprehension that this bill is favored by organized labor. This is not exactly so, because I have here a statement made by Mr. Blumenberg, general representative of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, which appears in the hearings, in which he says:

This part of the bill, if adopted, would enable any contractor or subcontractor to make a request for a new wage scale on any Government work every three months, thus creating chaos on every job during its construction throughout the whole country.

Then he goes on to say that labor is opposed to this provision being in the bill and is opposed to the bill with such a provision in it.

I am very happy to have this brief moment and to be the recipient of the time from the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], who has always been a great friend of the rural letter carrier and other employees of the Government. The gentleman does not understand what is occurring in the Post Office Department, and I want to take this opportunity to explain the change in the Rural Carrier Service, which I am sure he will agree to.

The rural letter carriers, it was explained in this debate, are receiving $1,800 a year and 4 cents per mile for their equipment allowance. This is exactly so. Some suggestion was made that they only worked three or four hours a day.

Mr. BLANTON. I was giving the gentleman what the people were saying about that.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I know the gentleman is very friendly to the employees, and I know he will be pleased to know that ever since 1926 the consolidations of rural routes have resulted in the elimination of 4,300 rural routes and in a saving of $4,500,000 a year, this year over 800 rural routes are being merged at a saving of approximately $900,000.

A rural letter carrier receives $75 for each of the first 24 miles, which is a standard route; but for every additional mile he receives only $35 per mile, a reduction of $40 per

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. I yield the gentleman one additional minute

Mr. MEAD. So that if his mileage is extended far enough he will find himself working at a loss.

So the situation with regard to rural letter carriers is rapidly correcting itself by the policy, not only of this administration but of every administration since 1926; already there has been a large saving, as I have already said, of four and a half million dollars a year.

Within a few years this entire situation will be corrected because in the interim thousands of families and millions of patrons are being given a service in the rural sections of the country that they never enjoyed before and fewer men are doing more work at less money. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has stated that except for one feature of this bill he is in favor of it. Fundamentally I think the bill is sound. I think it is a step in the right direction, and whether the amendment correcting the defect in the bill, as mentioned by the gentleman from New York, is added or not, I am in favor of the bill. I hope the amendment is offered and accepted; but nevertheless the bill fundamentally is sound and I am in favor of it.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] brought out a point in his brief discussion, when the gentleman from Massachusetts yielded to him, regarding the necessity of having some other measure of wage scale adopted than that of the small town where there are no skilled laborers.

The bill provides that the town or village in which the work is being done shall furnish the wage scale. I think in places where there are no wage scales established, in counties that are sparse in population, and where there are no more than possibly a blacksmith and itinerant workers of all sorts-jacks-of-all-trades-it would be almost impossible to arrive at a proper wage scale. For this reason I think an amendment should be put in the bill providing a wage scale which would meet that situation, and I would like to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts on this point.

Mr. CONNERY. Does the gentleman mean where the wages go up or down?

Mr. ARENTZ. No; I am referring to the wage scale in a small village, where, for instance, there is a Government contract. It may be in a sparsely settled county or in a village of a few hundred where there are no laborers except jacks-of-all-trades, men who do plastering one day and carpentering the next, working for $2.50 or $3 a day.

Now, in these small towns where there is no wage scale, how will that be determined?

Mr. CONNERY. The only practical way the committee found was that if you had a small town between two large cities they would take the prevailing wage scale of those two cities.

Mr. ARENTZ. Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts answer the gentleman from New York by saying that the outstanding illustration would be Boulder Dam?

Mr. CONNERY. I said there was an instance where we would have to go 500 miles-

Mr. ARENTZ. The nearest metropolitan area there is Los Angeles, and at certain times of the year the city is filled with tourists and carpenters and bricklayers in a nonunion town, and naturally you might have a wage scale of three and a half or four dollars a day for bricklayers and carpenters. I think it is unfair.

Mr. CONNERY. The committee went into that matter thoroughly, and we could find no language, no word that would cover the case of Boulder Dam.

Mr. ARENTZ. I had a conference with Mr. Roop, Director Bureau of the Budget, and members of the interdepartmental committee, and they adopted the idea that Salt Lake and Los Angeles would be the two nearest metropolitan areas, and they compromised between the two cities.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ARENTZ. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman think that it is proper for us to confine this bill to contracts as small as $500?

Mr. ARENTZ. Along that line-

Mr. McDUFFIE. It seems to me perfectly ridiculous.

Mr. ARENTZ. I do not think it is.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. ARENTZ. I yield. Mr. CONNERY. The reason for that is that the painters do not come in under the present law. They do not come in under the prevailing wage clause.

Mr. ARENTZ. There might be a subcontractor putting in a foundation for a post office where the amount would not be more than $500.

I think this bill should be amended so that regardless of what the wage scale may be all men should be paid. When the United States gives a contract for the construction of a post office or a public building the men should be paid regardless of what happens. In Las Vegas a contractor furnished the names of certain bondsmen in a Texas city. The Government went to this town in Texas and found that the men lived there, but no inquiry was made as to whether they signed as bondsmen or not. They were not bondsmen in fact. Then the men did the work, and when it came time to pay them, they received a "rubber" check. The names on the bond were forgeries. This bill should provide for bonds for a suitable amount, legitimate bonds, to protect the workmen.

Mr. FIESINGER. Does not the Government investigate the responsibility of the bondsmen?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes; but they do not investigate whether they signed the bond or not.

At the proper time during the consideration of the bill I will offer an amendment which I believe will correct the evil

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have secured this short time for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. It is very clear to my mind that in most of the cities of the United States union labor is trying to do the fair thing, but I am thoroughly convinced that in some cities the racketeering end of union labor has been in control. I want to know if the union scale is to govern in all matters in this bill, particularly in those cities where I am convinced the racketeering end of union labor has taken control.

Mr. CONNERY. The Secretary of Labor is the final arbiter, and I do not believe that he has taken the union scale absolutely. He has taken the prevailing rate of wage in those cities.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then it would not be the intention of the chairman of the committee that the union scale in all cases would be the prevailing rate?

Mr. CONNERY. Personally, that is what I would like to see

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It would not be so construed in the bill if it is passed?

Mr. CONNERY. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Labor and I am against this bill. The reason I am against it is this: The committee for several months considered both sides of this proposition. The labor fellows themselves were not, at the beginning, agreed on one view or another. Certain Supreme Court decisions were taken under consideration by the committee and the matter was discussed back and forth on both sides, some being for and some against. The bill was finally brought out on a very close vote, but properly so. But when the final showdown came organized labor stood unanimously against this bill, and I am against it, because when the men who have studied the interests of labor for years, after weighing any matter fully, come to a unanimous decision they are certainly more apt to be right than any man who has not given it that consideration. If I had sufficient time, which I have not in two minutes, I would be able to go into the matter and give the viewpoint of organized labor on this subject. I think it is fairly well known that wherever organized labor has asked and received consideration at my hands it has been friendly consideration, and it is in this case. Because of that I am going to vote against the bill.

Mr. GILBERT. Can the gentleman tell who is sponsoring

Mr. KELLER. The members of the committee itself tried to get at a reasonable, rational way of doing this thing all over the country to the benefit of the country as well as to the benefit of labor. The committee did its best to get together on the matter. The committee accepted this bill, but in the final analysis organized labor unanimously rejected the bill. And I accept their unanimous decision as more rational than the judgment of any one man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to digress for just a moment or two, I desire to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that yesterday the House passed a relief bill of heroic magnitude. The Senate committee has to-day reported a relief bill, and unless we are very careful we may find ourselves in a legislative jam. I think I voice the sense and sentiment and desire of a majority of my colleagues when I say that Congress should not adjourn until 10 days after a complete and real relief measure is presented to the President of the United States. We can not feed hungry people or alleviate distress with a legislative alibi that we passed the bill, but that unfortunately it received a pocket veto. The entire question is endangered by hurrying or precipitating adjournment, leaving a relief measure in a legislative deadlock or at the mercy of a pocket veto. So I think it is well that the country should know and that the other body should know that there is a majority in this House willing to stand by and resist adjournment until the two Houses of Congress come to an agreement on a real, constructive relief measure of sufficient magnitude, and to remain for 10 days after such a measure is passed so that we may exercise our legislative prerogative in the event that the measure should be vetoed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman have any hopes in view of the vote yesterday that there could be obtained in this House a two-thirds vote to override the veto of a relief bill such as was passed yesterday?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes; I do, because I think that the condition is so extreme that when it comes to a final declaration I can not imagine or conceive that either politics or personal views or any other reason could possibly prevent the enactment into law of a real relief measure.

Mr. BLANTON. If we would take that $100,000,000 to feed the Belgians instead of Americans, it would probably not be vetoed.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. This time we will feed the Americans if we have to stay here all summer.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman recognizes that this is a Senate bill that we are now considering. What is the gentleman's position on this bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am going to vote for it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What does the gentleman think about the business before the House?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am talking about the business of Mr. KELLER. Is it not probable that within 10 days or 1 day after Congress adjourns without making proper provision for direct relief, or 1 day after the President should veto a bill like that, we would be called back post haste to do the very thing that the gentleman is asking us to do at this time?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let us prevent that and stay on the job where we belong. I yield back the remainder of my

Mr. BLANTON. I yield two minutes, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Gilbert].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no special knowledge of this bill, but, unlike the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Arenzz], I think it is fundamentally unsound, and for that reason I am against it.

The three classes in this country that now need help are the farmers, the taxpayers, and the unemployed. All three of them are prejudiced by this bill. This legislation, if it is effective, will be a slight disadvantage to all three of those classes, and an advantage, if an advantage, to the only class that is fully capable of protecting themselves; that is, industrial labor, highly and efficiently organized.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] said that laborers on Pennsylvania Avenue were getting 25 cents an hour. I say to you Members from the large cities that that is twice as much as the laborers are getting on the farms. They are not getting 25 cents an hour. They work from sunup until sundown and receive as low as 75 cents or a dollar a day, and there are 40,000,000 people in the United States living on the farms.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky two additional minutes.

Mr. GILBERT. The bill which was passed yesterday was for the purpose of spending a lot of money, supposedly for unemployment. This bill will put fewer people to work, if it is passed, than will be put to work if it is not passed. The trouble with agriculture in this country is by reason of the industrial structure that is continually being erected higher and higher by legislation upon it. This does not amount to much—one little bill—but the farmers must pay the taxes and pay the additional cost to pay these additional wages, but they do not get any benefits under this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I would like for the gentleman to bring out the proportion of Federal tax which the farmers and laboring men pay, if he will.

Mr. GILBERT. I would gladly do so if I had the information, but frankly I do not have the information. Perhaps the gentleman can supply it.

Mr. KELLER. Well, I can, but I did not want to take the gentleman's time.

Mr. GILBERT. I would be glad to have the gentleman supply the information.

Mr. KELLER. The difficulty thrown around us at the present time does not come from the fact that the farmers and the poor man pay taxes, because they do not, but the big ones know very well that they pay the tax, and the attempt to discredit Congress has come from that source, because they do not want to pay this tax. The only thing which the farmer and the laboring man gets is a little comeback, but they do not pay that tax.

Mr. GILBERT. I can not agree with the gentleman that they do not pay that tax. They do pay that tax indirectly. They are exploited by people who make fortunes out of them and take that money to pay the tax. I can demonstrate, if I had the time, that the money paid by many great companies and wealthy individuals is made by and taken from the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding about the effect of this bill. About two years ago, or a little more than that, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Sproul, introduced bills along the line of providing for the payment of the prevailing scale of wages on Government work. The Committee on Labor held extensive hearings on those bills and reported out a bill which was not enacted into law. It was not considered at that session of Congress.

A little over a year ago the Government departments prepared what is known as the Davis-Bacon bill. The solicitors of the various Government departments drafted the Davis-Bacon bill. It was introduced in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] and in the Senate by Senator Davis, of Pennsylvania. Both the labor organizations and Government officials asked the Committee on Labor to report that bill without amendment. At the time the bill was considered, I personally favored predetermination of the wage scale, which was to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, but on account of the fact that all parties interested did not want to amend the bill, and due to the fact that the representatives of the various departments who drafted the bill said that they would not stand behind it if any amendment was offered to it, I supported the bill, which is now the Davis-Bacon law, without any amendment. I still think that the wages to be paid should be predetermined, and that is primarily what this bill provides. It changes the Davis-Bacon law, which is now on the statute books, to provide that the Secretary of Labor, just as he does now, shall determine the wage scale to be paid on Government contracts, but that he shall do it before the specifications are drawn, and before the bids are received, instead of fixing them after the contractor has signed his contract and given a bond.

The gentleman from Texas seems to think that the defeat of this bill would have some effect on a certain controversy in Washington as to what carpenters shall receive. It does not make any difference whether this bill is passed or defeated in so far as that controversy is concerned. In the first place, that controversy has arisen under an existing contract, which was entered into under the Davis-Bacon Act, and could not be affected by a new statute. In the second place, this law provides for the prevailing scale of wages. So it does not change the wages to be paid at all. It simply changes the time when the Secretary of Labor, a Cabinet official of this Government, shall fix that wage scale. That is the only thing it does that amounts to anything.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is correct in his interpretation, certainly the Government becomes liable the minute the Secretary of Labor ascertains that higher wages should be paid, even though the wages are predetermined before the contract is let.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct, but he came in after I had made a part of my argument with reference to another part of the bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have no personal objection to taking out of the bill the provision for the raising and lowering of the wage scale, as advocated by the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I do recognize the fact, however, that it may create a hardship on contractors in certain instances. For instance, take the case of the House Office Building, which has been in course of construction for over three years to my certain knowledge, and I do not know how much longer. If conditions had been reversed and wages had been going up, the contractor would have had a hard time retaining his labor; he would have lost a lot of money on it. Since wages have gone down I have no doubt he has profited at the expense of the men working on the job.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. RAMSPECK. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman please make it clear. if he will, why the committee substituted the figures $500 as the amount of the contract for the figure $5,000, originally carried in the Senate bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is very clear to me for this reason. There are many subcontracts, and this applies to subcontracts that are for small amounts. Most of the painting and decorating contracts are for small amounts, less than $5,000, and they have been outside the scope of the Davis-Bacon bill. I can not see any reason why, if you are going to apply the Davis-Bacon law to one contract, you should not apply it to all contracts, to a contract of $500 as well as to a contract of $5,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I had the idea, if the gentleman pleases, that the small contract would be merged in the large contract. It is all a part of the original contract, as a general rule, is it not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Our effort is to cover the whole thing. We want to cover both of them.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Would not both be covered without coming down to such a small figure? It seems to me the figure is so small it makes it ridiculous.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not think so.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true under the terms of the bill, as appears from the last section of the bill, that you do not even except as much as a contract for $500 on river and harbor and flood-control work? All that has got to be predetermined, and you would have to get that report

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think that all contracts ought to be covered.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] raised some question about increasing and lowering wages. Of course the wages to be paid in every instance are determined by the Secretary of Labor. Certainly the gentleman from New York would not doubt that the Secretary of Labor, a member of his own party, would protect the Government's interest along that line.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The debate, though, indicated that according to the way the Secretary of Labor feels about it he would require the union scale of wages.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, he has not done that so far in all instances. I can say he has not done it in some instances. Mr. BLANTON. In what instances has he not done it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I could not give the specific instances. Mr. BLANTON. I do not think the gentleman could name such instances.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not say I could name any specific instance, but there is no doubt he has done so in some cases. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the reason I am supporting this bill.

The representatives of labor organizations asked our committee in January to put teeth in the Davis-Bacon Act. We held hearings on that subject. We appointed a subcommittee to consider it, and during that consideration somebody secured an Executive order from the President of the United States attempting to add to the Davis-Bacon Act. Personally I do not think it is worth the paper it is written on. I do not think the President has any authority to add anything to a statute passed by Congress; but it puts the contractors in the position where they have to agree to the cancellation of their contracts if they are charged with violation of the prevailing wage scale and that charge is sustained by the Secretary of Labor. The result was that the surety company said to the contractor: "We are not going to insure your job under those conditions." That leaves the contractor in the position where he has to bid blindly, not knowing what wages he is going to be required to pay by the Government, and yet he has got to furnish a surety bond, and the Secretary of Labor can come in after he has done that, after he has gotten his contract, and raise the wage scale on him and he is the loser. That is not fair to the contractor.

I want to be fair to labor, and I think this bill is fair to labor. I asked every witness who appeared before the committee if he could point out any logical reason why labor would not be as well protected by predetermination as by afterdetermination, and not a single one of them gave me any answer that appealed to me as logical.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet, might I not ask, are not most of the labor unions in Washington against the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Absolutely. The representatives of the American Federation of Labor in Washington are all against it. However, many local union officials throughout the country do favor predetermination.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, why is the gentleman trying to pass it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Because I think it is a fair and just

I think it is the duty of Congress to take care of the rights of contractors who bid on these jobs, and to take care of the rights of the surety companies who insure the contracts just as it is our duty to take care of the interests of the laborers who work on the job. In my opinion, this bill will not take away from labor anything. I believe that it will further protect those who work on Government contracts. It will stop those few contractors who have been profiting by paying very low wages, from operating with an advantage, as compared with the contractor who is fair to

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to hear the gentleman say

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is the reason I am supporting this bill. I think it is fair to labor; I think it is fair to the Government; I think it is fair to the contractors, and I think not to pass it would leave the contractors in a position | in 15 years emanate from the lips of the gentleman from where they are not being fairly treated. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself four minutes. This very unwise legislation that will cost our Government millions of dollars is the biggest argument we can offer to prove the fact that we ought to do two things. One is, we ought to pass the bonus bill and complete our business in the Senate, and then we ought to adjourn sine die and go home.

I want to show you that we are powerless to do anything else except pass foolish pieces of legislation like this from now on until we adjourn. If we had a properly organized Senate, that would pass the kind of bills we need, and if we had a good Democrat in the White House to sign them, we could pass important legislation that would save hundreds of millions of dollars for American citizens.

I want to commend the splendid speech that the distinguished outlawed gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden] made here last Saturday, outlawed, if you please, by the Republican Party, but not by anybody else in the United States. Let me call your attention to one or two things of great value he said that we ought to be correcting right now. I read to you from his speech on page 12032 of the Congressional Record. He said:

Hundreds of millions, perhaps billions, of dollars have been diverted from the public funds by practices which could not exist without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury.

If the tax laws had been enforced, there would be no need for

He said:

I have called these discoveries to the personal attention of Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, and to Mr. Ogden L. Mills, the present incumbent of that office. I have not been able to discover in either of these gentlemen any disposition to correct existing evils, to collect back taxes, or to take any steps at all to bring this condition to an end.

He said:
Individuals and corporations who should pay large taxes not only escape full payment of their just share of the expenses of government but are also the recipients of huge tax refunds which the greater part of the sums they do pay. There return to them the greater part of the sums they do pay. There exists what amounts to an alliance between tax evaders, attorneys, certain public accountants, and Treasury officials which operates to exempt from taxation those best able to pay and shifts the burden of governmental expense to the shoulders of those least

That distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the man who has been outlawed by the Republican organization, further said that such taxes not paid by big concerns and which are being refunded aggregate about a billion dollars, and he said:

Any large income whose possessor is part of the system can and does escape taxation through the operation of the alliance to which I have already referred.

That is why you find all of his post offices being taken away from him. He has been telling the truth on his party. That is why you find that he has been threatened with losing his committee assignments. They do not like what he says. That is why you have the Republican leaders in the Senate trying to dictate to him, but, thank God, from Pennsylvania there comes a stalwart Republican, brave and unscared, who stands up and defies them all. [Applause.] He says that as long as he is a Representative of the people in the House of Representatives he is going to speak his honest sentiments. He tells them where they can go, which is a place not so cool as the State of Texas is in the winter time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I did want to yield my two remaining minutes to a colleague, but I must use them myself.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman think that will be frankable through the mail this fall during the campaign?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this: That I have heard some of the best speeches from this floor that I have heard Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden]. He stood up here honest and square, absolutely fearless. He stood foursquare coming from a big Republican district in Pennsylvania, with his primary facing him, with his party getting out a prominent woman to try to defeat him, and he bravely denounced abuses in Government from the highest to the lowest. Yes; he criticized the President.

When has the President of the United States become so big that he can not be criticized when he deserves it, and God knows the present occupant of the White House deserved what the gentleman said about him. I take my hat off to you, McFadden. I am glad to know that you overwhelmingly defeated every opponent you had in the State of Pennsylvania. I want you to remember this, that when a man stands foursquare for the people and his Government he has nothing to fear from elections. All the forces of hell can not beat him. You keep on as you have been working and you will always get proper committee assignments in this House, no matter from which side of the aisle they may come.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. The issue in that race in Pennsylvania seemed to be as to which one was the strongest against the President and so the gentleman won.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly; and Mac, you will always win as long as you stand against corruption and for right and justice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] brought up the proposition of labor being against this bill. I dislike to touch upon this subject, and I did not intend to speak on it at all, but I am going to tell you frankly just what the situation is and then let you use your own judgment on the bill.

The representatives of organized labor came to us when we started these hearings in January and said they wanted teeth put into the Davis-Bacon bill by way of a penalty, in order to do away with all the disputes they were having and all the troubles they were having with the contractors. We started hearings on the bill. As soon as we did this the representatives of the building trades, after a conference with Secretary Doak, made a deal with the Secretary whereby, if the President of the United States would issue an executive order on the Davis-Bacon bill they would be against any further legislation on the matter by the Committee on Labor.

Then we said, "All right; even though it is Republican politics you are playing, if labor does not want this, we will not favor it," and we did not do anything further after the executive order came out.

Then the contractors went over to the Senate and the Metcalf bill passed the Senate unanimously after an amendment offered by Senator La Follette on the constitutionality of it was agreed to. The bill came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Labor by the Speaker.

From the start I believed it was a good bill. I believe to-day it is a good bill, and regardless of the fact that representatives of organized labor in Washington are against the bill, I intend to support it and to fight for it, because it will be of real benefit to labor.

In conclusion let me say that the gentleman from California, Mr. Welch, and I went down to see President Green. the head of the American Federation of Labor, and asked him about this bill. We talked there at that conference with other representatives of the building trades. Mr. Mc-Grady and Mr. Roberts and Mr. Michael McDonough were present, and Mr. Green said, "I can not see anything wrong with this bill. It seems to me to be a fine bill for labor." The next day Mr. Green changed his mind and said he would stand behind the building-trades organization and would be against the bill. I believe now that Mr. Green is opposed to the bill merely to avoid friction in his organization and that his own personal belief is that it is a good bill

I say to the House that this is one of the best bills that ! was ever brought up in Congress for labor, and I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this bill becomes law, no President can set aside the law, but he can set aside an Executive order; is not that correct?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not quite get the point of the gentleman's question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this bill is passed and becomes law, it will take the legislative branch to set it

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the President can set aside an Executive order after it has been issued.

Mr. CONNERY. That is absolutely true; and if he wished to do that, unless we pass the bill, labor will be worse off than before; and there was grave doubt in the committee as to the legality of the Executive order and as to whether the President could write legislation by an Executive order.

Now, when we say that labor is against this bill, this means the representatives of labor here in Washington. In my home district, from the reports I get, labor is in favor of this bill, and the State Federation of Labor of Rhode Island came out publicly and commended Senator Metcalf for sponsoring the bill, which was passed unanimously by the Senate.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. FOSS. Is the Department of Labor in favor of the

Mr. CONNERY. No; the Secretary of Labor is against the bill.

Mr. DYER. It is a good bill, is it not?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes: it is a good bill.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The amendment of the Davis-Bacon Act, in the first section, wipes out the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act in so far as all contracts that are now in existence are concerned.

Mr. CONNERY. No; this applies to all public works.

Mr. TABER. No; it repeals the provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act.

Mr. CONNERY. It amends the Davis-Bacon Act and applies to all public works.

Mr. TABER. That is not what the amendment states.

Mr. CONNERY. I think the distinguished gentleman is wrong. I hope the bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors or subcontractors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

"That the advertised specifications for every contract in excess of $500 for construction, alteration, and/or repair, including painting and decorating, of public buildings or public works, except shipbuilding, in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, or in any city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State or Territories to which the United States or the District of Columbia is to become a party and which requires or involves the employment of mechanics or laborers shall contain a provision stating the prevailing rate of wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor for various grades of mechanics and laborers for work of a similar nature in the District of Columbia, the Canal Zone, or in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of any State or Territories in which all or the principal part of the particular contract work is located, and every contract for the construction of public buildings or public works, except shipbuilding, to which the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Panama Canal shall become a party shall contain a stipulation that the contracts and his subcontractors shall peak the mechanics and laborers and his subcontractors and his subcontractors shall never the mechanics and laborers. shall become a party shall contain a stipulation that the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay the mechanics and laborers employed directly on the site of such work at not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications. The Secretary of Labor shall, from time to time, reexamine the pre-valling rate of wages being paid to mechanics and/or laborers for work of a similar character in the District of Columbia, the Canal

Zone, city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State or Territories in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found to be increased or decreased from that stated in the specifications and made a part of the contract, he shall notify the contractor thereof, and the contractor and his subcontractors shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification. In event the rate of wages contained in the specifications is so increased, an amount equal to the amount of such increase in wages in any one month shall be paid at the end of such month to the contractor by the United States upon a satisfactory showing by the contractor as to the amount thereof, and in the event of a decrease in the rate of wages, the contract price shall be decreased decrease in the rate of wages, the contract price shall be decreased by the amount of such decrease in wages, and such decrease in the contract price shall be computed on the basis of satisfactory evidence submitted by the contractor. The books and pay rolls of the contractor and his subcontractors shall be so kept as to show the actual wages paid mechanics and laborers, and shall be open to inspection by an authorized officer or employee of the

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read by sections and the Chair will inform the gentleman that it is all one section down to and including line 21, on page 10.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a motion to strike out the enacting clause is a preferential motion and is in order at all times after the reading of the enacting clause. This has been held in the House many times. This motion is not an amendment to the section; it is an amendment to the enacting clause itself. The motion is to strike out the enacting clause, not the section. There are two kinds of such motions, if the Chair will permit, one to strike out the enacting clause and the other, which is a motion that is sometimes offered, is to strike out all after the enacting clause. The second motion must be made after the first section has been read, like any other amendment, but a motion to strike out the enacting clause is addressed only to the enacting clause and nothing else in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order until after the section has been read, and this particular section is not concluded until line 21, page 10, has been read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood consent was given in the House for the consideration of the committee amendment in the Committee of the Whole as an original bill. If that is the order of the House, then I respectfully submit that we are considering this amendment as an original bill, and it should be considered section by section as reported.

The CHAIRMAN. That is exactly what the committee is doing, and the motion that is being proposed is not in order until line 21, page 10, has been read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I always respectfully submit to the ruling of the Chair, however much I may disagree with the ruling.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the very substitute which we are considering under the order of the House as an original bill comprises four sections. The first section ends where the Clerk has just finished reading, line 15, page 8, and I respectfully contend that under the order of the House providing for the consideration of this bill we are now entitled to consider it section by section, and the motion is in order. It is not being considered as one amendment.

If the order of the House had not been made, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, after the first section of the Senate bill had been read, had moved a substitute with notice that he would move to strike out subsequent sections of the original Senate bill, that would be the procedure. But we are proceeding under a special order. The very purpose of the order was to consider the substitute amendment section by section, and not as an entirety.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, we are considering the amendment as a bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the order of the House. Mr. MICHENER. If we consider the amendment as an original bill, there would be no question but that this would be a proper place to make the motion.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no question about it under the rules of the House.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I want to call attention to the fact that there are two sections in the bill-section 2, page 8, line 16, and section 2 of the Bacon Act-which are being amended. The first section has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. There are practically two sections to this committee amendment. The first section is concluded on page 10, line 21, which amends certain sections of the Bacon Act. There is no motion in order until the Clerk reads to line 21, page 10.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there has been an order of the House that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall consider the committee amendment as an original bill. If such is the fact, you must look at it as an original bill, which comprises four sections and not one section.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, in all deference to the statement of the Chairman, this is not an amendment to section 1 or any other section of the Davis Act. It amends the entire act, and not one particular section.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the suggestion of the Chair is correct. This is a complete act proposed by way of substitute for the act of March 3, 1931. This is one section—although, it is true, it consists of several subsections-but the whole bill is one section as a substitute for the act of March 3, 1931. Even if it were an original bill and did not come as a substitute, we would proceed to read in the manner suggested by the chair.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I take issue with what the gentleman from Illinois has just said. I think the whole thing depends on the unanimous-consent request submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts and agreed upon. I agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois, provided there had been no unanimous-consent agreement. But, as I recall, the unanimous-consent request was that the amendment be considered as an original bill.

Now, the original bill consists of several sections; and under the general rules of the House, when you have read the first section, the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas is in order. We have read one section of the bill, not of an amendment.

Now, the distinction is, if you are considering an amendment as an amendment, the Chair is correct in his observation. But if you are considering this amendment as a bill, then the fact that there are two or more sections would be given the same weight as if it were an original bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: In the original bill, the Senate bill, there are but two sections. The first section consists of three sections or subsections, and the second section appears on page 6. beginning in line 8. Will the gentleman say that under that condition you would read a portion of section 1 or subsection 1, and then subsection 2, and then subsection 3, and that you would not read the whole section? The committee amendment follows the framework of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. The Chair so rules. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I think that such a precedent established here would be detrimental to good order in this House, and I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, not having had opportunity to make observations in respect to the matter.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair reserve his decision and hear the gentleman from New Jersev.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to five minutes in his own right on his appeal.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. LEHLBACH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard on the appeal?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I regret this situation extremely, but let us not confuse the issue by referring to subsections of the Senate bill. Suppose there was no Senate bill here. Suppose it was a House bill, an original bill, what would there be before us? Nothing whatever except the italicized parts of this bill printed here. If this bill, which is the part printed in italics, were considered alone, is there anybody who would say when section 1 was read, when section 2 was read, when section 3 was read, or when section 4 was read that each was not subject to amendment? And by special order that was precisely the procedure that was directed by the House to be followed by the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole is bound to follow the direction of the House. I think there is no question but what that is the correct interpretation of the rule and the order of the House. Having had this opportunity, and there being in the RECORD the protests of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and myself, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the original request and order, as made upon the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, read from the RECORD. The RECORD will show what the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts was before we went into the Committee of the Whole. I think that will clarify the situation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I think I can settle this thing if the House will hear me for a moment. On page 10, line 22, where it reads "Sec. 4," it ought to be "Sec. 2." The purpose of the committee is to correct that typographic error and to take out the quotation marks from section 2. There are only two sections in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the order that was agreed to:

Mr. Connery. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor, I call up the bill S. 3847, to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings, and ask unanimous consent that in consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the substitute recommended by the Committee on Labor may be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment.

Since the appeal of the gentleman from New Jersey is withdrawn, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Any contractor or subcontractor who fails to pay not less than the rate of wages stated in the advertised specifications and made a part of the contract, or not less than any rate of wages subsequently ordered in writing by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with section 1 of this act, or who, after making proper payment, requires a laborer or mechanic to refund any part of the wages so paid, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $10 per day per laborer or mechanic for every day any laborers or mechanics are paid less than such prevailing rate of wages, and for each such refund required from any mechanic or laborer, shall forfeit to the United States a sum not less than five times the forfeit to the United States a sum not less than five times the value thereof. Any laborer or mechanic employed on any such work who accepts a rate of wages less than that prescribed in the advertised specifications, or in any subsequent revision thereof made by the Secretary of Labor, or who makes any refund to the contractor or subcontractors shall, within 10 days after such payment or refund, file a sworn statement with the Secretary of Labor setting forth the facts, and any amounts to be forfeited as provided in this section shall be deducted by the Comptroller General from any sums due the contractor from the United States eral from any sums due the contractor from the United States, or if nothing remains due the contractor, such amounts may be recovered by the United States as a debt in a suit at law against either the contractor and his surety or his subcontractors. The amounts so forfeited or recovered shall be applied, first, to the payment to the laborers and mechanics of any difference between the amounts found by the Comptroller General to have been paid them and the prevailing rate of wages, or of the amounts which such laborers and mechanics were required to refund, and the balance shall be everyed into the Treetimes and the payment of the payment ance shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Sec. 3. When any of the departments or independent establishments of the United States, including the District of Columbia, perform work by Government plant and hired labor which could perform work by Government plant and hired labor which could have been performed under contract, but not including work in arsenals or navy yards, or work performed by the Panama Canal, such departments and establishments, including the District of Columbia, shall also pay not less than the prevailing rate of wages as established by the Secretary of Labor at the time the work is undertaken. The Secretary of Labor shall, from time to time, reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to laborers and mechanics for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State, Territories, the District of Columbia, or the Canal Zone, in which all or a principal part of the work is located, and if such rate is found by him to have increased or decreased he shall notify the head of the department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government concerned, who shall pay not less than the rate of wages stated in said notification from the beginning of the next pay period following the date of receipt of such notification.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the preferential motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is said on this floor by the committee that organized labor is against this bill. I am glad to find myself in accord with organized labor once

This is a bad bill. It will make the cost plus 10 per cent contracts that we know something about look like 30 cents, so far as extravagance is concerned. It will make every public work that this Government engages in during this time of depression cost at least double what otherwise it would cost. If organized labor is against this bill, it is right, because it is against a bad bill, and organized labor ought to be upheld in its attitude against the bill. I am always with organized labor when it is right. I am glad to find myself working shoulder to shoulder with organized labor in opposing the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Is the gentleman in accord with organized labor in this proposition, their opposition being to the bill that they made a deal with the Secretary of Labor, and that is their real reason for being against the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think that they could make any kind of a wrong deal with the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor is against the bill. I am rather impressed with the honesty and integrity and the ability of the Secretary of Labor. I rather like the gentleman that is now down there in charge of the Department of Labor, and now I find myself working in accord with him. I find myself working in accord with some of his bureaus. I am in entire accord with Mr. Alpine, who is in charge of the United States public employment offices scattered throughout the United States. I think he is doing a splendid work.

I understand that just as soon as Congress adjourns the President is going to withdraw many of the United States employment offices and suspend all of their activities. Is he not in favor of the splendid work that they are doing? I wish that he could have the report from United States employment offices in my State and see what splendid, valuable work they have been doing, the thousands of men that they have been placing in employment, giving them a chance to make a living for their families. If he could see that, he would not talk about withdrawing one of them; and if I thought he was going to withdraw them, I would vote against adjournment from now until December to keep him from doing it. This is a bad bill. You can stop it by striking out the enacting clause. I have done my duty about it, and I leave it with you. The following is the letter the Secretary of Labor wrote the committee condemning this bill:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Office of the Secretary, Washington, June 7, 1932.

WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,

Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your communication concerning Senate bill 3847, as amended, and which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Labor and with the recommendation that it pass. You ask for my reaction to this bill, as amended.

I do not think there is necessity at this time for the enactment of the amended bill. Under the circumstances, I believe it would of the amended bill. Under the circumstances, I believe it would be unwise to make any changes in the present prevailing wage rate law which has been on the statute books for 14 months and has contributed substantially to the stabilization of wage rates on the construction of Federal buildings. It must be remembered that it took several months after the law became effective for contractors and employees, as well as Government agencies affected, to become familiar with the provisions and operation of the legislation and to adapt themselves to the new procedure.

Under the proposed legislation prospective contractors, with the wage rates predetermined and the costs of material and other requirements available from material dealers and estimators, would be in position where little if any skill or experience other than financial responsibility would be required in bidding for and performing contracts with the Government for the construction, alteration, or repair of public buildings and public works. Sub-teration, or repair of public buildings and public works. Sub-letting on all, or practically all, of the work to subcontractors would increase and lead to innumerable controversies. That fact and the provision in the bill for determinations of wage rates from time to time would lead to endless disputes during the performance of the contract and in connection with final settlements.

In lowering the minimum cost involved from $5,000 to $500 and extending the legislation to cover the construction of public works except ship building and providing for the reexamination of rates of wages from time to time, the proposed legislation would mul-tiply many times the cost of administration both in the Department of Labor and the various other Government agencies concerned. It would be impossible for the Secretary of Labor to handle the great number of additional cases which would be presented for wage determination with the present force, and at this time it would be impossible to estimate the number of additional cases.

tional employees which would be required.

Section 2 appears to divide responsibility between the general contractor and the subcontractor instead of leaving the general contractor directly responsible, and the section appears to require that statements as to failures as to prevailing rates and otherwise to obey the prevailing rate laws would have to be filed with the Secretary of Labor and that amounts with respect to which there has been a failure be deducted by the Comptroller General from any sums otherwise due the contractors. In fact, the legislation is so involved and appears capable of so many constructions that it is believed that more time should be given to a fuller consideration of the entire matter before any changes are made in the present law.

Section 3 appears to bring within the purview of the act the rate of pay to permanent employees engaged in construction, alteration, or repair work on public buildings and public works where the cost is in excess of $500, if the work could be done by contract. That provision would open up controversies as to whether various kinds of work could be performed by contract, thereby upsetting established rates and standards and methods in use for permanent employees of the Government engaged in such work. The question is also raised as to whether the section does not also apply to other kinds of work now performed by regular employees but which could be done by contract.

In view of the very satisfactory results being accomplished under the present law, particularly at this time, it would appear to me unwise to pass the amendments until a necessity arises for change in the present law and the methods by which it is now being enforced through the assistance of the Executive order issued on January 19, 1932.

Very respectfully yours,

W. N. Doak, Secretary, Section 3 appears to bring within the purview of the act the

W. N. DOAK, Secretary.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take up so much of the time of the House. I have tried to make the situation clear to the membership of the House. On the one hand we have the legislative representatives of the building trades of the American Federation of Labor against this bill. I do not think that one member of the Committee on Labor can stand up here and give one real, valid objection to this bill that could be raised by the building-trades representatives when they came before the committee. Here on the one hand you have these representatives, individual men, representing the building-trades department of the American Federation of Labor, who are against the bill, telling the president of the American Federation frankly that their opposition to the bill is because they had promised the Secretary of Labor they would not be in favor of the bill if the Executive order came through.

On the other hand, there is the entire State labor organization of the State of Rhode Island, coming out in a public statement indorsing the stand of Senator Metcalf, of Rhode Island, for introducing this bill in the Senate, which passed the Senate unanimously. My opinion is, frankly, that I believe organized labor throughout the United States, and that means the unions in all of your districts, are going to be in favor of this bill, and to my mind it is just an individual proposition of the legislative representatives of the building trades who are opposed to the bill because they promised the Secretary of Labor they would be opposed to it, and that is all.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is consistent and has been ever since he has been here, a friend of organized labor.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I think I am as good a friend of organized labor to-day as these legislative representatives who made a deal with Mr. Doak, and I can not, in conscience, give up my own personal belief that this is good legislation for labor.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to follow the gentleman in this matter, as I have in other labor matters.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that this bill is a bill affecting both the employer of labor and labor, and that both the employer of labor and labor are in favor of Mr. CONNERY. I believe that is true.

Mr. DYER. It is a perfect bill.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CONNERY. I yield.
Mr. McGUGIN. Is it not a matter of fundamental principle with organized labor that it is unalterably opposed to the Government regulating wages? Organized labor bitterly fought the industrial court law in my State, which provided for a Government board, comparable to the Secretary of Labor, to set wages. Is not this bill against the fundamental principles of organized labor?

Mr. CONNERY. No; of course not. Labor has found terrible abuses existing under the present law. The Davis-Bacon bill did something to help correct such abuses, and we are trying still further to correct these abuses. If I did not believe this was a good bill for labor, I would not sup-

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. FOSS. Has the gentleman any estimate from the Department of Labor as to the increased cost of carrying on the work of the Department of Labor under this bill?

Mr. CONNERY. No; they did not give us any estimate. The Secretary of Labor said there would be difficulties in administering the bill. He did not say what amount would be necessary.

Mr. FOSS. He just told me over the telephone that the extra cost would be considerable.

Mr. CONNERY. He did not tell me what the cost might be in his letter.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Since the colloquy over the point of order arose I have had an opportunity to examine the text of the committee substitute for the original Senate bill more closely. I find that the erroneous impression is due to misprinting the sections of the committee substitute.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield for that pur-

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield. Mr. CONNERY. I intend to submit a unanimous-consent request on that. There was a misprint there. It should be "Section 2" on page 10, line 22.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I find that the sections Nos. 1, 2, and 3 in the committee substitute are, in fact, one amendment to the Davis-Bacon Act, and consequently they make together one section of the committee substitute, and the section numbered 4 in the print should be numbered 2.

I therefore wish to state that I was completely in error when I made my argument, and that the ruling of the Chair was perfectly correct. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARENTZ. I handed an amendment to the Clerk. The amendment is now at the Clerk's desk. I think under the circumstances I am entitled to have my amendment considered.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the enacting clause is a preferential motion, and that motion must be disposed of now.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dyer) there were ayes 10 and noes 78.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, line 5, after the words "United States," insert "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, line 15, after the word "States," change the period to a comma and insert "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 23, after "United States," insert the word "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This would provide that the money should be forfeited to the District of Columbia rather than to the United States.

Mr. CONNERY. Where a contract is entered into by the District of Columbia for a building; yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But are not all forfeitures made to the United States?

Mr. CONNERY. No. Where the funds are turned over to the District of Columbia the District is to pay the money, and they are to pay the contractor if wages go up, and they are to get the refund if prices go down.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. True, but the amendment now before the committee is on page 8, line 23, after the word "States." That refers only to forfeitures.

It seems to me that it is rather a novel proposition to provide for a forfeiture in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONNERY. If the District of Columbia has the funds to build public buildings in the District of Columbia for the District of Columbia and if there is an increase in wages and the District of Columbia has to pay that out of its funds, should it not also receive a refund if wages go down?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But this is a forfeiture.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the amendment is ambiguous.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment be again reported?

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 3, after "United States," insert "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 10, after the words "Secretary of Labor," insert "or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 12, after the words "Comptroller General," insert "or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, respectively."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

With all deference to the chairman of the Committee on Labor, I think these amendments are faultily drawn.

Mr. CONNERY. These amendments, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, were prepared by the Legislative Counsel.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Legislative Counsel must have been suffering from the heavy work they have been required to do, because the amendments are not in proper form. The gentleman from Massachusetts has withdrawn one or two because they were so patently inapplicable that anyone who read them could see they were not in proper form.

I would respectfully submit that the chairman withdraw the amendments while other amendments are being considered so we can draft language that will carry out the purpose of the gentleman.

The words "or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, respectively," are not sufficient. It is difficult to say offhand just what the language should be, but the amendment should be to this effect: "The Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the event the contract refers to the District of Columbia." The word "respectively" is too vague and indefinite.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman understands what the committee is after.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. CONNERY. The committee desires that the District should get some of the refunds.

Mr, STAFFORD. That money belongs to the United States Treasury. The District is, of course, part of the United States Government, but we do not want to incorporate in the bill an amendment that will not carry out the real intendment of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I ask the chairman of the committee, if the gentleman from Wisconsin will yield-

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield. Mr. McDUFFEE. It is provided that these things should be done on a statement of fact by the Secretary of Labor. Why could not the Secretary of Labor make a statement of fact with reference to the District of Columbia as he would with reference to any other State or any other place?

Mr. CONNERY. Because of the distribution of the funds. They go back to the Treasury of the United States, and not to the District of Columbia. That is what we are trying to

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman of the committee will notice, and Members of the House will notice, that everything is predicated upon the action of the Secretary of Labor determining whether the wages are going up or down. Now you are leaving it to the determination of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I do not believe, with all deference to the chairman of the committee, that the gentleman intends that, and I ask with all respect that he withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say in reply to what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, that if the amendments are as bad as he thinks, when the bill goes to conference we will take care of the situation. The amendments were carefully drawn by the Legislative Counsel.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman well knows that no money ever goes to the District of Columbia. The money goes into the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia. There is no provision in the amendment whatever for this money going into the Treasury, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is right about it being improperly drawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have done my duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were-ayes 44, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 13, after "United States," insert "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 15, after "United States," insert "or the District of Columbia, respectively."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 19, after "Comptroller General," insert "or said commissioners, respectively."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 23, after the words "miscellaneous receipts," insert a comma and the words "if the contract be with the United States or to the credit of the District of Columbia if the contract be with the District of Columbia."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee amendment striking out the Senate language has not been adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That must be done before we leave this section. In other words, we must take a vote striking out the Senate language in accordance with the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That vote will be taken at the conclusion of the committee substitute.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 7, line 14, strike out all that part of the paragraph commencing with the word "The" following the period in line 14, on page 7, and extending to and including the period following the word "contractor" in line 11, page 8.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just proposed strikes from this bill that part of the bill which provides for a redetermination of wages after the contract has been let and after the wages have been fixed in the contract as originally let. Its purpose is to eliminate the cost-plus system. My amendment will prevent any further cost being saddled on the Government, and will prevent confusion in many cases where otherwise the project could not be completed. The portion of this section which my amendment eliminates authorizes the Secretary of Labor from time to time to reexamine the prevailing rate of wages paid to mechanics and laborers, and in the event the rate of wages contained in the specifications is increased an amount equal to the amount of such increase in wages in any one month shall be paid at the end of such month to the contractor by the Government. In other words, if there is an appropriation of $100,000 for a post-office building and the contract is awarded under the bill—and I am in sympathy with the idea—the wages are predetermined. My amendment in no wise interferes with that; but if during the course of the construction the Secretary of Labor reexamines the wages and raises those wages, then under the terms of the bill the amount is charged to and must be paid by the Government. Confusion would result if there were no more balance in the appropriation. If the appropriation were exhausted, the building might stop; and that same thing would apply to other improvements and public | works. The vice of this bill is that it restores and perpetuates the cost-plus system.

My amendment eliminates that vice from the bill and thus improves it. As the gentleman from Georgia, who made a very fair statement, said he had no objection to it, I can not see how any friend of the bill can object to it, because I believe this provision ought to be eliminated, and that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. Where is any equity to the contractor found in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The same equity that when the contractor submits a bid he has obtained bids on his materials; he knows exactly what he has to pay for his materials and he knows what he has to pay for his labor, and just like any other contract in private enterprise, he has to take some responsibility. I am in favor of the contractor who receives this benefit taking the responsibility and not having the Government hold the bag. For that reason I trust this amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman does not propose any equity to the contractor?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As a matter of equity to the contractor, this bill as proposed has determined these wages in advance, and in practice labor agrees that the wages will continue until the contract is completed. I respectfully submit that in doing justice, or rather a favor, to the contractor we ought not to do an injustice to the people of the United States by increasing the cost to the Government.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman's amendment leaves the contractor in the hands of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not. He knows exactly what he is going to have to pay for his labor. He knows it and so does labor, and both really agree, just as in the case of private contracts. The rate of wages obtains until the job is completed. I am opposed to the restoration of the costplus system at the expense of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Without the gentleman's amendment, we really destroy any basis for competitive bidding, do we not?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely. The Government might as well do all work by hired labor. As stated by the gentleman from Alabama, we destroy absolutely the basis for all competition, and you can understand how fraud could easily be perpetrated. The contractors have said, "We do not care anything about that provision. We have no objection to it because the Government will foot the bill." There could be an agreement and collusion in the case of unscrupulous contractors and employees, and I submit the Government ought to be protected. As we denounce extravagance and preach economy, I am saying a few kind words for Uncle Sam. Here we have an opportunity to practice what we preach. I am the friend of labor and I certainly want to be fair to the contractors, but we must protect the Government, and thus protect the people.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I believe, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bolandl has said, you are doing a great injustice to the contractor who in good faith makes a contract with the Government to construct a public building. Wages go up, he has to pay these wages, and then he is going to go in the red and lose money on his work. We have had plenty of evidence of that before the committee, showing how men have lost thousands and thousands of dollars on just such jobs.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CONNERY. I yield.
Mr. DE PRIEST. What is the difference between Government contractors and private contractors? Private contractors make a flat bid and all matters involving rates of wages are settled by union organizations, which agreements are signed for one or two years in advance. Contractors bid on the same basis and what is the difference between a Government contract and a private contract?

Mr. CONNERY. We believe the Government should uphold the standard of wages just as the President stated last year when he called a conference on the matter. We believe the Government is in a position to keep wages up.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I believe the same thing, but I do not think the Government ought to be gullible.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think the Government would be gullible in this proposition. I think this is equitable to the contractor, to labor, and to the Government. There is to be a refund made in case wages go down, and it seems to me this is an equitable proposition for all parties and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Does the gentleman contend that if this amendment is adopted the Secretary of Labor can raise wages after a contract is made?

Mr. CONNERY. If the amendment is adopted, it stops them from being raised or lowered.

Mr. REILLY. The Secretary could not raise the rates of wages?

Mr. CONNERY. No.

Mr. REILLY. Then, how is the contractor affected?

Mr. CONNERY. We say in the bill, as it stands now, that if wages go up the Government is to pay the difference between the original contract price and the increased wages, but if wages go down the contractor is to refund to the Government the difference between the contract price and the decrease in wages.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In the case of an appropriation for a public building or for any public works and the contract or bid is substantially the amount of the appropriation, what is going to happen to the people who are expecting this work to be done if there is not any money in the Treasury or any appropriation made to meet the additional requirement with respect to increased labor wages?

Mr. CONNERY. What is done now if anything like that happens?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The contractor has given a bond and the people and the Government are guaranteed that they will get their work done.

Mr. CONNERY. When you authorize public works or whenever there is any authorization made by the Congress you find the money, do you not? You will do that in this

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But there is no authority to let our contract if the amount of the contract price has not been appropriated. Sufficient money to cover the contract price must be available before the contract can be awarded.

Mr. CONNERY. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. Mr. Chairman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, during general debate I took occasion to support the position of the gentleman from Mississippi and attempted to show the committee that this amendment, if put into force, would cost the Government of the United States millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars. This position has been confirmed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Foss], who has just called up the Department of Labor and an official of Secretary Doak's office has stated that if this bill passes, it will cost the Government millions and millions of dollars. It will cost the Government millions and millions of dollars by virtue of this provision, which leaves it to the contractor and to some agent of the Government to connive when wages happen to rise or fall, generally going down, so that he can get the benefit of the difference in the wage scale.

Now, what does this bill do? What is the fundamental idea of the bill? The fundamental idea of the bill is for the Government at the time of the letting of the contract to state in the contract the scale of wages that shall be paid to labor for the respective character of work. This is the basis on which all contractors do such work, and they are supposed to take the risk of any scale going up or going down. Are you now going to allow the contractor to juggle with a contract he has solemnly made with labor to pay this rate of wages throughout the life of the contract for this respective character of work?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It also destroys the effectiveness of any limitation that Congress might impose upon any contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it destroys the very fundamentals of government. You are going crazy if you adopt this proposal. There is no limit to the Treasury, all through the connivance of some ill-designing contractor, who works in collusion, not with the Secretary of Labor, but with his representative in the field, and we will have hundredfold and thousandfold of claims against the Government.

Let us fix ourselves to an established policy, that in all Government work the contract shall state the price, once and for all, which labor shall be paid, not leaving it to the juggling of some representative of the department out in the field and about which the department knows nothing.

Labor ought to be satisfied. When Henry Ford fixes his scale of wages for a long period of time, labor knows that is the basis of the wages, and every laboring man knows that when the scale of wages is fixed definitely in the specifications that he will be entitled to the wage stated therein. There can not be any juggling one way or the other, neither lowering nor raising.

If the prevailing wages go up, that is the risk that every contractor takes. That was the risk the contractors took during the war, when wages fluctuated.

We are seeking to protect labor and not the contractors. We are seeking to give them a fixed scale of wages, the fixed scale of wages at the time the contract was entered into, and if labor gets that for a period of six months, labor will be satisfied. Let us cut this out of the bill, and then pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whittington].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were 94 ayes and 21 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 10, after the word "undertaken," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, there are two provisions in the bill; one is applicable to the public contract and the other is applicable to work done by the Government or some department or agency thereof by day labor or hired labor. The amendment just agreed to had reference to public construction.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This applies to day labor, where the Government is paying the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The language I propose to strike out is this:

The Secretary of Labor shall, from time to time, reexamine the prevailing rate of wages being paid to laborers and machanics for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil subdivision of the State, Territories, the District of Columbia, or the Canal Zone, in which all or a principal part of the work is Now, what does this bill do? What is the fundamental located, and if such rate is found by him to have increased or decreased the bill? The fundamental idea of the bill is for the Government at the time of the letting of the contract to sate in the contract the scale of wages that shall be paid to the receipt of such notification.

I have for the respective character of work. This is the receipt of such notification.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that you have here a different situation entirely. There may have been some good reason, from the gentleman's viewpoint, for the adoption of the other amendment, but here you have the Government doing the work itself.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Let me say to the gentleman that sometimes, not only in flood control but in river and harbor work, the Government puts up a certain amount of money and the local interest puts up a part, with the understanding that the Government will—

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The Government, of course, can always protect itself. In this case we must protect the workers. It goes out and hires skilled or unskilled labor, and it pays the then prevailing wages. Surely we want to provide some way for the workmen to obtain the increase if the rates increase. In other words, the Government should be compelled to meet all of the obligations and requirements the law imposes on private contractors.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I understand, the same rule would apply as to the prevailing rate of wages in predetermining wages under work by contract and by hired labor. Predetermined wages are provided in both cases.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But it is not fixed in the first instance. Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; it is. The very purpose of the bill is to extend the Davis-Bacon Act from public buildings to public works, and when you make that extension you cover the point that I have in mind.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does the gentleman say that the prevailing rate of wages having been established on a given job carried on by any department of the Government, that establishes it until the whole work on that job or project is finished?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Until that particular work is

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman, then, says that the Government could not decrease it on that job?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I certainly would say so.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let us understand each other. It is then understood that as the section now stands the prevailing rate of wages is fixed, although the Government or a department thereof is doing the work; and that having been fixed, it is fixed for the duration of that particular job or contract.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And can not be reduced.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Or increased.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is exactly right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of section 3, as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGugin: Beginning on line 1, page 10, strike out all of section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Strong of Kansas) there were—ayes 41, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 10, line 21, strike the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend the provisions of this act."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this important and significant fact: The Davis-Bacon Act contains this identical provision. It is absolutely imperative that it should be in the pending bill. Suppose we have a flood on the Sacramento or the Colorado River or the Mississippi. The President of the United States ought to have the same authority that he has under the Davis-Bacon Act to suspend the operation of this law temporarily.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that we had not taken that out of the Davis-Bacon Act. If the gentleman feels it has been taken out, I shall support his amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Arentz: On page 10, following line 10, after the word "undertaken," insert the following: "Whenever a contractor or subcontractor file bonds for the whenever a constactor of subcontractor life bonds for the faithful performance of his contract and his financial integrity, the authorized official of the United States shall in every case examine, first, into the financial ability of the bondsman or surety; second, determine that such bondsman or surety actually surety, second, determine that such bondsman or surety actually signed such bond; and, third, that the bond is in such form as to fully guarantee the faithful performance of the contractor and/or subcontractor, and guarantee full protection including payment in full to workmen and material supply men."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order is that the amendment is not germane. The amendment is offered to the provision relating to work by departments of the Government or independent establishments of the Government throughout the country, and there is nothing in the bill recommended by the committee that relates to bonds of any character. It is an extraneous subject. I make the point of order on the invitation of the mover of the amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in opposition to the point of order. The purpose of this bill is to provide a prevailing rate of wage, and it provides the machinery whereby the prevailing rate of wages may be predetermined, and how they shall be established. The whole purpose and scope and gist and crux of the bill is the payment of wages for skilled and unskilled labor. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada simply provides that the money so contemplated to be paid shall be really and actually paid to skilled and unskilled labor by the contractor, and provides a bond for that specific purpose. The definition, the conditions, and terms of that bond are only incidental to carrying out the real purpose, that is, the payment of the money paid by the Government to the contractor, to the skilled and unskilled labor. It goes to the very heart of the bill and is a pertinent part of the scope of this bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I am under the impression that the gentleman from New York is mistaken. I am in favor of the amendment, and I think it might be offered as a separate section, but section 3 does not deal with contractors. It only deals with the labor engaged by the Government on Government projects in which the Government is interested. There is nothing in the section that deals with the contractors.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] presses the point of order that it is not germane to the section-I am arguing that it is germane to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the purpose of my argument. Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thought the gentleman's point of order was that it was not germane to the bill.

Mr. SABATH. No. I think the gentleman said it was not germane to the section. I think the amendment is a good amendment and should be adopted, but it should be offered as a separate section and not as an amendment to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOEHNE). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that section 3 on page 10 relates to the subject of legislation on the prevailing rates of wages for labor, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada deals with the subject of bondsman and sureties, and therefore is not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment as a new section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order, because I would like to offer two preferential amendments before any new amendment is offered.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment which will take care of the language stricken out of the bill by the changes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following amendment to carry out the intentment of the committee made necessary by the Whittington amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Page 8, beginning in line 18, strike out the language "or not less than any rate of wages subsequently ordered in writing by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with section 1 of this act"; and on page 9, line 6, strike out the language "or in any subsequent revision thereof made by the Secretary of Labor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 10, after line 21, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Whenever a contractor or subcontractor file bonds for the faithful performance of his contract and his financial integrity, the authorized official of the United States shall in every case examine, first, into the financial ability of the bondsman or surety; second, determine that such bondsman or surety actually signed such bond; and, third, that the bond is in such form as to fully guarantee the faithful performance of the contractor and/or subcontractor, and guarantee full protection including payment in full to workmen and material supply men."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, unless the chairman of the committee desires me to make the point of order.

Mr. ARENTZ. Make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the amendment is not germane. There is nothing in the bill under consideration that relates to bending of the various contractors. There is no provision in the bill as to what their qualifications shall be.

The major premise of the bill is to have the contract stipulate the predetermined rate of wages.

The subject of the amendment, which is a subject entirely foreign to the bill, was not given any consideration by the committee, or at least we presume it was not, and the subject matter is entirely different from that under consideration by the committee.

Mr. ARENTZ. The very basis and foundation of the bill is the guaranty to labor that it shall be paid the going wage. The bill establishes a new policy. It provides, in the first place, that a wage scale shall be established, that this wage scale shall be specifically mentioned in the contract and specifications, and that ultimately this wage scale shall be paid.

My amendment provides that assurance will be made, and that all doubt will be eliminated, that the wages ultimately will reach the worker and the man who furnishes the material. I have no hesitancy in saying that my amendment | will protect the Government and relieve the Claims Committee of the consideration of many bills each year.

Without such a provision as I have inserted here I can show conclusively that the wages in some cases would ultimately not reach the worker and the man who supplies the material. I think the provisions of the bill help both the worker and the contractor, and my amendment stops the crook and helps the worker and the bona fide contractor. Both have a place in the picture, and protection provided to both is necessary to make this a perfect bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I beg to submit that there are only two sections to the bill. Both of them relate to the matter of a predetermination of wages. The second one merely provides that if any portion of the preceding section, section 1, shall be found invalid, the balance shall be held valid; so, that does not enlarge the subject matter of the legislation. Therefore, there is only one subject, even though there are two sections. Let me add that the proposed amendment relates to the whole subject of performance of the contract by the contractor and provides for the giving of a bond for the performance of the entire work. There is certainly nothing in section 1 which relates to the general performance of the work by the building contractor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the bill does not only provide that the contract shall contain the rate of wages to be predetermined, but the Chair will find on page 7 that the bill specifically provides that the contractor or subcontractor shall "pay" the determined wage. The amendment provides for a bond to guarantee such payment.

Then, if the Chair will turn to page 9, line 14, the Chair will find this language:

Such amounts may be recovered by the United States as a debt in a suit at law against either the contractor and his "surety" or his subcontractors.

The Chair will note a specific reference and provision relating to a surety.

The amendment carries out the intent which is provided in the bill that the Government should be indemnified by a bond, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada carries out the intent of this bond and works out its details, which are incidental.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, modifies existing general law relating to bonds that may be required by the Government.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment of the gentleman from Nevada seeks to have this bill review and amend that law. This bill does not refer in any particular to the character of bond that may be given. It is an extraneous matter entirely, seeking to open up an entirely new subject matter, as the gentleman from Illinois has so well and pertinently pointed out.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. This time the gentleman from Wisconsin is in error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane and therefore overrules the point of order.

Does the gentleman from Nevada wish to speak on his amendment?

Mr. ARENTZ. Only to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe there is a more important matter that could be put in this bill than to guarantee to the workmen and to the material men their wages and compensation. This amendment will do that. It is the most important feature of the bill, and I hope every member of the committee will vote for this amendment, and I am sure they will if they understand its provision; then I believe they would be in full sympathy with its purposes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, but I am uncertain whether it will be possible for the bondsmen or the sureties to comply with its provisions. I should like to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment as to his opinion about this proposition: It is generally recognized that surety companies, and many insurance companies, due to the deflation of their securities, would be found to be insolvent if examined by the insurance department. This is a serious proposition.

I have been informed that the securities which these surety companies own and possess are not worth more than 20 to 25 cents on the dollar. If a strict examination were made of the assets of these surety companies, I am confident one would not be able to find many surety companies able to qualify. Has the gentleman given that question any thought or consideration?

Mr. ARENTZ. That is only an additional argument for the necessity of this amendment. The same thing applies to individual sureties. The gentleman knows there are two ways of getting sureties. One way is through a bonding company and one way is through individuals. Now, if individuals sign a bond, surely the Government officials should go there and find out whether Mr. A, Mr. B, and Mr. C actually live there; next, how financially able they are to fulfill their bond; then ascertain whether they actually signed the bond and know all the provisions of the bond. Those three items make up a good guaranty, and if those three items are shown then the bond will be accepted.

Mr. SABATH. I congratulate the gentleman on his good intentions and I believe he is going in the right direction, but the thing I fear is that there would be only one or two surety companies that could qualify.

Mr. ARENTZ. Let us find that out.

Mr. SABATH. I am not willing to vote for a proposition that may be playing into the hands of one or two surety companies. Therefore I believe the amendment is one that should not be accepted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not contend that he does not want to have good security?

Mr. SABATH. No. I want good security, but the gentleman knows what I have in my mind.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, in all kindness I want to say that this amendment shows the danger of hurriedly writing and offering amendments on the floor. This amendment is not limited to building contracts at all. You may conclude from the context that it relates to building contracts, but it is not limited in that way at all. The amendment reads:

Whenever a contractor or subcontractor files bonds for the faithful performance of his contract and his financial integrity, the authorized official of the United States shall in every case examine, first, into the financial ability of the bondsmen or surety; second, determine that such bondsman or surety actually signed such bond-

And so on.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. What is wrong with that? Mr. CHINDBLOM. It does not belong in this piece of legislation. It is general legislation touching bonds to be given to the Government of the United States for the performance of contracts; yet here we are hurriedly, in the rush of the moment, amending the existing law with reference to all of the contractual transactions in which the Government may be engaged with individuals throughout the country.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. I will say to the gentleman, as a contractor, that this is the most equitable amendment to this whole bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But it does not merely cover the question of building contracts. It covers every form of contract that the Government of the United States might make.

Mr. BOLAND. It covers the workmen, the material men, and it covers the Government itself.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And it covers merchants who furnish supplies to the Government. It covers all kinds of contracts in which the Government may be engaged, which we are not considering at all now.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It covers cases where a bond must be furnished, and it must be a good bond. That is all.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The present law requires a good bond. We do not need a new law for that purpose; and if we did, such a proposal covering bonds for all purposes, not only for building operations but for all other undertakings with the Government, is too broad to be germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired on this section and all amendments thereto. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Arentz) there were—ayes 45, nays 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. That is in order; other business is transacted and after argument has been had, following a preceding motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this identical amendment has been voted upon by the committee and is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOEHNE). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 6, line 19, strike out "$500," and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the motion to close debate referred to the pending amend-

Mr. CONNERY. No; I moved that all debate on the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion was on the section and all amendments thereto.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTINGTON) there were-ayes 69, noes 49.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WHITTINGTON and Mr. CONNERY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were-ayes 79, noes 65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The entire committee substitute has not been read.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. If the provisions of section 1 of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the act of March 3, 1931, or the application thereof to any such person or circumstances, as the case may be, shall not be affected by the enactment of this act.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment inserting quotation marks at the end of line 21, page 10, striking out the figure "4" and insert the figure "2" in line 22, page 10, striking out quotation marks on line 22, page 10, and striking out quotation marks on line 3, page 11

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Connery: On page 10, line 21, insert quotation marks at the end of the line; on page 10, line 22, strike out the quotation marks before the abbreviation and strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "2"; and in line 3, page 11, strike out the quotation marks

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Earon of Colorado: On page 11, after line 3, add a new section:

"Sec. 5. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may thereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the number of the section be changed to 3 instead of 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I have no objection to the amendment. My understanding is that that language is in the other act, but if the gentleman wants it included at this point, it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to incorporate therein a brief report that the Secretary of Labor sent to the committee, and which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Con-NERY] has turned over to me for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

The committee substitute for the Senate bill was agreed to. Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3847, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were 117 ayes and 81 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members; a quorum is present.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Connery, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IN BEHALF OF CONGRESS

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter I wrote to the Bronx Chamber of Commerce.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in to-day's RECORD I include the following letter addressed by me to Mr. Mand, president of the Bronx Chamber of Commerce, as printed, with running comment, in the following editorial in the Bronx Home News of June 3, 1932:

The people have gotten pretty darned tired of reading about the "national questions." Now they want some of the answers and so it gives us pleasure to present herewith a reply made by the "national questions." Now they want some of the answers—and so it gives us pleasure to present herewith a reply made by Congressman Anthony J. Griffin to George J. Mand, president of the Bronx Chamber of Commerce, when the latter complained about the slowness of Congress in balancing the Budget.

"As to the feeling running high on the balancing of the Budget,
I realize that certain newspapers and certain elements are doing their utmost to undermine confidence in Congress either for their own selfish interests or to gratify their malicious instinct of faultfinding. They may set their minds at rest—the Budget will be balanced because it must be balanced.

"There is no magic in the words 'balance the Budget.' We do it every year as a matter of fact. The Appropriations Committee 'cuts the coat to the cloth'—in other words, makes the appropriations fit the revenue available. This year, the task has been particularly difficult owing to the fact that the revenues from so many sources have dropped below the normal. The double task has fallen upon Congress not only to cut the appropriations but to find new sources of revenue.

"That is the problem and that is precisely where minds differ.
First as to the appropriations, some believe in cutting salaries; others believe in maintaining salaries as they are on the theory that when the Government once sets the example, it will be followed by a general breakdown of salaries throughout the country, thus seriously impairing the purchasing power of the people. On both sides of this question, Members of Congress are deluged with letters, resolutions, and petitions, so that it ought not to be surprising to find a corresponding diversity of views among the Members.

"Likewise in the matter of raising revenue, a similar deluge of Members.

"Likewise in the matter of raising revenue, a similar deluge of arguments and appeals of every kind is showered upon us. Some favor high income taxes, some low. Some favor the sales tax, others are opposed. It ought not to be hard to understand why it takes some time to arrive at a solution.

"In a dictatorship there is only one point of view and the representatives of the people must bend their minds and consciences to obedience. In a democracy it is different. I should not like to have any dictator tell me which side of a given problem I ought to espouse, and by the same token I must be willing, as a true American, to be patient with the viewpoint of others and concede their right to exercise their prerogative according to the dictates of their consciences. of their consciences.

'I therefore make the appeal to my constituency to exercise the same patience and cherish the comforting assurance that if there is any virtue in our system of representative government (and I know there is) we are bound to work out a solution of the present problem as we have every other problem which has confronted us in our past history. Any other attitude would lead to downright bolshevism. We must maintain to the last our faith in our democratic representative form of government or else sink into a dictatorship."

a dictatorship."

We are interested in Mr. Griffin's explanation of the "D., L., and W." (delay, linger, and wait) policy of the Congress in its job of Budget balancing. We want to say, incidentally, that this area may consider itself fortunate in the men who represent it at Washington. But we must add that their individual ability and efficiency are far from sufficient to "sell" us the entire body of which they are Members.

Congressman Griffin speaks of the "certain elements" undermining confidence in Congress. He should know that it is rather.

mining confidence in Congress. He should know that it is, rather, the extremely uncertain elements in Congress itself that has destroyed public confidence in the body.

We do, however, realize that throughout the crisis our Representatives have been deluged with tons of communications making pleas and demands of all sorts. In fact, we wonder if Congress did not approve the higher postal rates in order to stem this flood of bitterly critical mail.

But the fact remains that, as a body, and throughout all of its current session, the Congress has given us far more cause to "view with alarm" than to "point with pride."

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Philippine question.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, republics may easily depart from the principles on which they were founded and become bureaucratic and oppressive. Blackstone tells us that every wanton and causeless restraint on the will of the subject, whether practiced by a monarchy or nobility or a popular assembly, is a degree of tyranny. It will not be to the credit and glory of our Republic if we deny to others the exercise of those rights and the enjoyment of the privileges which are the legacy of every American citizen, and without which our liberties would be as sounding brass or as a tinkling

I apprehend we sometimes overestimate our own genius for government to such an extent that we are not at all times fair in appraising the qualification of the Filipino for independence. The American people have not always ex-of the Covenant of liberty has not been committed by the Almighty to our exclusive keeping. We can not solve the Philippine problem by brandishing a big stick, or by treating the appeal for independence with disdain, or by an ipse dixit, or dogmatic assertion branding them as incapable of self-government, nor can we escape responsibility by adopting the easy-going policy of laissez faire. This issue confronts us. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down at the bidding of those who by procrastination seek to strengthen our strangle hold on the Philippines, lull the natives into the twilight sleep of passivity, and postpone action for one or more generations. Our duty is unmistakable and inescapable. We should turn our backs on subterfuge, evasion, special pleading, make-believe bugaboos, and withdraw from the Philippines. Only under a republic of their own can the talents of the Filipino find their proper orbit and maximum development.

But some one says, "The leading Filipinos are mestizos, Eurasians, or of mixed blood." But how does this alter or affect the situation? That may truthfully be said of the governing groups of all of the Latin American republics. Ethnologically the inhabitants of the Philippines are essentially Malayan, and are the outstanding representatives of that great and widely diffused family. The contribution of other racial groups to the blood stream of the 13,000,000 inhabitants is negligible. The Filipinos have led all other Malayans in civilization and the arts of government.

No one will challenge the education, culture, ability, patriotism, or resourcefulness of the leading or governing classes of the Filipinos. They have demonstrated a remarkable genius for governmental affairs. In the conduct of the Philippine government they have displayed an amazing ability. We are not concerned with their lineage, but we do know they are an intelligent, generous, confiding, and selfrespecting race that has made marvelous progress under exceedingly disabling handicaps. If you will permit me to paraphrase a statement of Sir Philip Sidney:

I am no herald to inquire of the Filipinos' pedigrees; it sufficeth me if I know their virtues.

I realize that the Filipino republic, as a newly born nation, will have no divining rod whose dip will unerringly point to a stormless sea or a cloudless future; but the attainments of the Filipinos in the science of government, and their successful management of their domestic affairs for a generation, justify the conviction that they will be able to build their institutions on an enduring foundation, and sustain a stable and benevolent government suitable to the needs of their people.

I do not claim that the Filipinos, when granted complete independence, will be immediately transformed into a mighty nation, whose achievements will at once dazzle the imagination and surpass the outstanding accomplishments of sister republics, but we are justified in believing that no race in the Orient has a more stable foundation on which to rear an enduring republic and virile culture. The Filipino is no dwarf standing on the far-flung edge of the world pleading penury and begging bounty.

Cicero said other nations might be able to endure slavery, but liberty is the very birthright of the Roman people. That was the sentiment of our revolutionary forefathers; the sentiment of liberty-loving men in every land. And should it be thought strange that these same motives and passions flood the soul of the brown-skinned Filipino?

Our contact with the Philippines should be of such a helpful, constructive, benevolent, and altruistic character that, when we withdraw our flag, we will leave monuments and not ruins behind us; that will win the unfeigned affection, unfailing good will, and everlasting gratitude of the Filipinos, not only of the present generation, but of all the myriad hosts, who in the ever-oncoming tides of times may spring from the soil of their sea-girt mountains and valleys; that in the heart of hearts of every Filipino there may be reared a temple, and in every temple a sacred shrine at which homage may be paid to the American Republic. With his own hands, the Filipino is making for himself a broad hibited 100 per cent qualification for self-rule. The Ark path to freedom, which he will travel even though it may lead him through great tribulations, and bring him face to face with seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

I have no misgivings as to the future of the Filipino Republic. Its advent will be received sympathetically by liberty-loving people, irrespective of nationality, race, tribe, or tongue. It will be nurtured by its sisters in the family of nations. It will expand and become strong and capable in the exercise of its new liberties, and in the discharge of the new responsibilities and duties that will come as a result of its emancipation. I am sure their enthusiasm for self-government will be tempered with reason and directed by prudence.

Posterity will not judge us solely by our form of government or by the superiority of our free institutions or by our unparalleled wealth and unexampled power but by the manner we administer our Government, cherish its ideals, and apply the principles that called it into being.

Plutarch tells us the crowns of kings do not prevent those who wear them from being tormented sometimes with violent headaches, and I predict if the United States retains the Philippines, either permanently or for a long, indefinite period, such action will bring not only headaches but heartaches to millions of Filipinos and Americans.

In his longing for independence the Filipino is driven by an irresistible impulse of the human heart. His everincreasing passion for self-government is like a living fire; you may, by deferring the decision, cover the glowing coals, but sooner or later the smoldering embers will burst into a fierce flame that will blaze a path to unconditional independence.

Neither the policy of "let well enough alone" nor the hand of violence nor the sack of gold nor the lure of commerce nor the urge of luxury nor the release from responsibility can suppress the righteous determination of the Filipinos to build their own institutions and as an independent state become a member of the family of nations.

The Filipino, like all other men, having been born free, no alien race, monarchy, or republic has any right to lay on him even a silken chain that unreasonably hampers his personal liberty or restricts his political freedom. No empirical reasoning, no cunning sophistry, no policy of expediency can make him dependent or justify the denial of his plea for independence. The Filipino will be satisfied with nothing short of independence. He who feeds you on contrary assertions deceives you.

The Filipino, though unrepining, long-suffering, and patient, is nevertheless persevering and persistent. He will not forever pace the trammels of an alien government 8,000 miles distant from his island home or for generations be obsequiously obedient to the sovereign nod of Uncle Sam; but as the unconquerable sons of freedom they will, in the near future, by peaceful methods, rear their own state and develop their own free institutions.

The goddess of Filipino liberty has unfurled her flag and is moving with slow but measured steps, feeling the ground before she plants her foot on it; but when once set there, it is fixed forever. The thought of liberty makes the Filipino heart hungry for its enjoyment. Self-government will weave a pattern of joy for the Filipino, and from his lips will come a song that will not end, and into his heart will steal a gladness that abides, and over his spirit will fall a spell that will not break.

A DEFENSE OF CONGRESS

Mr. Laguardia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record the remarks I made last night over the Columbia broadcasting network on the defense of Congress.

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following statement by myself over the Columbia Broadcasting System, at 9.45 p. m., June 7, 1932:

ADDRESS OF HON. FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA, OF NEW YORK

Disappointment over the defeat of the sales tax has aroused constant and bitter denunciation of Congress. Thanks to the courtesy and fair play of the Columbia Broadcasting Co., I have this opportunity to answer some of the unfounded attacks made. Our form of Government needs no defense. It has endured longer

Our form of Government needs no defense. It has endured longer than any other government in existence to-day.

An American who would destroy our representative form of government destroys not only the safety, security, and future of his fellow countrymen but the hope of the world. Show me the man who is now shouting for Congress to stop legislating and go home and I will show you the man who has already gotten everything that he wants from the present session of Congress. Show me the man who scorns the conduct of Congress and I will show you the same man who was down on his hands and knees last summer begging the President and Congress to come to his help. Shaky bankers, discredited stockbrokers, nimble financiers, and double-dealing directors were then imploring Congress to come to their rescue. Congress did. The moratorium, the $2,000,000,000 relief for bankers, brokers, bondholders, and railroads; $125,000,000 to sustain the bonds of the farm-loan banks; additional liquidity through the Steagall-Glass bill for the Federal reserve system and banks generally; all of this legislation immediately passed without bickering, on the assurance that it would restore prosperity and create employment. Yes, more than assurance, with constant veiled and direct threats of a panic unless Congress did so. From that point on Congress refused to be a rubber stamp for predatory and selfish interests.

Congress is now charged with not being constructive and with being under the influence of organized minorities. Let us analyze the situation. Whenever Congress has been under the influence of any minority it has been the minority composed of the very gentlemen who are criticizing it on that score. Notwithstanding the abuse, Congress refuses to adjourn until it has passed constructive relief legislation providing sufficient cash for immediate direct relief to alleviate human suffering, provide appropriations for an extensive public-works program, and abundant resources for States, counties, and cities and private corporations ready to stimulate business and create employment. The enlargement of the scope of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as contained in the relief bill passed by the House is simply this: That originally hundreds of millions of dollars were authorized to be poured in dead ventures to sustain bad debts, and now we are providing resources to create live activities. The first created no employment. This measure will.

providing resources to create live activities. The first created no employment. This measure will.

The very critics of Congress who demanded $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for loans to financial institutions assured Congress that the benefits would percolate through to industry and commerce, and that through these drippings business and industry would be stimulated and employment created. Some of us refused to believe that. We pointed it out at the time. We were abused for so doing. Our stand now is fully vindicated. Congress is not satisfied with having sustained bonds unless it also provides sustenance for the hungry. The House passed a real relief measure to-day. Congress expects to stay in session for at least 10 days after such bill is submitted to the President.

Considerable abuse was heaped upon Congress for failure to heed the wishes of a small minority who insisted upon the passage of a sales tax. It is not generally known that the demand for a sales tax and every utterance for it has always been coupled with a demand for a reduction of the income taxes in the higher brackets. There has been more willful misrepresentation made on the virtues of a sales tax than on any other measure that has been before Congress, equaled only by the claim that we made the world safe for democracy.

been before Congress, equaled only by the claim that we made the world safe for democracy.

A sales tax would be democratic, it was urged, provided an inheritance tax was eliminated. The insistent demand for a balanced Budget becomes less vociferous and less emphatic unless it were balanced by a sales tax, placing the burden of $660,000,000 on the millions of people unable to buy the barest necessaries of life. It was stated that the necessaries of life would be exempt from a general manufacturers' excise tax. That is not so. Necessaries of life, such as food, clothing, medicine, and farm implements could not, under the mechanics of the bill, possibly have been totally exempted. To exempt necessaries of life it would have required thousands and thousands of specific exemptions. This the proponents of the bill were unwilling to grant.

required thousands and thousands of specific exemptions. This the proponents of the bill were unwilling to grant.

A manufacturers' excise tax, with thousands and thousands of exemptions, would not be capable of administration in this country. The Secretary of the Treasury and every tax expert so testified. The exemptions offered and misrepresented to the American people did not actually exempt to any degree the necessaries of life. It simply removed one step back taxes on clothes, food, medicine, and farm implements. It meant that instead of the farmer paying a tax on his reaper he would be required to pay a tax on every bit of material that went into the reaper, the steel, iron, wood, chain, screws, nuts, nails, bolts, and all gadgets in the farm implement; instead of paying a tax on a suit of clothes the consumer would pay on the cloth, lining, thread, on buttons, on filling, and everything that went into a suit; instead of paying on a pair of shoes, he would pay on the leather, the soles, the eyelets, the pegs, and everything that went into a pair of shoes. What sort of an exemption is that? It was frankly admitted by honest proponents of the sales tax that a complete exemption on food, clothing, medicines, tools, and farm implements without taxing component parts would destroy the very purpose of a sales tax. That can be readily seen. It is the necessaries of life of 126,000,000 that constitute the bulk of consumption and purchases of food and material.

That admission alone was sufficient to prove that the bulk of the sales tax was to come from the necessaries of life. The name manufacturers excise tax and the make-believe exemptions were manufacturers excise tax and the make-believe exemptions were both camouflages and sugar coating to put the vicious tax system over. I give these illustrations to show how the whole proposition of a sales tax was misrepresented to the American people.

These same gentlemen who complain of minorities and who were advocates of the sales tax themselves constituted a minority seeking to shift their taxes on enormous incomes to the backs of the working people of this country. They fall to state that while certain large publishers were advocating a sales tax on every article in the home, they were seeking exemption of the same tax on the sale of periodicals, magazines, and newspapers while certain large publishers were advocating a sales tax on every article in the home, they were seeking exemption of the same tax on the sale of periodicals, magazines, and newspapers which they published. That, of course, does not apply to all publishers. Then, it is stated that people of large fortunes will put their money into tax-exempt securities, that they will boycott industry by not investing in industrial and commercial enterprises. If industry and commerce stop under our economic system, tax-exempt securities would be worth nothing.

Industry can not be stopped. The millions of hard-working American people who, through their labor, and through their skill, and through their genius made and kept the industries going will continue to keep them going. The millions of American farmers will continue to feed the country through their toil and production. This threat to put money only in tax-exempt securities and to withdraw it from industry is not a sound argument for any economic plan. It is nothing less than a base threat of industrial and financial sabotage, which can not be anything but ineffective in an enlightened democracy such as ours, a boomerang to those who make the threat.

who make the threat

who make the threat.

At this very moment the last heat of the drive for the balancing of the Budget is on. Nothing more than a theoretical balancing of the Budget is possible for the fiscal year 1933. The deficit has been growing for three years. It is not the deficit of this year alone. It is extremely difficult in a depressed period to suddenly and completely balance the Budget. The deficit of the past three years in turn has increased the Budget requirements of the next fiscal year by reason of the fact that long-term bonds have been issued to meet these vast deficits, and the interest and sinking-fund requirements are now reflected and increasing our annual appropriations.

say that only a theoretical balancing of the Budget is possible because such a balancing as is now contemplated assumes the payment of $290,000,000 owing to us by our foreign debtors and winks at the necessity of applying $496,000,000 to the sinking fund under the law necessary for the payment of the public debt fund under the law necessary for the payment of the public debt and further assumes an immediate revival and improvement of business conditions. May I urge the critics of Congress to be frank at least in quoting figures. So now the failure of the foreign countries to pay their debts, the strange mathematics of vociferous Budget balancers resolves itself down to a determined effort to lower the wage scale of the working people of the country. The first step in a systematic lowering of the American standard of living may be found in the so-called economy bill now before the Senate. It seeks to reduce the salaries of Government employees. In fact, the criticism and attacks made concernnow before the Senate. It seeks to feduce the same that the ment employees. In fact, the criticism and attacks made concerning loyal Government employees have been such as to create a feeling of animosity and hatred, entirely unjustified, against them. It is not conducive to good government to create this feeling against the men and women who are in the employ of the

The Government pay roll constantly cited by the critics of Congress always seems to include the $575,000,000 paid to postal employees, which to this extent is entirely self-supporting. The Postal Service is a personal-service business bringing in over $800,-

Postal Service is a personal-service business bringing in over $800,000,000 a year. No personal-service business of such magnitude could possibly be conducted unless it has a large personnel. Yet the critics of Congress in pointing out the postal deficit fail to point out that it is not the pay roll that creates the deficit but the subsidies paid to private ship operators, the subsidy paid to private air mail operators, the subsidies paid to raliroads through excessive rates for carrying the mail that create the deficit.

In addition, the free-in-country distribution of newspapers, and the low rates for carrying second-class mail contribute to the deficit, Now, I suppose some critic of Congress is ready to jump and say, "How about the franking privilege?" The whole franking privilege amounts to about $800,000. It is only for official business. The cost of carrying the mail of the various departments of the United States Government, of course, is added. It must be taken into consideration that whether mail is franked or official Government mail sent under a frank or penalty stamp it would have to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. Abolishing the frank for all official Government mail and paying postage the frank for all official Government mail and paying postage would be taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another.

The postal employees earn their present salaries, not only in services but in the revenue. All through the departments and in the field service the majority of employees of the United States Government are in the low-salary grades. Specialists, technicians, and professional men and women are paid less in the Government service than in private life.

It may be of interest to know that 124,678 Government employees earn less than $1,000; there are 480,941 earning $1,500 and less; 348,147 earning $2,000 and less; and that 139,974 earn $2,500 a year and less. Therefore it will be seen the whole economy plan is based on the reduction of salaries of the lower-paid employees constituting the bulk of the entire Government pay roll. Most every Government employee, like every other family head throughout the country, has several unemployed members of the family to support. It is not only the pay of the Government employee that is involved. If that were all it would not be a difficult task to adjust. But, as I have just stated, it involves the entire wage structure of the country. This in turn reduces the purchasing power of the country, which in turn reduces consumption and which results in piling up surpluses of commodities, unemployed people by the millions, underfed, starving children, and a prolonging, if not an indefinite continuance of the present period of depression. Yes; indefinite continuance of the present period of depression. Yes; we will balance the Budget, but the way to balance the National Budget is first to balance the family budget. Once the family budget is balanced, purchasing power is restored. When purchasing power is restored, prosperity is restored. The constant demand, therefore, for a general reduction of salaries and wages throughout the country commencing with Government employees is a short-sighted policy. America can not be happy with an enormous poor class. We thought we had passed that long ago. We surely will resist ever returning to it.

The farmer must not and can not be ignored. He is not getting enough for his products to pay the actual expenses of planting and harvesting his crop. His farm is being foreclosed and we are creating a class of peasant tenants more miserable in their poverty than the Russian peasant of old. We must bring up commodity prices and to do that we must maintain the American standard of wages. Therefore when Congress is resisting the wholesale indiscriminate reduction of salaries of Federal em-standard of wages. Therefore when Congress is resisting the wholesale indiscriminate reduction of salaries of Federal employees, it is not heeding the demand of any organized minority for the simple reason that the great masses of workers and producers and farmers in this country constitute the great majority of the American people.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-ADDRESS OF HON. CAMILO OSIAS

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I hereby include the following address I delivered at the commencement exercises of Shenandoah College, Dayton, Va., on June 7, 1932.

THE PARADOX OF THE AGE

(By Camillo Osias, president National University, Manila, and Resident Commissioner from the Philippines)

I have an abiding faith in education. That faith is so unshakable that I decline to share in the prevailing pessimism over the efficacy of institutions of learning and educational processes. I am not unaware of the imperfections of educational methods nor am I blind to instances of failures of educational products nor am I blind to instances of failures of educational products that may lend color to the cloud of gloom hovering over every nation, especially in these trying days of fear and doubt. Yet I can not but believe that perhaps times would be still worse were it not for the educational institutions standing as bulwarks of society, sending forth an ever-increasing number of graduates annually to strengthen the rank and file of those valiantly fighting the forces of destruction. Believing thus as I do, you will not doubt the depth of my sincerity in felicitating this institution and the faculty for this year's fruitful harvest.

Members of the graduating class, I congratulate you on this eventful day which will be memorable in your lives. You are emerging into a world undergoing a period of travail. These are times that are unique and challenging—times that verily try men's souls. Misery and distress stalk the earth's surface. Educated leadership and intelligent followership are essential to meet issues so intricate and numerous, problems so grave and stupendous.

We are in very truth living in a paradoxical age. Never has production been so efficient, and yet people are in want.

We are in the midst of plenty, yet millions of families are living in poverty bordering upon desolation and dissolution.

Never has humanity witnessed such a variety of mechanical devices, products of man's inventive genius, and yet the very machines that human ingenuity has devised are occasioning the unemployment and suffering that are so widespread.

Never have the statute books been so prolific in regulatory and prohibitory laws and yet criminality and intemperance are rampant and seem to be on the increase.

The earth has never seemed so prodigal with every kind of rampant and seem to be on the increase.

The earth has never seemed so prodigal with every kind of food and every description of the wherewithal of existence yet countless individuals and families are filled with lamentations complaining of their inability and helplessness to satisfy the most elementary human wants and needs.

Gold and silver have never been so plentiful, but commodity prices have fallen to such low levels that men know not whether they should resort to processes of inflation, deflation, or reflation to remedy matters.

At a time when the material resources discovered and utilized.

At a time when the material resources discovered and utilized have never been so great and the facilities for exploitation so nearly perfected, it is the very time when governments have their greatest deficits and when unemployment and poverty raise their charter heads. their sinister heads.

their sinister heads.

In this twentieth century, when we are supposed to have come closest to the peak of human progress, we witness precisely the most extraordinary contrarieties in human existence.

Paradoxes beset us on every side. Instances could be multiplied almost without limit. Obviously it is neither necessary to lengthen the list nor essential to discuss at length each and every phase.

I purposely pause momentarily at this point to remark that I am not bent on magnifying existing ills or conveying a message of pessimism. I am not an alarmist. I am a confirmed optimist. It is more in keeping with my nature to leave with you thoughts which by their very challenge should produce a new vision of hope and of promise

and of promise.

The burden of my address is to depict the existing situation and present contemporary problems which merit the attention of the most thoughtful and the most heroic. It is our common hope, I am sure, that we may wrestle successfully with these gigantic problems looming high before our very eyes which, when adequately coped with, shall lift a world now groping in the dark valley of despondency and distress to levels that shall enable us to catch a new vista of splendor and greatness.

It is commonplace that in marshaling either armed forces or cultural forces the rate of progress is often controlled not so much by the speed of the few and the select as by the rate at which the great bulk advances. Society hardly ever goes forward by leaps and bounds despite the fact that a few individuals may move with gigantic strides. It is not strange or unnatural that the bulk of humanity at large should continue zigzagging on its way almost at a snail pace despite the fact that leaders endowed with statesmanly qualities may have already attained the dizzy heights. Such, however, seems to be the destined fate of democracies. The history of the world has recorded so many iniquities and injustices of autocratically ruled kingdoms and empires which have since become decadent that we should not be willing to destroy present-day democracies in spite of their imperfections and ills. But it is clearly the part of wisdom and the dictate of statesmanship at times to take an inventory of the sum total of human experience and take cognizance of triumphs and defeats—the defeats that we may know what to relegate to the scrap heap and cultural forces the rate of progress is often controlled not so much manship at times to take an inventory of the sum total of human experience and take cognizance of triumphs and defeats—the defeats that we may know what to relegate to the scrap heap and the triumphs that we may know what to hold priceless.

One of the strangest paradoxes recorded in history is that the spirituality of a people seems to be at a low ebb when they are literally riding upon the crest of a wave of prosperity. Ancient empires entered upon their period of moral and spiritual decadence after having surfeited in plenty. It was at some such period that the proverbial fiddling of Nero took place while Rome burned. Such an occurrence embodies a great kernel of truth for the human race, though the event itself may not be historically accurate. One of the irresistible temptations to human beings is to neglect their inner selves while basking in the sunshine of material wealth. People living in the midst of material abundance indeed have often succumbed to the lure of indifference. Just as individuals live in apparent abandon disregarding elementary rules of hyglene while they enjoy a surplusage of health, just so do nations get their visions dimmed by the glamor of gold in superabundance. Revolutions from the masses time and again have been directed against reigns characterized by tyrannical cruelty and extreme callousness on the part of kings and rulers who, feeling secure in their power and content in their palatial surroundings, have completely ignored rumblings of the common people groveling in indescribable agony under the heels of their mighty masters.

The saving feature under such circumstances is that after each popular upheaval a new concession was made or a new conquest achieved ultimately redounding to the benefit of the human race.

The saving feature under such circumstances is that after each popular upheaval a new concession was made or a new conquest achieved ultimately redounding to the benefit of the human race. An instance corroborative of this is the memorable Magna Charta signed on the field of Runnymede, climaxing the vigorous demands of the English masses. Such, too, was the case in the emancipation of many a colony that had been victimized by tyranny and oppression on the part of greedy colonizers. The sad part is that the achievement of such reforms, such conquests, such advances in the past should have been invariably accompanied by so costly a sacrifice of treasure and of life.

There is universal complaint at this moment of the depression that has enveloped the entire world. And yet it is but the logical aftermath of the greatest catastrophe that befell the human family. The World War, initiated by a few who belonged to the cliques of the mighty, drunk with power and anxious to perpetuate their reign of greed, necessarily had to bring in its trail miseries untold and ills without number. Naught else could ensue from that folly of follies.

that folly of follies.

That war entailed millions in dead and wounded, and more agrieving and dispossessed. In treasure it has been estimated that that monumental stupidity had cost the world more than that that monumental stupidity had cost the world more than $200,000,000,000. The ordinary mind can not grasp what a billion means. I wish to make it vivid. There are but 1,440 minutes in one day. Multiply this number by 365 and there are but 525,600 minutes in a year. Multiply this in turn by 1932 and you will find that from the birth of the Great Man of Nazareth to the end of December next there will have been but 1,015,459,200 minutes. If you bear in mind that there are but about 2,000,000,000 people in the whole world the monetary cost of that were would be sufficient. in the whole world, the monetary cost of that war would be suffi-cient in these days, if distributed, to give $100 to each man, woman, or child now on the face of the earth. Out of this sum, to put in another way, it would be possible to supply $20,000 to each of the 10,000,000 of America's unemployed. Is it any wonder that after such wanton destruction of property and life, its aftermath should be disaster and distress and the growth of fear and loss of confidence?

One outcome of that universal confiagration was that it compelled people and peoples to be more consciously world-minded. It is a pity that some such volcanic upheaval was necessary to awake mankind from its lethargy. Since then statesmen and men of affairs have done more sober thinking upon the essential oneness of the human family and the interdependence of the nations of the earth.

We have had a rude awakening. We were brought to the realization that when an international aggression is resorted to with impunity there is no certainty that the scene upon which it may be staged can be definitely localized or circumscribed.

By the aid of scientific discoveries this planet of ours has witnessed a great shrinkage. Men and nations have become more closely interknit. Mankind has been reduced to an integral organism. No serious misfortune can befall one portion without affecting the whole, nor can a great good be achieved by any part without benefiting the whole. The world that used to take years to circumnavigate can now be encircled in a few weeks or Traversing oceans has become a matter of hours. Human ingenuity has made it possible almost literally to light the world with an electric spark. The ordinary human voice in the privacy of a small inclosure may now be heard the world around. As a consequence people are talking more, hearing more, and reading more of internationalism and cosmopolitanism. International conferences are more frequent. The need of world cooperation is real and immediate.

Yet this very same phenomenon is the paradox of the age. world suddenly become small and unified found individuals and individual governments who are provincial and narrow in their concepts, habits, and conduct however much they may attempt to appear broad in their pronouncements or world minded in their protestations. The naked truth is that most men and nations in this self-same era of internationalism are narrow, provincial, selfish.

We have come to know that war is hateful, costly, and wasteful but we are without adequate instrumentalities to effect world but we are without adequate instrumentalities to effect world peace. High-sounding treaties have been signed ostensibly abandoning war as an instrument of national policy; yet the very signatories of such pacts suspect the motives of other parties signatory to the same agreements. Voluminous publications have been brought to light favoring the limitation of armaments leading a guilible public to think that we are on the eve of abandoning instruments of carnage and destruction ashore, affoat, and aloft. But the mad race for building battleships, manufacturing war implements, devising schemes of destruction goes on almost unabated. And if on the one hand attempts have been made to show some semblance of a holiday in military, naval, and air rivalries, political and economic hostilities continue in the form of discriminatory laws or tariff barriers high and thick. All these are occasioning suspicion and doubt. Retaliation is the All these are occasioning suspicion and doubt. Retaliation is the order of the day with the consequent diminution, if not paralysis, of commerce and business

The paradox of the age is upon us in full blast. We know the better but do the opposite. Spokesmen of nations make elaborate and studied protestations of their desire for world peace, but almost in the same breath governments are unceasing in their efforts to promote peaceful war through economic agencies. All know that international trade should be universally fostered, but there is no international currency nor effective means of stabilizing entrepoles. ing existing currencies.

Ing existing currencies.

The world for three-quarters of a century busied itself with the task of enriching itself in the material sense. But there has been much squandering with little or no thought of the morrow. There has been no foresight, and, what is worse, there is no preventive or remedial planning for effective and concerted international action, with the result that national debts are staggering, taxes are becoming confiscatory, and tariffs prohibitive. Scarcely has the wound inflicted by the war upon a suffering humanity cauterized than nations again busied themselves with new ways of causing miseries equally far-reaching or destruction just as devastating.

A sick world this is in need of a cure immediate, effective, and lasting. No mere palliatives will do. Merely allaying the disease will not restore the patient to normalcy. Perhaps a sort of surgical operation of the most drastic kind needs to be resorted to in order to remove the root cause. The "time demands strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and willing hads." The age calls for concerted action on agreements scientifically devised. great hearts, true faith, and willing hands." The age calls for concerted action on agreements scientifically devised. It calls for courage, will, and persistence to effect a cure for humanity's ills.

The world knew how to meet a war crisis. It resorted to emergency organizations, emergency methods, emergency procedures in accordance with the dictates and necessities of war. We are suffering from a peace crisis. We need emergency organizations, emergency methods, emergency procedures in accordance with the demands and exigencies of peace.

But we must educate for peace. While crying for peace we must demonstrate greater faith in peace. The trouble is that nations talk of peace, but organize on a war basis. I shall look upon the present world-wide travail as a visitation from heaven if out of it we shall emerge peace minded, determined more than ever to pursue the ways of peace.

The masses are groaning. Their backs are bent to the breaking point from the sheer weight of war burdens, past and present. They demand a change. They are determined to have it. The time for change on a universal scale for real international cooperation is ripe. Now is the appointed time. The question is whether men and women, leaders and led, can and shall rise above provincialism and partisanship to the plane of humanity and statesmanship.

Such is the world and such is the age into which you this day graduate. The situation and the epoch are of the type that make or break characters. You are henceforth to commence to play your part, steer your course, and pilot your life. You have a host of well wishers and they all wish you substantial success and real happiness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, immediately following my announcement as a candidate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Harry M. Wurzbach, Representative of the fourteenth congressional district of Texas, I stated, among other things, that I favored the discharge of every obligation and the fulfillment of every promise made to the ex-service men. From the time that the proposal to pay the adjusted-service certificates held by the veterans developed into a well-defined effort to discharge immediately this obligation, which was not due until 1945, I became interested to the end that some means to accomplish this end without embarrassing either the Congress or their efforts to balance the Budget be developed on a sound basis.

Every Member of Congress who has served through these distressful times has been impressed with the fundamental importance of the major obligation of this body, to wit, the balancing of the Federal Budget, the bringing of the expenditures of the Federal Government to a parity with its revenue, this being essential in order that the financial integrity of the United States might be reestablished and at the same time the value of the American dollar be maintained.

The original proposal which sought the immediate payment of the adjusted-service-compensation certificates-H. R. 1-provided merely for the issuance of additional Treasury notes in an amount sufficient to pay the certificates. H. R. 1 provided no means, other than the printing of the Treasury notes, for either their redemption or the prevention of any unbalancing or lowering of the value of the American dollar. In effect, the Secretary of the Treasury was merely given authority to start the Government printing press and issue more money. Subsequently H. R. 7726 was substituted for H. R. 1 before the Committee on Ways and Means. This committee reported the bill adversely. A rule was sought under which the bill might be brought up for action by the House. The Rules Committee failed to act upon this rule, whereupon a petition under the rules of the present House was laid on the Clerk's desk and 145 signersthis being the requisite number—petitioned the discharge of the Rules Committee from further consideration of the rule requested, which brings the bill before the House if the rule to discharge the committee passes the House. The vote on the rule will be taken on Monday and, if adopted, the bill will be considered on Tuesday, the following day.

It has been my desire and effort to see this measure, when presented to us for a final vote, contain provisions based upon sound premises which would provide for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service-compensation certificates in a manner which would not detrimentally affect the just reestablished financial integrity of our Government. It is my belief that, were the present method set out in the original proposition perfectly safe and sound, the present revenue bill which has just been enacted and signed by the President would not to-day be in existence, because if the mere issue of Treasury notes were of itself, without support, a sound method of replacing money or creating additional revenue, unquestionably this would have been the means which the present Congress would have adopted rather than the burdensome and obnoxious taxes contained in the revenue bill.

It has been asserted by some that my attitude toward legislation having to do with the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates is unfriendly and that for ulterior purposes, actuated by motives of like nature, my expression on this matter has been to the end that the legislation might not pass.

Of course, it is easy to make such assertions and easy to impugn motives because there is no tangible means of being certain of that which goes on in the mind and heart of one's fellow man. But be that as it may, I submit that my personal efforts and vote during the past days of this session of Congress should clearly denote that I at least have attempted to be consistent.

My vote on the revenue bill—which, of course, did not meet with my personal approval as to the best and most equitable means of raising revenue—should at least be proof in part that I subscribed to the idea that it was conclusively necessary to reestablish the credit of our National Government at any cost. From my first statement on the floor of the House—in fact, my initial utterance before this august body—it should be clearly evident that I was definitely cognizant of the importance of curtailing the expenditures of Government and the dire necessity of relieving its burden which now so heavily rests on the shoulders of tax-paying citizens

I submit that the vast majority of the membership of this House are inclined to do everything in their power to relieve the distress and suffering of those who served our country in the Great War. I am also of the belief that these men are patriots and, while lashed by the merciless lash of necessity and the preservation of life in some instances at present, they, too, would be among the last to willfully work injury on this country. On behalf of our veterans and our country I bespeak the earnest efforts of the entire membership of the House to the end that a means, by amendment, be provided whereby the bill which will be before us on Tuesday may be amended so that that immediate payment of the bonus may be made, backed by a bond issue which is supported by some sort of revenueraising measure which will provide for the payment of interest and the creation of a sinking fund for the retirement of the bonds without embarrassing the credit of our country or working an additional hardship on our fellow tax-paying American citizen.

It is my intention to offer an amendment which, after a most exhaustive and careful study of both our present conditions and every means of raising of revenue of which I know, seems to me in the last analysis to be the sanest solution of the question, How can we pay under present conditions? The amendment referred to, whether it be offered as such or in the form of a substitute to the bill, merely sets up a 3-cent per pint-bottle tax on 2.75 per cent beer. This particular source of revenue has been lost to the Government since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution and the passage of the Volstead Act. As a matter of fact, the exhaustive hearings before the committee which had the Bingham measures under consideration, developed almost conclusively that beer of the above-mentioned alcoholic content was not intoxicating in effect. In addition, there is no question but that more or less inferior beer is being marketed and consumed in enormous quantities. This vast industry not only costs the Government millions annually in its efforts to suppress it, but has cost many lives as well. The revenue derived from this source goes into the pockets of those who earn their livelihood outside our law, and this without reason. The citizens of this country are paying more for their beer now than they would have to pay for it if my amendment should be admitted and adopted. The subterranean and elusive operation of this iniquitous monster-organized crime-which carries on this industry of necessity gives employment but, by the same token, to those who have little or no regard for our country and its institutions.

It has been said—and correctly, I think—that a government to be sound must have the inherent power of perpetuating itself. This principle applied to our form of government clearly and without cavil shows that in order to perpetuate itself its attitude must be to protect and lend aid to citizens of all classes. This citizenship, by the very nature of our Government, is our Government and constitutes it. Therefore, by the same token, it appears to me to be vitally necessary to calmly and sanely consider that particular basic principle of our Government which we subscribe to concerning equal privileges to all and special rights to none.

My purpose in offering the amendment is actuated entirely by my determination to do my best to materialize the desire that we at least adhere to sound principles based upon proven premise, and in this hour of darkness and danger this, in my opinion, should be the cardinal rule of this great deliberative body. Actually the future effect, direct or indirect, is not known by either the proponents of the measure to be voted upon or those who are opposed to it—this reference to the present bill proposing to pay immediately the adjusted-service-compensation certificates. It so happens that I belong neither to the group who oppose the particular measure pending nor do I belong to those who support it in its present condition, statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

My attitude is that it would unquestionably be beneficial to retire this obligation if the method of financing would not be detrimental to our national credit or to our country as a whole. The argument of the proponents that the inflation or reflation—this latter is the latest descriptive term as to what would result-of our currency, will be a cure-all of immediately beneficial effect, is, in my opinion, a mere statement of a theory. Those who are opposed to the bill make the statement that the passage of the bill means inevitable ruin. This, too, in my opinion, is theory, inasmuch as the very term "reflation" is a new phrase to me, and in my most diligent efforts of research as to its original premise, I have found that in legislative history this is apparently its first appearance. Therefore, it should be apparent again, that what the results of reflation may be is likewise a matter of conjecture.

With your permission I now again call your attention to the proposed amendment to be offered. In my opinion, after careful study, the method proposed in this amendment is based upon sound premise and will accomplish the results desired by the proponents of the measure, in that the veterans will receive the same compensation which the bill as amended proposes. It has the added advantage of providing for the redemption of the notes and the maintenance of part-gold reserves. It carries the assurance of paying the interest and providing a sinking fund for the retirement of the bonds proposed in the measure, regardless of what the future may hold in store for us.

It has been said, and will be said again, that we are attempting to legalize an illegal commodity; that we are taxing that which is illegal. Many among the best scientific minds of our country are definitely on record and back the statement, based upon the results of scientific research, that 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating in fact. We are apparently, therefore, in a most peculiar position when we note the result of failure to pay income taxes by one Scarface Al Capone, as well as the attempted tax on crime introduced in the Senate of this Congress. This would seem to show that we are not averse to obtaining revenue from those who earn their livelihood illegally and outside the law.

My friends, we have reached the point where we must cast aside certain of our expressed convictions concerning theories and experiments and base our efforts on sound judgment, fact, and premise, and be guided by the records and the light of history.

It is my earnest hope, for the sake of our united people and for their best interests, that a majority of you, my colleagues, will agree to this amendment. Despite the fact that many of you in the past have been on record as opposing any change in our present prohibition laws whatsoever, I am satisfied you will agree that much could be done to improve our present condition in so far as we are affected by these laws; and for the sake of reenthroning patriotism and the love of country in the hearts of this great people, as well as of definitely asserting a proper recognition of those American boys who laid their all upon the altar of patriotism in service of our country, it seems we could well afford to accept in reality, as a last resort, this the most equitable means of discharging this obligation for the purpose of alleviating the distress of our veterans and at the same time maintaining the balance of our Budget.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1932

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 8, 1932)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Sentors answered to their names:

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent as a member of the Geneva conference and that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] is necessarily absent from the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 822, a bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, pending the vote I ask unanimous consent that at 12 o'clock to-morrow the unfinished business be laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4860) to provide for loans to States for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will see fit to renew that request just as soon as the War Department appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There are a number of other bills in the same status as the War Department appropriation bill. I will make the request now. Of course, if the Senator objects to it. I shall take my own course on it.

Mr. REED. I shall have to object now, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that unless the War Department appropriation bill is disposed of some time during the day I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill may be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be disposed of first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the vote in the House of Representatives in favor of Philippine independence on April 4, 1932, was impressive, 307 for and only 47 against. Of the absentees I am informed that 42 Congressmen have since stated they would have voted for the bill if present.

The wisdom of the House in passing this bill is being sustained by public opinion. Each new magazine article or new book that appears confirms the wisdom of the action of the House.

Sherwood Eddy, in his recent book, the Challenge of the East, makes some significant statements. Mr. Eddy is a well-known author and a student of the Far Eastern situa-

In this book he reviews the situation in India, China, and Japan.

In discussing the Philippine question he said:

1. All thinking Filipinos and all Americans without exception desire that the present situation of unrest and of uncertainty should cease. The fevered demand for independence which meets with no clear response from America, with the consequent re-tarding of commercial development and of adequate constructive reforms by the Filipinos themselves, is like the uncertainty be fore a presidential election in America, multiplied tenfold and continued year after year. This tantalizing and paralyzing uncertainty must terminate.

2. Every intelligent, self-respecting Christian Filipino in the islands desires independence; and these Christians constitute more than nine-tenths of the population. We have found no people in the world so unitedly, so passionately, so insistently desiring independence as the Filipinos.

But if we ask when and how this indegranted, there is a clear division of opinion. independence should be nion. To understand this difference we must realize two facts:

1. No other conquered and subject people were ever given such a large measure of autonomy, such hope and promise of early independence, or were so speedily prepared for it. The result of this artificial stimulation and encouragement on the result of this artificial stimulation and encouragement on the part of Americans has been the practically universal demand for independence by all parties, all classes, all political leaders. It has become a fever, an obsession. Any political leader who asked for anything less than immediate independence would be considered a traitor to his country and would lose his political head.

2. As we have said, the economic progress of the Philippines has been so bound up with free trade exclusively with America that immediate independence would shell an economic catastrophe immediate indefor the islands. independence would spell an economic catastrophe

1. The bulk of the farming population, nearly 10,000,000 people, want their liberty because of the orations they hear every Independence Day and in election campaigns. They know little about the issues involved, but they will "vote right" and follow their leaders when the time comes for voting or for action.

2. Some thousands of the intellectuals, the whole student body, the youth movement, and their leaders and orators, want always and everywhere in season and out of season "the immediates".

and everywhere, in season and out of season, "the immediate, absolute, and complete independence of the islands." The spirit of this body is that of the American Colonists in 1776, and their spokesman would be Patrick Henry.

3. Some hundreds of the informed, responsible, and real leaders of the islands in government and all departments of life want independence as much as the youth just mentioned, but they are in touch with the economic realities and hope to gain independence, not as a sudden catastrophe but in a way that will benefit the islands and will be a credit to the United States. This third the Islands and will be a credit to the United States. This third group is small, but it is perhaps more important than the other two combined and probably can carry the others upon any reasonable plan for independence which satisfies themselves. They want to end the present fever of uncertainty. They want independence at all costs and would prefer to have it immediately, even with severe economic loss, rather than to lose it or even to run the risk of its indefinite postponement. But they would infinitely prefer a period of transition that would enable them to reestablish themselves upon a new and sound economic basis upon one of the following plans:

of the following plans:

The first choice of many would be the early granting of complete independence at a fixed date of from 10 to 30 years from the present. Economically it might be better to even have a longer period, but they all want to enter the promised land of freedom within their own lifetime. This is a passion with many of them. within their own lifetime. This is a passion with many of them who fought against the Americans in 1898. During the period of transition they desire complete internal autonomy, in order to be able, along with free trade with America, which is a basic essential with them, to begin to adapt their tariffs and trade relations with other countries so that sudden independence may not leave them unadjusted in their trade with the rest of the world.

Mr. President, the very latest book on this subject is entitled "America in the Pacific," by Foster Rhea Dulles, a well-known writer and student of Pacific and Chinese problems, who, in the conclusion of his work, has this to say:

The acquisition of the Philippines marked a new departure in our policy. That can not be gainsaid. If it conformed with the tradition that had steadily led us westward to an assertion of power and empire in the Pacific, it none the less clearly broke with the tradition that the United States was a Nation in which self-government, democracy, and equal rights were the basic principles of national life. It meant that at least temporarily we had forsaken our own established ways to follow the familiar path by which the empires of the past had risen to greatness and then collapsed as ambition overreached itself, the path along which the modern empires of Europe were struggling in jealous rivalry.

In no other instance of our expansion could this charge be sustained. It was only in the Philippines, with their alien millions demanding independence and increasingly resentful of the domi-The acquisition of the Philippines marked a new departure in

It may well have been that under the circumstances, for which we were largely responsible, any other course would have provoked a conflict in the Far East. any other course would have provoked a conflict in the Far East. There is no doubt that many Americans sincerely felt that regardless of national interests it was our duty to hold the islands. But basically we took them for trade and empire. The questions still unanswered are whether they are really necessary for the maintenance of that position in the commercial and political world of the Pacific to which we feel ourselves entitled, and, even if that question is answered affirmatively, whether we can afford in justice to the Filipinos and to ourselves to hold them as unwilling hostages for national power.

in justice to the ringinos and to ourselves to hold them as unwilling hostages for national power.

It was perhaps inevitable, given the background of our expansion, the restless urge for national aggrandizement which characterized the whole world at the close of the nineteenth century, and the national ambitions of a young and aggressive nation, that in 1898 we should have temporarily ignored the traditions with which these forces were in conflict. But they have since been recalled. We stand pledged to grant the Philippines their inde-

REPEAL OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting article by the distinguished American author, Walter Lippmann, on the subject of the proposed repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, June 8, 1932] TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW By Walter Lippman REPEAL

The most effective argument against the repeal of the eight-eenth amendment is that employed by Senator Borah when he asks what "constructive alternatives" the repealers have to offer. Mrs. Boole, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Bishop Cannon make the same point, and it is obvious from Mr. Rockefeller's letter to President Butler that he is somewhat troubled, too.

The repealers ought to welcome this challenge, for when the national prohibitionists ask for a "constructive alternative" they are obviously prepared to admit the principle that liquor might be legalized if it were adequately regulated. Senator Boran could not sincerely ask for an alternative to prohibition if he were determined to insist that nobody must ever drink liquor again determined to insist that hobody must ever drink liquor again under any conditions. The problem, therefore, is narrowed down to the question whether by repealing the eighteenth amendment the prospect of a successful regulation of the liquor traffic would be increased or diminished.

In examining the consequences of repeal the first question to ask ourselves is what power to regulate would be left if the eighteenth amendment were removed. There would remain 20 States which amendment were removed. There would remain 20 States which have prohibition by their own constitutions. There would remain in every State the power to prohibit by constitution or by statute. The Webb-Kenyon law, adopted by Congress in 1913, would remain, compelling the Federal Government to prohibit shipments of liquor into a State if such a shipment violates the State laws.

Interventation of law, adopted by Congress in 1913, would remain, compelling the Federal Government to prohibit shipments of liquor into a State if such a shipment violates the State laws. Congress would have the power to prohibit or regulate the importation of liquor from abroad. These two objectives—to prevent interstate traffic and to prevent importations—are just about all that Federal enforcement aims at to-day. They do not depend upon the maintenance of the eighteenth amendment.

On the other hand, repeal would revive powers to regulate liquor which do not exist to-day. In States which are opposed to prohibition it is impossible, under the eighteenth amendment, to have temperance legislation of any kind whatever. Laws to regulate the liquor traffic are unconstitutional under the eighteenth amendment. The consequence is that in States where the majority is antiprohibition there is no effective prohibition and there can be no alternative. It is no play on words, it is not mere repartee in debate to say to Senator Borah that only by the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will not deprive the States of any power to prohibit or regulate that they now have: it will not deprive the Federal Government of any power which it effectively exercises; but repeal will empower States to regulate the traffic. It can be said in all sincerity and in all literalness that repeal of the eighteenth amendment will augment the total power of the people to deal with intoxicants. From the governmental point of view, the essence of repeal is not the restoration of liquor but the restoration of a suppressed power to regulate liquor. For in its effect upon New York or any other predominantly wet State the eighteenth amendment is simply a constitutional veto on temperance legislation.

Ever since 1913 the great argument for national prohibition has been that the States which wished to de so could not make their own prohibition effective if liquor was being sold freely on the other side of their borders. This, I take it, is Senator Bora liquor were legal and regulated rather than illegal and unregulated.

lated.

Unless he can convince himself that the Federal Government can and will suppress the bootleg-liquor industry, he must, if he is realistic, see that the practical choice is between a controlled and an uncontrolled liquor traffic. Can it be seriously denied that a legal and regulated liquor industry in the wet States can be more effectively prevented from invading the dry States than a bootleg industry run by outlaws and racketeers? I doubt that it can be denied, and, therefore, repeal would in fact aid those States which desire prohibition within their borders. By reviving the Webb-Kenyon Act they would enjoy all the Federal protection they now have under the eighteenth amendment, and besides they would have the additional protection which would come from driving the bootleggers out of business and substituting a controlled industry. ing the bootleggers out of business and substituting a controlled industry.

It is fair to say that repeal is a "constructive alternative" to the situation which now prevails. Not only would it leave intact all the constitutional and statutory prohibition in the States, not only would it leave intact the Federal power to protect dry States, but it would revive all the temperance legislation which the eighteenth amendment has suppressed and would for the first time in over 10 years empower the people of the thickly settled regions to protect themselves against the most gigantic industry ever known in the underworld.

in the underworld.

What could be more "constructive," where the issue is one of constitutional powers, than a measure which will leave all effective existing powers intact and revive powers which have been lost? Surely Senator Borah does not expect the repealers to submit to him for his inspection all the laws and ordinances, all the appropriations and appointments which each State would make if the repeal of the eighteenth amendment restored its power to legislate. The challenge of those who ask for a "constructive alternative" is answered when it is shown that repeal will increase and not diminish the real power of the American people to regulate liquor.

COMMERCIAL RADIO BROADCASTING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, transmitting a report in response to Senate Resolution 129 (72d Cong., 1st sess.), calling for a report from the Federal Radio Commission on the use of radio facilities for commercial advertising purposes and stating that "Commissioners Saltzman and Lafount do not agree with the statement contained in the views expressed in the answer to question 4, to the effect that additional legislation is necessary to enable the Federal Radio Commission to limit and control the amount of time used for commercial advertising purposes, believing that the provisions of section 4 of the radio act of 1927 give the commission the necessary authority," which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I present a petition signed by 700 citizens, merchants, and veterans of Latrobe, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation which would authorize full payment of veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates. and I request that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

ARTICLE BY DR. ARTHUR MACDONALD

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Dr. Arthur Mac-Donald entitled "Brain."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

(By Dr. Arthur MacDonald, member of the District Medical Society, Washington, D. C.)

The brain is a mere extension of the spinal cord; both are of one piece. The spinal cord is fundamental, while the brain is more or less accidental. Though the brain be an adventitious part of the spinal cord, it has, nevertheless, become the head of the nervous system and is different enough to have a separate name.

Though the brain often has great relative bulk and high complexity, it must be remembered (Piersol) that the spinal cord is the fundamental and essential part of the nervous axis, so that the degree to which the brain is developed is accidental, being dependent upon the necessities of the animal in the use of the higher nervous functions.

Though from the point of view of nature the brain is an accidental growth, from the human viewpoint it is all important, being the basis of mind, the highest function in man.

In consonance with this idea of the accidentality of the brain, from the point of view of nature, is the opinion of a specialist (Bolton) that the extreme end of the frontal lobe, which is the seat of the higher processes of association, is the last region of the brain to be evolved, but the first to undergo dissolution in mental decadence or dementia. In amentia this region is not developed. Also a fact of comparative anatomy may not be without significance: The spinal cord in man weighs from 1 to 1½ ounces; and relatively to the brain is as 1 to 40, but as we go down the animal scale this ratio gradually decreases, till in the mouse it is 1 to 4. In cold-blooded animals the relation is reversed and the spinal cord is the heavier; in the new1 to 105 and lamprey 1 to 133. Thus, in the earlier and fundamental stages of nature the brain was most subordinate, if it barely existed. Now, this adventitious character of the brain as a mere offshoot of the spinal cord may have its parallel in the realm of mind. Thus the furthermost development of mind might be said to consist in the metaphysical theories of philosophers, which are also of an adventitious character, being the most complicated (like the brain), uncertain, and changeable forms of consciousness. Briefly, all those activities, which are called intellectual, are and consciousness are usually the first to cease acting, while the unconscious organic functions, being fundamental, are the last to disappear.

I. WEIGHT OF HUMAN BRAIN

While the statistics of brain weights have been gathered by many writers in the past, but usually by very elemental methods, the first one to study more exactly the question of variation of brain weight was Karl Pearson, of the Eugenics Laboratory in Marchand, one of the pioneers in the statistics of brain weight, did not give the body weight, because, for autopsy purposes in hospitals, the weight of the subjects was too variable to consider in relation to brain weight.

Marchand's brain data indicate that the brain reaches its full growth between ages 15 and 20, remaining constant to about age 50, and then gradually becomes less in weight. It will be noted, as we give the data, especially concerning the brain, by leading specialists, that frequently there is much variation in opinion, but it only illustrates the actual status of brain investigation which specialists, that frequently there is much variation in opinion, but it only illustrates the actual status of brain investigation, which is merely in its beginning.

In girl and boy at birth the brain is about the same in weight; the brain of the female averages a little heavier than that of the male; boy 367 grams (12 ounces), girl 396 grams (13 ounces). The relative weight of the brain to body weight in the girl is greater than in boy; thus boy, 1 to 8.3; girl, 1 to 8.0; later in life, from birth on with age and weight, the absolute brain weight increases so that up to 15 years of age this increase is from threefold to nearly fourfoid; and from this time on the absolute weight of brain is greater in man than in woman.

In man the maximum brain weight comes between ages 15 to 30; in woman at age 14. In higher ages the brain weight decreases in man from 60 to 70; in woman from 50 to 60; the decrease is about the same in both sexes. At age 7 the brain averages 40 ounces, and at age 14 the brain often reaches 48 ounces. Beyond ounces, and at age 14 the brain often reaches 48 ounces. Beyond age 50 the weight slowly but gradually decreases at the rate of about 1 ounce in 10 years.

European brain weight averages from 1,350 grams (47 ounces) to 1,360 grams, or 48 ounces (Bischoff). Topinard (11,000 cases) makes 1,361 grams (48 ounces) the average for man and 1,200 grams (42 ounces) for woman.

Brains under 1,250 grams (44 ounces) in weight are abnormally small and those more than 1,550 grams (55 ounces) are abnormally large (Marchand).

A number of specialists in a series of 278 cases showed the maximum brain weight to be 1,810 grams (64 ounces) and the minimum about 960 grams (34 ounces). The mean weight from 20 to 40 years of age is, according to Boyd, 1,360 grams (48 ounces) for the male and 1,230 grams (43½ ounces) for the female brain. The brain appears to be heaviest between 14 and 20 years of age, and at the age of 80 has lost 90 grams (or rather more than 3 ounces). Broca makes the average 1,421 grams (50 ounces). Spitzka showed that in distinguished men the senile decrease in weight was delayed about 10 years, their average weight being 1,473 (52 ounces), 100 grams (3 ounces) above the European average.

Table 2 shows that taller persons average greater brain weight than those shorter in stature

Table 3 also indicates that those with less body weight have greater brain weight. Thus, smaller men and women show higher relative average brain weight.

70,000_	2,470	=1.9
80,000_	2,823	=1.5

The specific gravity of the brain averages 1.036.

From the examination of 10 brains (5 for each sex) Dahlberg found the gray matter to average 53.6 per cent of the volume of the entire cerebrum; the nuclei averaged 3.6 per cent and the white matter 42.8 per cent.

Damlewsky showed the weight of the cortex to be 33 per cent of the total weight of the brain, weighing 1,324 grams (47 ounces) and having a total surface of 169,200 square millimeters (262 square inches). Donaldson found the cortex to form about 50 per cent of the brain weight; also that the thickness of the cortex may vary from 1.55 millimeters to 3.50 millimeters (0.04 to 0.13 inch), the average being about 2.9 millimeters (0.10 inch). The average length of the brain is about 165 millimeters (6.49 inches) and its greatest transverse diameter is about 140 millimeters (5.5 average length of the brain is about 165 millimeters (6.49 inches) and its greatest transverse diameter is about 140 millimeters (5.5 inches). The larger and deeper convolutions are similar in the two hemispheres; most of them are individually variable, but each convolution is homologous with that of the other hemisphere. In broad-headed persons (brachycephalics) the longitudinal convolutions and transverse fissures tend to break up and thus the amount of surface, and so of gray matter, is increased relatively to the whole brain. Intelligence of normal character is probably not possible in a brain less than 32 ounces in weight. The taller the individual, the greater his brain weight, yet short people have relatively heavier brains than tall. The cerebellum is usually one-eighth of the weight of the entire brain. The cerebral cortex varies in thickness and becomes thinner in old age. The cerebellum or hind brain weighs 140 grams (5 ounces), or about cerebellum or hind brain weighs 140 grams (5 ounces), or about 10 per cent of the entire encephalon; it averages larger in man than woman and is relatively larger in adults than children, the converse of the brain. The cerebellum has especially to do with equilibrium.

DIFFERENCE BEJWEEN BRAIN AND SKULL VOLUME

In Table 4 is given (in percentages) the average difference in adult males between the volume of the brain and the inner space of the head. This average difference is about 7½ per cent, with individual variations from 5 to 10 per cent.

This difference changes little in middle life, but after the age of 70 the difference is about double; that is, 15 per cent between brain volume and cranial capacity.

In a head with a cranial capacity of 1,400 cubic centimeters (85 cubic inches) there is about 100 cubic centimeters (6 cubic inches) of free space outside of the brain; but after the age of 70 this free space has about doubled, or is about 200 cubic centimeters (12 cubic inches).

The volume of the dura is on the average from 50 to 60 cubic centimeters (3 to 4 cubic inches).

BRAIN WEIGHT AND INTELLIGENCE IN ANIMALS

In general, it will be seen from Table 5 below that the larger the animal the smaller the relative size of brain. The whale's brain weighs 2,816 grams (99 ounces), and the elephant's 4,896 grams (173 ounces). While these are the largest brains among animals (Table 6), their weights relative to their body weight are very small (in the elephant, 1 to 500).

From Table 5 we see that small animals of the same vertebral class, as fish, amphibians, and reptiles, have, relative to body weight, larger brains. It is generally true in animals, as in man, that the brain weight is much greater, relative to body weight, in their young age than in their adulthood.

Notwithstanding variations, it will be seen from Table 9 that there is a certain parallelism between brain weight and intelligence in animals.

The gorilla's brain (with a body weight nearly as much as man) weighs only 416 grams (13 ounces), which is less than one-third of man's brain weight, and is barely more than that of the human infant at birth.

THE RATIONALE OF COMPARATIVE BRAIN WEIGHT

As a general proposition, the higher the mental faculties are developed in the vertebrates, and especially in man at different ages, as well as in different individuals, the greater is the development of the cerebral hemispheres, in comparison with the rest of the cerebrospinal system.

In the same species or class the relative brain weight is greater in species of small stature than in those of large stature. It can be said that the influence of stature, or organic mass relative to brain weight, extends throughout the animal kingdom in such a way that with equal intelligence the small species have a relative superior brain weight to the large species; also, that the species of very small stature can excel species of very great stature and much superior in intelligence. Thus the influence of height on brain weight seems to overbalance that of intelligence. Thus the rabbit, whose brain weighs 26 grams (0.91 cunce), and the rat (much less in height), whose brain weighs one gram (0.03 cunce), are both, nevertheless, somewhat alike in intelligence.

It is natural to attach more importance to organs in proportion

It is natural to attach more importance to organs in proportion It is natural to attach more importance to organs in proportion to their correlation with the brain. The function of nutrition, or at least locomotion, appears to be in relation with brain weight; the vegetative influence and that of locomotion over the brain weight can not be estimated, except in animals of the same class. Thus, the crocodile, in spite of its mass and the size of its nerves, has a very small brain.

The nutrition of the brain in man is very much independent of the general nutrition of the body; thus very delicate children are often well developed cerebrally.

The small animal species are more sensitive than the larger species. The surface of the body is greater relatively to its mass.

The small animal species are more sensitive than the larger species. The surface of the body is greater relatively to its mass, as the body is smaller, and the sensitive nerves are relatively more developed to the volume of the body, as the height is less.

The brain or nervous center does not receive as numerous sensations, as various, and as complex in inferior animals as in the superior. Also, the brain does not receive as numerous, as various, and as complex sensations in species of small stature as in those taller. those taller.

The relation existing between the surface sensitive organs and the development of the parts of the brain responding to them is shown by comparing the elephant with the dog. In the dog the sense of smell is at least as acute as in the elephant, yet its olfactive lobe is much smaller; but the olfactive lobe is connected with tive lobe is much smaller; but the olfactive lobe is connected with the volitions and movements of other organs, which in the elephant cover much more ground, so that, for this reason alone, the organ is larger, though the dog's sense of smell is more developed. Again, the elephant has a brain weighing 4,896 grams (173 ounces) and the whale 2,816 grams (99 ounces) (table). The elephant is intellectually superior and his senses and their number are greater; the variety and complexity of his movements involve an enormous mass and numerous coordinations requiring a large quantity of nervous elements, as the variety of actions with its trunk. Thus it surpasses the whale in intelligence.

The great weight (Table 5) of man's brain (1,360 grams=47)

The great weight (Table 5) of man's brain (1,360 grams=47 ounces) as compared with that of the gorilla (416 grams=14.6 ounces) may in part be explained in the comparison made between the elephant and whale. Thus in man the specialization of the thoracic organs, the many movements of the hand and movements for articulation, are more intimately connected with mental activity. Their relative volume appears to be related with the degree of influence exercised by the diverse organs over intelligence and with the degree of influence exercised reactionally by the brain over these organs. Thus, as to motor center, the brain controls less numerous, less various, and less complicated movements in the inferior species. in the inferior species.

BRAIN WEIGHT AND INTELLIGENCE IN MAN

All the results of investigation of the brain do not appear to be

All the results of investigation of the brain do not appear to be in accord, and some are contradictory. This is especially the case in the question of the relation of brain weight and intelligence. In the past this relationship was doubtless unduly emphasized, but at present certain mathematical specialists maintain that the relationship is so slight that it is negligible. Thus the pendulum has swung to the other extreme and, as usual, the truth may eventually be found in the golden mean.

Since no brain in a head less than 11 inches in circumference has been known to function normally, and since no brain weighing less than 32 ounces has been normal, it is evident that size and weight of brain have very much to do with intelligence, at and weight of brain have very much to do with intelligence, at least within certain limits. But the question is, Before we reach these limits what is the degree of relationship? In short, if after certain limits in size and weight the brain absolutely conditions normal intelligence, it is difficult to believe that this relation suddenly stops and has little or no significance. For this would involve a saltus, which is contrary to nature itself. The author is further doubtful, because there is relatively so little definitely settled about the brain that can be regarded as of a fundamental nature.

In the animal kingdom, in three-fourths of cases (see Tables 4 and 5), the species with the heavier brain show more intelligence, and this is especially striking when we come to man as compared with the lower animals. For, as man's intelligence is so much higher than that of the animal's, so his brain is correso much higher than that of the animal's, so his brain is correspondingly heavier. Thus in the animal nearest to man, as in the gorilla, the brain weight is from 400 to 500 grams (14 to 17 ounces), while in man it is from 950 to 1,800 grams (32 to 63 ounces). This certainly is a prodigious rise, or, rather, jump, the average for man being 1,350 to 1,450 grams (47 to 51 ounces), while the highest in the gorilla is but 500 grams (17 ounces). This saltus is not due to nature but to our ignorance of the doubtless many intervening species between the highest ape and the lowest man. These species may have been permanently destroyed, or are yet to be discovered.

TABLE 7.—Criminals (M. H. Whiting, Biometrika, Vol. 81)

By mentalities in this table is meant the weak-minded. table shows that all the correlations are significant, and that the feeble-minded or those with less mentality have less weight, less height and age, but greater temperature, quicker pulse and respiration than the mentally normal. Congenital and other morbid defects of the brain are, in general, accompanied with corresponding deficiency in the range or power of the mental faculties and the higher instincts. Thus, according to Du Catte, every skuli with a horizontal circumference less than 48 centimeters (18 inches) belongs to an idiot or imbecile.

As this is the first itime any legislative body was ever studied from the scientific point of view, a few details may be given. The table shows that the degree of relationship between brain weight (estimated by an equation) and stature is 0.55 ± 0.05 , which is positively high, and the degree of correlation between brain weight and between brain weight and body build is still higher, being 0.63 ± 0.04 . The body build is obtained by dividing the chest girth (at armpits) by the stature. As body build increases we pass from slenderness to stoutness, or, rather, thicksetness. This high correlation (0.63 ± 0.04) indicates that in general short, thickset people have heavier brains than slender persons. The correlation for height (0.55 ± 0.05) is much higher than is usually the case, which is probably mainly due to the homogeneity of Congress. The average estimated brain weight of the 89 Members of Congress was 1,550 grams (55 ounces), which is much above the average (48 ounces).

TABLE 9.—Brain weight and occupation (Matiegha)

Table 9 gives the average brain weights of 255 persons, according to the nature of their occupation. It will be seen that as the intellectual status of the occupation increases the average brain weight increases. Though the numbers are not large, yet they are sufficient to create a probability of such tendency.

In Table 10 it will be seen that the representatives of exact science, such as mathematics, show the highest average brain weight (1,532 grams=54 ounces). Men of action, as statesmen and military men, come next (1,490 grams brain weight=53 ounces), then fellow artists and philosophers with a brain weight of 1,482 grams (52 ounces); and, finally, natural scientists, with a brain weight of 1,444 grams (50 ounces).

With exceptions, the intellectual status is indicated by the weight of brain. Thus the brains of men given to the most difficult intellectual thought, as in mathematics, perhaps involving the more complex mental mechanism, are shown in the exact scientists with an average brain weight of 1,532 grams (54 ounces).

Le Bon also shows 42 distinguished men with an average cranial capacity of 1,682 cubic centimeters (101 cubic inches) contrasted with the general average of 1,559 cubic centimeters (93 cubic inches). Also, 26 skulls (in the Museum of Natural History in Paris) of well-known men show 1,732 cubic centimeters (104 cubic inches) cranial capacity.

Also, Gladstone, in a study of a boys' school and medical students shows:

In the students the height of head showed a distinct increase compared with that of head length and head breadth. Binet calls attention to the distinctly greater head measurements of highly gifted children as compared with dull children.

More than 30 years ago the author made measurements (including head circumference) of 20,000 Washington school chil-

When in doubt, the teachers marked the pupils average, so that we have the positively bright and dull to compare. As will be seen, for every age, the average head circumference of the bright is greater than that of the dull boys. The same is true for the Parchappe (1836), Broca (1861), and, later, Lacassagne and Cliquet (1878) have shown that men whose occupations require high intelligence have larger heads. Thus Da Costa Ferreira, of Portugal, gives:

In Table 12 will be found the names of 96 distinguished men, with their occupations, ages, and brain weight as given by Spitzka, collected from others. Quite a number were old men at death, whose brains had normally lessened in weight.

It is known that stature, body weight, and build may influence brain weight, yet such data in many of these 96 cases are wanting, and so can not be considered. Gambetta's brain is omitted, for it lost much of its weight through the use of a zinc chloride solution; lessening it in one hour 10 grams (0.3 ounce). Duval estimated its weight to be 1,247 grams (44 ounces) originally, it being reduced to 1,160 grams (41 ounces).

The average brain weight of these 96 distinguished persons is 1,473 (52 ounces), which exceeds the various averages for European brains by 75 to 125 grams (1 to 4 ounces). This does not allow for the advanced age of the series, the average of 92 cases (all all but 4) being 63 years of age.

Dividing these cases by nationalities, we have:

Ninety-six persons in all. Average brain weight 1,473 (52 ounces)

Average age, 63.

There are cases of persons of ordinary ability, not to mention idiots, with brains of heavy weight; there are also cases of distinguished people with average, if not lower brain weight. Thus Shelley, Descartes, Foscolo, Donizetti and Schumann had small heads, and, presumably, small brains. But such cases are not the rule. The rule would seem to be three-fourths true and one-fourth untrue. That is, the trend of leading specialists, as Ranke, Mannouvrier and Virchow, is that heavy brain weight suggests high mental capacity. The cases of heavy brains of idiots, feeble-minded, criminal, and insane are usually cases of disease. Also, large brains of ordinary people are often pathological. Then, also, abnormally large and heavy persons may for this reason alone have large heads, and so large brains. But, after all has been said, such cases are the exception and not the rule.

In Table 13 are given brain weights of additional distinguished men not in Table 12.

Multipying the cranial capacities of Bruce and Browne by 0.94 (Welchker), their estimated brain weights are 1,499 and 1,419 grams (53 and 50 ounces).

This table simply confirms the conclusions of almost all specialists that distinguished personages show distinctly higher brain weight than the general average.

BRAIN WEIGHT AND RACIAL INTELLIGENCE

It will be noted in the last half of Tables 14 and 16 that the more advanced nations have superior brain weight.

Not being able to obtain the direct weights of the brain in sufficient numbers in the various races, we must take the cranial capacities as a general index of the weight of brain.

PREHISTORIC BRAIN WEIGHT AND CRO-MAGNON RACE

A prehistoric indication of relationship between size of brain and racial intelligence will be found in the great Cro-Magnon race, which flourished some 25,000 or more years ago.

It is generally held that the superior races eventually occupied western Europe. The Cro-Magnon race entered Europe from the

In Table 17 is given the "cube brain capacity" of various races, as will be noted from an examination of the table.

TABLE 17 .- "Cube brain capacity" (Osborne)

The Cro-Magnons, the Greeks of pre-history, rank very high; they represent a blend of long and broad heads. Their very high modern brain power is shown by their extreme accuracy of observation of animal form as noted on the walls of their cave dwellings. It was a race of warriors, hunters, painters and sculptors. Though long headed, its face is very broad for its height, a unique feature. The upper part of the face is almost vertical, as in the highest types. Keith pronounces the Cro-Magnon characters to represent one of the finest races the world has ever seen. According to Ripley this race is perhaps the most striking known. According to Ripley, this race is perhaps the most striking known instance of a persistency of population, unchanged through thousands of years. Such facts appear to indicate, that the human brain in the last 25,000 or more years has been growing less in

Had this Cro-Magnon race enjoyed the advantages of a written language, we might have had a prehistoric Phidias and Raphael, a Socrates and Plato, a Shakespeare and Dante. The author heard Virchow say, while holding up before his students a Cro-Magnon skull: "Would that any of us had such a skull and its brain within."

CLOSE RELATION BETWEEN CRANIAL CAPACITY AND BRAIN WEIGHT

The close relation between cranial capacity and brain weight is shown from the following table of Bolk:

TABLE 18.—Relation of brain weight to cranial capacity (Bolk)

Age	Brain weight	Cranial capacity (per cent)
30	73, 7 90, 0 90, 0	94. 0 96. 5 95. 6
60	89. 2 88. 1 85. 2 84. 1	93, 4 93, 8 90, 0 88, 4
Over 90		81. 5

After the age of 20 years the cranial vault does not increase in volume, and in woman after 16 years of age (Marchand's Handmann). This is not in accord with Bolk's table above. This, as so often happens, shows normal differences between not only individuals and groups but locations, countries, and racial antecedents. In general (Martin), based upon many authorities, the average European cranial capacity is 1,450 (87 cubic inches) for men and 1,300 (78 cubic inches) for women. Under 1,200 (72 cubic inches) capacity, Hottentots show 51 per cent; Australians, 45 per cent; Germans, 8 per cent; Chinese, 2 per cent.

Over 1,300 cubic centimeters (78 cubic inches) the Hottentots show 16 per cent; Australians, 28; Germans, 75; and Chinese, 92 per cent (Buschan).

The shape of the head may have some influence, since brachy-

The shape of the head may have some influence, since brachycephaly has greater volume in relation to its surface.

According to Scharpff and Richard, the difference between cranial capacity and brain volume is normally 10 to 16 per cent; higher figures mean atrophy and lower ones indicate a swelling.

CRANIAL CAPACITY AND SIZE OF BODY

Table 19, showing cranial capacity in relation to size of body, indicates that races of small growth have an absolute low average cranial capacity, and vice versa. Amadi has shown the same is true to a certain extent within races. But the variation between individuals is very great, from 1,100 to 1,700 cubic centimeters (66 to 102 cubic inches), which is attributed to heredity. The physiological limits are still greater, 950 and 970 cubic centimeters minima (56 to 57 cubic inches) (Adamanen), and (Trooler) maxima, 1,950 and 2,020 cubic centimeters (116 and 121 cubic inches)

TABLE 19.—Cranial capacity and size of body (Amadi)

Capacity of skull	Size of body
	Great	Medium	Small
Great Medium Small	Per cent 36 47 16	Per cent 29 54 17	Per cent 19 42 38

Among the same people the size of body and cranial capacity are proportional; but the size of body reaches its maximum much sooner than the cranial capacity, so that very great size of body may belong to somewhat small cranial capacity (Ranke).

ESTIMATING CRANIAL CAPACITY

The estimation of cranial capacity is not only of importance in itself but it is necessary for the calculation of brain weight from outside measurements of either the head or of the skull. To find out the amount of space in a skull, it appears that the same measurer, by diverse methods, can obtain close results, but for two or more measures the results are not so close and may differ from 15 to 40 cubic centimeters (1 to 2 cubic inches), which is 1 to 3 per cent of discrepancy, due to personal equation. This difficulty has led to finding of an equation for calculating the capacity of the skull from outside measurements of it, without measuring its inner space by seed, shot, sand, or water. This difficulty of anthropologists has been solved by the mathematicians who have constructed equations or formulas by which the space in a skull can be estimated almost as correctly as different anthropologists can do by the laborious method of filling the skull with seed, sand, or shot, and shaking it until every crevice is filled, before pouring the seed, etc., out of the skull in order to measure it. measure it.

When we consider not only the personal errors of various anthropologists but their different methods of measuring the skull, a mathematical formula with an error of not more than 40 cubic centimeters will serve to measure cranial capacity; especially so where the skulls are too fragile to be filled with sand or seed or shot and be shaken.

The Lee-Pearson formula is one which may serve as well as any. It is:

For males:

 $Cranial\ capacity = 0.000337 \times length \times breadth \times height\ of\ head+$ 406.01.

For females:

Cranial capacity=0.000400×length×breadth×height of head+

The prediction of cranial capacity of the living individual can be done with an average error of 3 to 4 per cent, and the prediction of the cranial capacity of a race, without the use of sand, seed or shot, can be done to a degree of accuracy comparable with that of the direct method, owing to the personal equation of the measures even when using the same method of direct determina-

ESTIMATING WEIGHT OF BRAIN FROM HEAD MEASUREMENTS ON THE LIVING

The ratio that brain weight bears to the outside measurements of the head in case of death from accident, or from acute diseases, or in death from wasting disease, shows that the diminution of brain weight in wasting disease even, though measurable, is small (Gladstone). In other words, the brain weight appears in general to be little affected by body disease or other conditions. The estimation of brain weight from outside measurements of the head on the living is only affected by the thickness of the scalp and hair. After middle age the hair and scalp become thinner with age; also the weight of the brain lessens, so that the proportion between the outside measurements of the head and brain is not materially affected by age. The ratio that brain weight bears to the outside measurements affected by age.

Attempts to estimate the brain weight of the living in connection with cranial capacity are relatively recent. The difficulties are numerous. In a normal skull of 1,400 cubic centimeters (84 cubic inches) capacity there is about 100 cubic centimeters (6 cubic inches) of free space (see Table 4) without the brain, which probably increases after the age of 60, or possibly before

The estimating of brain weight upon the living by means of equations is in its beginning, and doubtless there will eventually be a large number of equations, or formulas, each adapted to different races, and in the same race to different classes of different races, and in the same race to different classes of individuals or groups.

Blakeman and Pearson have worked out numerous formulas to estimate brain weight upon the living, which are called "prediction formulæ." One of their main formulas for males is:

1. W (brain weight) = 1,987 P + 3,644 U - 1,1910 A + 1,7508 S + 36.8559, where P is product of head length, breadth, and height; U is head circumference; A, age; and S, stature. In this equation the probable error of prediction is 48.5 grams (1.7 ounces) and error of mean 57.4 grams (2 ounces).

Another formula is:

2. Male brain weight = 0.2519 P+374.7628

2. Male brain weight=0.2519 P+374.7628.

The probable error of prediction is 49.9 grams (1.7 ounces) and error of mean 59 grams (2.7 ounces).
